Iraq detains American dependents

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Fifty-two of 55 dependents of U.S. Embassy personnel from Kuwait crossed from Iraq into Turkey late Sunday, but three males were detained by Iraqi border authorities, the State Department said.

A spokeswoman for the Kuwait task force at State Department headquarters said, "The convoy of Kuwait embassy dependents crossed the border from Iraq into Turkey about 2 a.m. Iraqi time (5 p.m. CDT.). Fifty-two of the group of 55 who earlier had permission to cross were allowed to leave.

"Three young men in the group, male dependents of Kuwait embassy diplomats, were not allowed by Iraqi officials to transit the border and are in the company of an American Embassy Bagdad escort officer.

"The 52 were met by a party from the American Embassy in Ankara. They will rest tonight in Turkey and plans are being made for their en route journey home."

The spokeswoman, who declined to allow her name to be used, said she had no information on the ages of the three males held back, nor on what would happen to them. State Department officials previously have described all 55 of the dependents as "women and children."

She likewise had no details on the whereabouts of the 52 allowed to cross other than that they were in safe hands and had been moved some distance away from the border in buses to spend the rest of the night.

The announcement from the State Department came a few hours after an ABC News report that a bus carrying the Americans had been turned back at the border, leaving U.S. officials waiting in Turkey uncertain for a time as to what was happening.

In a telephone interview with the Associated Press from Diyarbakir, Turkey, David Kostelancik, vice consul of the U.S. Embassy in Ankara, Turkey, said the 52 dependents "were received by the American consul from Adana, Mr. Harry Cole, and at a later time transportation was arranged for them from the border to Dyarbakir."

"They were all very, very tired but they were all very enthusiastic. very happy to be in Turkey," said Kostelancik. "They will be transported sometime today (Monday) to the Interlik air base near Adana, where they will remain and they will probably leave sometime tomorrow (Tuesday) for the United States." The crossing occurred, as previously planned, at Habur.

Meanwhile, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft said Sunday that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, faced with increasing global opposition to his conquest of Kuwait, is now intent on seeking a way out of the situation he is in.

Scowcroft and a variety of other experts interviewed Sunday all indicated there was room for hope that the 24-day-old Persian Gulf crisis could be resolved short of military conflict.

"I can see a peaceful way out of it," Scowcroft said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" program. "Saddam Hussein must now see he's facing overwhelming world opinion."

"He is casting about for a way out of the box in which he finds himself," Scowcroft said.

The pressure on Saddam appeared to increase dramatically Saturday when the U.N. Security Council gave the United States and other nations the right to use military power in enforcing the economic embargo against Iraq.

Scowcroft said Saddam has shown himself in the past to be a realist, citing his willingness two weeks ago to bow to Iran's terms for a settlement of their eight-year war. Among other concessions, Saddam agreed to recognize the prewar boundary of the two countries.

Meanwhile, State Department press officer Anita Stockman said Sunday the U.S. Embassy in Iraqi-occupied Kuwait has been informed that two additional Americans have been taken into custody by Iraqi troops.

She said the information was relayed to the embassy by telephone. Although officials had no way of confirming the information, she said embassy personnel had reason to believe it was accurate. She had no additional details about those arrested.

Assistant Secretary of State for Near East and South Asian Affairs John Kelly said little had changed at the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait City, which, along with a number of other Western diplomatic missions, was being surrounded by Iraqi troops.

Appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program, Kelly said the embassy is hampered in its efforts to help the estimated 2,500 Americans whom Iraq is refusing permission to leave the country. He said less than 10 have been picked up by Iraqi troops. Another 50 are in Iraqi troop custody in Baghdad, he said.

Iraq cut off electricity at the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait on Saturday and the power remained off Sunday. The embassy was using a power generator.

Iraqi troops were preventing anyone from entering or leaving the embassy but Kelly said the reduced staff there probably had a couple of weeks worth of supplies remaining.

At the Pentagon, the Army on Sunday ordered 50 more Army reserve and National Guard units in 25 states to report for active duty by Aug. 31. The Defense Department also said elements of the Army's 13th Support Command at Fort Hood, Texas, had begun to deploy to the Middle East.

The impetus for a diplomatic solution appeared to increase when Iraqi Ambassador Mohamed al-Mashat said his government would welcome a mediation effort by U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Perez de Cuellar said Saturday he was seeking an urgent meeting this week with Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz in either New York or Geneva. After his television appearance, Scowcroft said the administration "would have no problem" with a mediation by Perez de Cuellar.

He added that highest U.S. priority was inducing Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait. After that, he said, "We're prepared to talk about anything."

Scowcroft was interviewed in Kennebunkport, Maine, where he was staying with the vacationing President Bush. The president, who played golf and tennis and received a briefing from Scowcroft, continued to refuse to answer reporters' questions about the gulf situation.

Bush was to return to Washington on Tuesday to brief congressional leaders on the gulf crisis.

Al-Mashat, appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" program, contrasted Iraq's "desire for peace" with the American "design to have war." He said America's aggressive intentions were clearly demonstrated by the dispatch of offensive weaponry, including stealth bombers, to Saudi Arabia.

The notion that the United States and Iraq were moving inevitably toward war was disputed on ABC by Henry A. Kissinger and Zbigniew Brzezinski, both former national security advisers.

"I believe that Saddam Hussein is looking for some way out," Kissinger said. "If we stay firm ... we will get it."

The undersecretary of state for political affairs, Robert Kimmitt, said on CBS that Saddam's hand sooner or later will be forced by the economic sanctions approved by the U.N. Security Council.

Student reservists await call to duty

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Many K-State students are being affected by the crisis in the Middle East.

Last week, President Bush ordered the mobilization of reserve units that could result in calling as many as 40,000 reservists to active duty.

Several students may be activated, and many more could see their family or friends called into action.

"According to the War Powers Act," said Lt. Tim Baggerly, K-State graduate and Air Force reservist on inactive status, "the President can activate up to 200,000 reservists for up to 90 days and can extend it for another 90 days without Congressional approval and without declaring war. I think a lot more of our men will be sent over there (to Saudi Arabia) before this is all over."

As a result, reservists across the United States are preparing themselves for possible recall to active duty. They've turned over their power of attorney, examined and updated their life insurance policies and made sure their reserve centers know where to notify them at all times.

University officials said they will make provisions for students who might be called to active duty.

"KSU will provide reservists or members of the National Guard called to active duty because of the crisis with the option of re-

Reorganization set for 1990-91

Wefald, Coffman hope changes will release $5 million

SHAPING THE FUTURE

Cuts in state funding for higher education have sped plans that could begin merging or eliminating departments and faculty positions at K-State within a year.

President Jon Wefald said the loss of full funding for the third year of the Margin of Excellence and enrollment adjustment monies have increased the urgency of instituting internal re-allocation measures.

University officials said they are hoping to free up to $5 million a year through a university-wide reorganization plan included in the University's Strategic Plan. Under this plan, money saved by merging or eliminating designated weaker programs would be redistributed to stronger programs.

Provost James Coffman said many departments cannot sustain creditable programs within existing operating budgets.

"So what do you do? Do you let everyone bleed to death or do you become more definitive in your approach and begin to look at the fact that some programs are going to have to undergo some reductions or elimination and others be strengthened?" Coffman said.

Wefald, Coffman and other University administrators will meet with Faculty Senate in an open forum Sept. 11 to introduce the Strategic Plan's reorganization process. Wefald said he hopes that by working with faculty leadership, a plan acceptable to both the administration and faculty can be designed in 30-60 days. The plan could be implemented within a year.

Wefald and Coffman stressed that tenured faculty positions will not be in jeopardy, and that any student currently in an existing program would be allowed to graduate in that program.

About 500 of K-State's 1,250 faculty members are not tenured.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president, said there would be no mass firings.

"This is not McDonnell Douglas, where 12,000 people are given their pink slips on a Friday afternoon and told to go find another job," Reagan said.

The Strategic Plan targets the colleges of Agriculture, Engineering and Veterinary Medicine as high priority candidates for receiving internal reallocations.

Wefald emphasized the importance of maintaining the quality of the College of Arts and Sciences, however.

"If there is one college in this University that makes K-State a university, it is the College of Arts and Sciences," he said. "If you delete the College of Arts and Sciences from K-State, we are a technical-vocational institute. It is a pillar and mainstay of K-State."

Wayne Nafziger, president of Faculty Senate, said he recognizes that the motivation for reorganization is to enhance the University faculty's competitiveness and efficacy.

Nafziger said restructuring will make faculty salaries more competitive, maintain a quality faculty and ensure quality instruction.

Closed classes and staffing problems from last semester were only short-term effects of state cutbacks, Nafziger said. A long-term reorganization plan, running 5-10 years into the future, would give the University the fundamental changes needed to keep the University competitive.

According to an Aug. 17 letter from Nafziger to Coffman, under the reorganization plan, Faculty Senate assumes no tenured faculty will be released, and the administration and support services will be also be subject to cost-effective reorganization and reduction.

Budget cuts speed up University reorganization planning process

By Steve Franzen
Campus Editor

Legislative budget cuts in the past year for K-State have forced the University to reorganize and have sent a clear message to administrators.

"What the budget cuts did was crystalize our realization that the base resources really weren't there," said Provost James Coffman.

Coffman said the administration has moved up reorganization plans because of two messages the 1990 Legislature sent when it cut K-State funds.

First, the state does not want to think in terms of funding growth at the University. Second, K-State will not be able to make any major budget increases in the immediate future. These messages were crystal clear, he said.

"And when you project for fiscal years 1992 and 1993, things don't brighten up very much," Coffman said.

With this outlook, the University will ask the Faculty Senate to help devise a reorganization plan that will merge and/or eliminate some programs at K-State. A reorganization plan could free up from $2 million to $5 million annually, President Jon Wefald said.

"These cuts transformed reorganization from a good idea to be addressed over several years to a necessity that needs to be addressed in a short period of time," he said.

Coffman said that although the cuts were not the sole factor in the initiating the plan now rather than in 3-to-5 years, they were a large factor.

The cuts cost K-State at least $4.5 million from the base budget for fiscal year 1991. The 1990 Legislature passed a 1.75 percent across-the-board recession which cost the University $1.9 million. Legislators also decided not to give K-State the $2.1 million for enrollment adjustment it had expected. K-State also lost $1.1 million for a increase in shrinkage and $560,000 for a continued shrinkage increase.

These figures do not include the $3 million lost when the Legislature decided against funding the third year of the Margin of Excellence.

"Funding state agencies in general, and higher education specifically, over the next few years does not hold a lot of promise for solving budget problems," Coffman said.

Coffman said that full funding of all programs last year would not have solved the University's budget problems, but rather would have alleviated them temporarily.

"When you really analyze the fiscal situation of the institution of the state, common sense tells you we can't sustain the credible level of quality in all these programs," he said.

Coffman said his analysis of he fiscal situation sees K-State 20 percent below peer institutions in terms of total budget, which translates into $28 million per year.

K-State receives about $140 million in state funds a year, more than half of its $240 million budget.

Tourist trip ends in tragedy

NANTOU, Taiwan (AP) — Rescuers on Sunday pulled more bodies from a lake where an overloaded tourist boat overturned during a moon-gazing cruise a night earlier. At least 21 people drowned and 34 were missing and feared dead, police said.

Shell Taiwan Ltd., which chartered the boat for a weekend tour, said in a statement that 88 people were on board, including three British executives and 82 other company staffers and family members.

About 200 rescuers, including divers, searched the picturesque Sun Moon Lake in one of Taiwan's most popular tourist districts for survivors through Saturday night and Sunday, police said. No Americans were known to be aboard.

"We are extremely distressed by this great tragedy," said Jonathan Crossman, a survivor of the accident and president of Shell Taiwan Ltd., a subsidiary of the British company.

Crossman and his 7-year-old daughter, Nicola, were rescued by boats that rushed to the scene, but his wife Julia, 40, and son Robert, 6, were missing, said Shell official Tseng Tung-shin.

Rescuers said a baby was among a handful of people rescued from a cabin with windows that were fixed shut and could not be opened.

Government blamed in deaths

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Rival tribal chiefs blamed the white-led government Sunday for the black factional fighting around Johannesburg that has claimed more than 500 lives in the past two weeks.

Most of the fighting has involved Zulus loyal to the conservative Inkatha movement against Xhosas and other blacks who support the African National Congress.

A delegation of Zulu and Xhosa chiefs toured troubled townships Sunday and pleaded for an end to the fighting.

The delegation, which included seven Xhosa and six Zulu chiefs, said it did not represent any political party. But the chiefs all belong to the Congress of Traditional Leaders of South Africa, a group with close ties to the ANC.

Wichita teen-ager killed

WICHITA (AP) — An argument and shooting early Sunday killed a teen-age gang member and wounded a 15-year-old boy, police said.

Manuel Young, 18, of Wichita, was pronounced dead at a hospital following the shooting at 2 a.m. in a parking lot near two nightclubs, Capt. Jack Leon said.

"They met, words were exchanged, and then shots were fired," Leon said.

No arrests have been made in the shooting as of Sunday evening. But a handful of spectators were arrested from an estimated crowd of 400 people who impeded police and medical teams from getting to the victim, Leon said.

Leon said the crowd gathered at the scene just after closing time at the nightclubs. Police used Mace to disperse the onlookers.

Leon said a 15-year-old boy had minor injuries from a gunshot wound.

Young was a member of a local street gang, Leon said, although he did not know which one, or whether his killer also was a gang member.

Iowa man charged in death

OSCEOLA, Iowa (AP) — A southeast Iowa man has been arrested and charged in the murder of Timothy Petersen, a traveling singer and evangelist found beaten to death in an Osceola motel room Aug. 18.

Authorities said Robert Eugene Benn, 35, of Batavia, was arrested Saturday afternoon in Ottumwa on a charge of first-degree murder. He is being held in the Clarke County jail in Osceola on $200,000 bond, Osceola Police Chief Steve Niebur said in a statement issued Sunday.

Authorities had earlier said Petersen's body was found in a motel room that had been used by a man who gave the motel clerk a fake name and license plate number.

Petersen, 41, of Hiawatha, Kan., was killed after performing on the night of Aug. 17 at Faith United Methodist Church in Russell, which is near Osceola, in south-central Iowa.

Right to Life backs Souter

TOPEKA (AP) — Supreme Court nominee David Souter may be willing to further weaken the 1973 decision that legalized abortion, the head of the nation's largest anti-abortion group said.

Dr. John Willke, president of the National Right to Life Committee, spoke at the annual statewide convention of Kansans for Life on Saturday.

President Bush has nominated Souter, a little-known federal appeals court judge from New Hampshire, to the nation's highest court.

A recent study by an umbrella group of conservative organizations concluded Souter's record showed no position on abortion.

However, Souter received the endorsement of the Coalitions for America because it said he appears to be the type of judge who does not try to create legislation from the bench.

Willke supported the group's assessment of Souter, saying "We trust President Bush."

Dunn to be department head

The department of anatomy and physiology opens the school year with some new out-of-state leadership.

Jon Dunn became the head of the department in the College of Veterinary Medicine Aug. 1.

"Dr. Dunn is someone who has demonstrated leadership in the past. He is an anatomist and has a strong teaching record," said Michael Lorenz, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Dunn came to K-State from Oral Roberts University School of Medicine, where he was a professor and the chairman of the department of anatomy.

"I am very excited about being here," he said. "The College of Veterinary Medicine is a great college with a very high quality of education," Dunn said.

That quality drew Dunn to K-State.

"I was very impressed with and attracted to Kansas State University. It's an excellent educational facility," he said.

Lorenz said five persons applied for the position. One of the applicants was from Kansas, and the rest were from institutions outside the state.

"We were also looking for someone who had established a research track record," he said.

Dunn replaces Dr. Frey Russell who resigned as the department head in January of 1989.

Gas prices rise with crisis, drop as state investigates

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

What goes up must come down.

Gas prices in Manhattan increased to about $1.45 per gallon Tuesday before dropping to $1.35 per gallon Thursday in the wake of an investigation by the Kansas Attorney General's office.

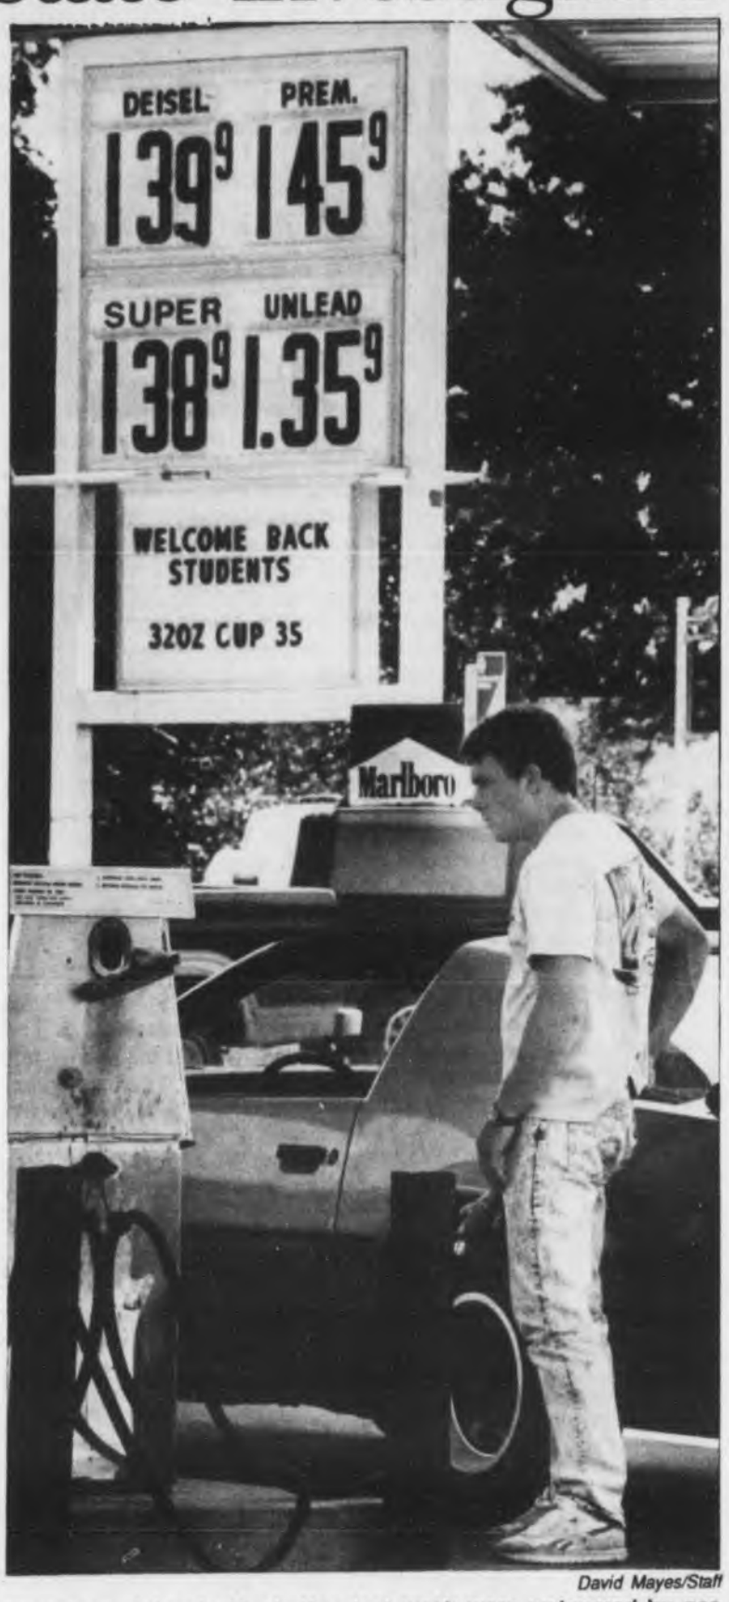
Consumers rushed to area gas stations Tuesday to fill their tanks before the price of unleaded went up.

The increase makes Manhattan one of the most expensive places in the area to buy gas, according to Attorney General Bob Stephan's office.

Before the increase, prices hovered at about $1.23 to $1.25 per gallon. Most station owners in Manhattan said they had no warning, and some stations sold all their gas or did not have enough employees to handle the extra customers.

"We were swamped," said Frank Nelson, manager of Frank's 66 Service Station. "We got so busy we didn't have enough people working to handle it."

Frank's 66 was one of the last stations in town to raise its prices.



The cheapest gas Wednesday was at University Amoco. Robert Reece, station attendant, said unleaded was available for $1.39, and there could be additional increases over the weekend.

"It's just a phone call, and you never know when it's going to happen," Reece said.

Shop Quik stores in Manhattan were selling gas for $1.47 per gallon, up 24 cents from their previous price. Mick Wunder, operations manager, said there had been two large increases since the weekend of Aug. 20 due to an increase in the price of wholesale gas.

"We have been seeing increases as much as two times in a day," he said. "We have to buy the gas also, so we don't like this any more than the con-

Gasoline prices as high as $1.45 per gallon for self-serve unleaded in Manhattan led to an investigation by the Kansas Attorney General's office and the issuing of 15 subpoenas to Manhattan service stations.

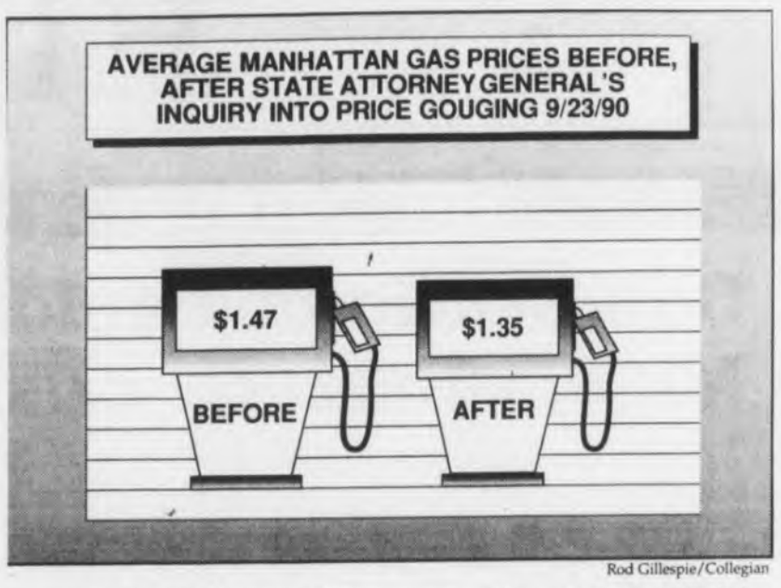
Mary Horsch, press secretary for Attorney General Bob Stephan, said a consumer protection agent and the assistant Attorney General were in Manhattan Thursday investigating gasoline prices, which are among the highest in northeast Kansas.

"We received a lot of phone calls from people that were mad and thought the current prices were too much of an increase," she said. "The Attorney General is looking at it under the consumer protection act to see if there is any price gouging."

Stations with subpoenas issued to them were given five days to provide information justifying their prices. They must supply statistics on how much it costs to purchase gasoline and how much it costs to run the station.

Horsch said a lot of gasoline price increases are not the retailer's fault. But, if it is, it needs to be investigated.

"We are just trying to determine why Manhattan is so much higher than everywhere else," Horsch said.



She said the answer to the increases is not easy because there is also an investigation going on at the federal level. That investigation is looking into the prices of crude oil and wholesale gas.

Gas prices dropped to about $1.35 per gallon on Thursday while the investigation was being conducted. Bud Crabtree, president of Griffith Oil Co. Inc., said the decrease was not prompted by the Attorney General's investigation and actually occurred before the subpoenas were issued.

"That's mostly all newspaper talk," Crabtree said in reference to pump prices being controlled by wholesale prices and the issuing of the subpoenas. He said the subpoenas were issued at random and did not single out any specific stations.

He also questioned whether or not Manhattan did indeed have some of the highest prices in the state.

"I've heard of prices in western Kansas near or higher than what we have here," he said. "I would say the location of Manhattan and the price of wholesale gas has nothing to do with it because prices are strictly regulated by competition."

Fuel prices hurt services

Middle East crisis forces departments to conserve gas

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein may be the one who will decide if some of K-State's approved projects will procede as scheduled.

Some K-State departments have already seen an effect on their budgets and services because of higher fuel prices, and K-State officials agree that sustained price increases will affect others.

Norman Root, facilities procurement officer, said his department maintains storage facilities for fuel to sell to other departments on campus. Competitive bids from local wholesalers to fill these facilities have increased more than 30 cents per gallon since the start of the crisis in the Middle East, he said.

Jack Watson, assistant director of facilities maintenance, said he has been forced to start conservation measures on the 50 vehicles in his department. Those measures include staff walking, doubling up in vehicles and shuttling crews and equipment to different job sites, he said. Watson said these measures will increase the time his department needs for its projects.

Because the unexpected fuel-price increases came after the department's budget was approved in July, Watson said money will not be available for some of this year's approved projects.

"When you're out of money, you're out of money," Watson said.

In contrast, Tom Lee, grounds maintenance manager, said the grounds department has been not been affected by the price increases. He said, however, sustained higher prices would be felt in the future.

Laurence Blake, power plant and utility manager, said the K-State Power Plant can burn either number-six fuel oil or natural gas. This allows the University to take advantage of bargains between the fuels, he said.

Although there has not been a price increase in either fuel yet, Blake said their prices are tied to the price of oil, and the plant's energy cost could double if oil prices stay high or increase.

If energy prices consume more of the budget, he said, other University utilities, such as garbage collection, will be forced to cut back.

Blake said conservation measures for the plant are being considered.

"We try to be prepared so we can react to what is going on," Blake said. "Many of us have been through this in the '70s."

He said that in one year during the 1970s the start of the spring semester

Gas stations exploit Middle-Eastern crisis

Thursday Attorney General Bob Stephan launched an investigation into gas prices in Manhattan after prices shot to as high as $1.55 per gallon of unleaded at some stations.

It's about time.

For years Manhattan merchants have priced gas according to the number of students in the Manhattan area. A direct correlation has developed between the return of the students in the fall and a marked increase at the gas pump.

This year was no different, but this time merchants cried, "Crisis in the Middle East." Yet gas prices in Topeka and other cities across the state remained 15 to 30 cents cheaper than in Manhattan.

Thousands of students returned to the University on Tuesday — only to find that gas prices had skyrocketed.

What a way to say "Welcome to Manhattan."

Students are a vital part of the community and its economy. Residents and students alike are hurt by greed exhibited at the pump.

Within hours of Stephan's announcement, several Manhattan merchants dropped their gas prices by 10 cents a gallon. But some station owners claim they are not worried, saying Stephan can't interfere with free enterprise.

If this is free enterprise, then something needs to be done. It's time the Manhattan community takes action.

Ride your bike to school or join a carpool at work. It will save money, protect the environment and make a statement to the station owners.

Boycotting the gas pumps is the best way to object to the outrageous prices. When you do need to buy gas, avoid the high-priced Manhattan stations.

Prices in Ogden remain 7 cents cheaper than most Manhattan stations. Take the initiative and drive the six miles to Ogden or another town and buy the less-expensive gas. Boycott those Manhattan stations that are exploiting area residents.

The gas used traveling to and from Ogden would be minimal and station owners couldn't ignore the statement.

Reorganization should include student voice

Top University officials have been laying the groundwork for a major reorganization of K-State since 1986, but they seem to have forgotten one thing: student participation.

With discussions on that reorganization to begin in earnest this year, the time has come for the administration to expand student participation beyond the few students who have been involved so far.

While President Wefald and Provost Coffman may be commended for accepting the realities which affect Kansas public higher education, they should begin arranging forums for students to offer their views on the changes which may be wrought at the University.

The interests of the faculty will be protected by Faculty Senate and certainly the administration can take care of itself, but who will be there to represent the students?

One or two members of Student Senate won't cut it. Most Senate members are not representative of the student body.

The state universities were created first to serve the citizens of Kansas seeking an education. As plans are prepared during the fall semester which may change the nature of K-State, pains must be taken to see that those people the University is here to serve are included.

Commitments not easy

Kevin Zwink

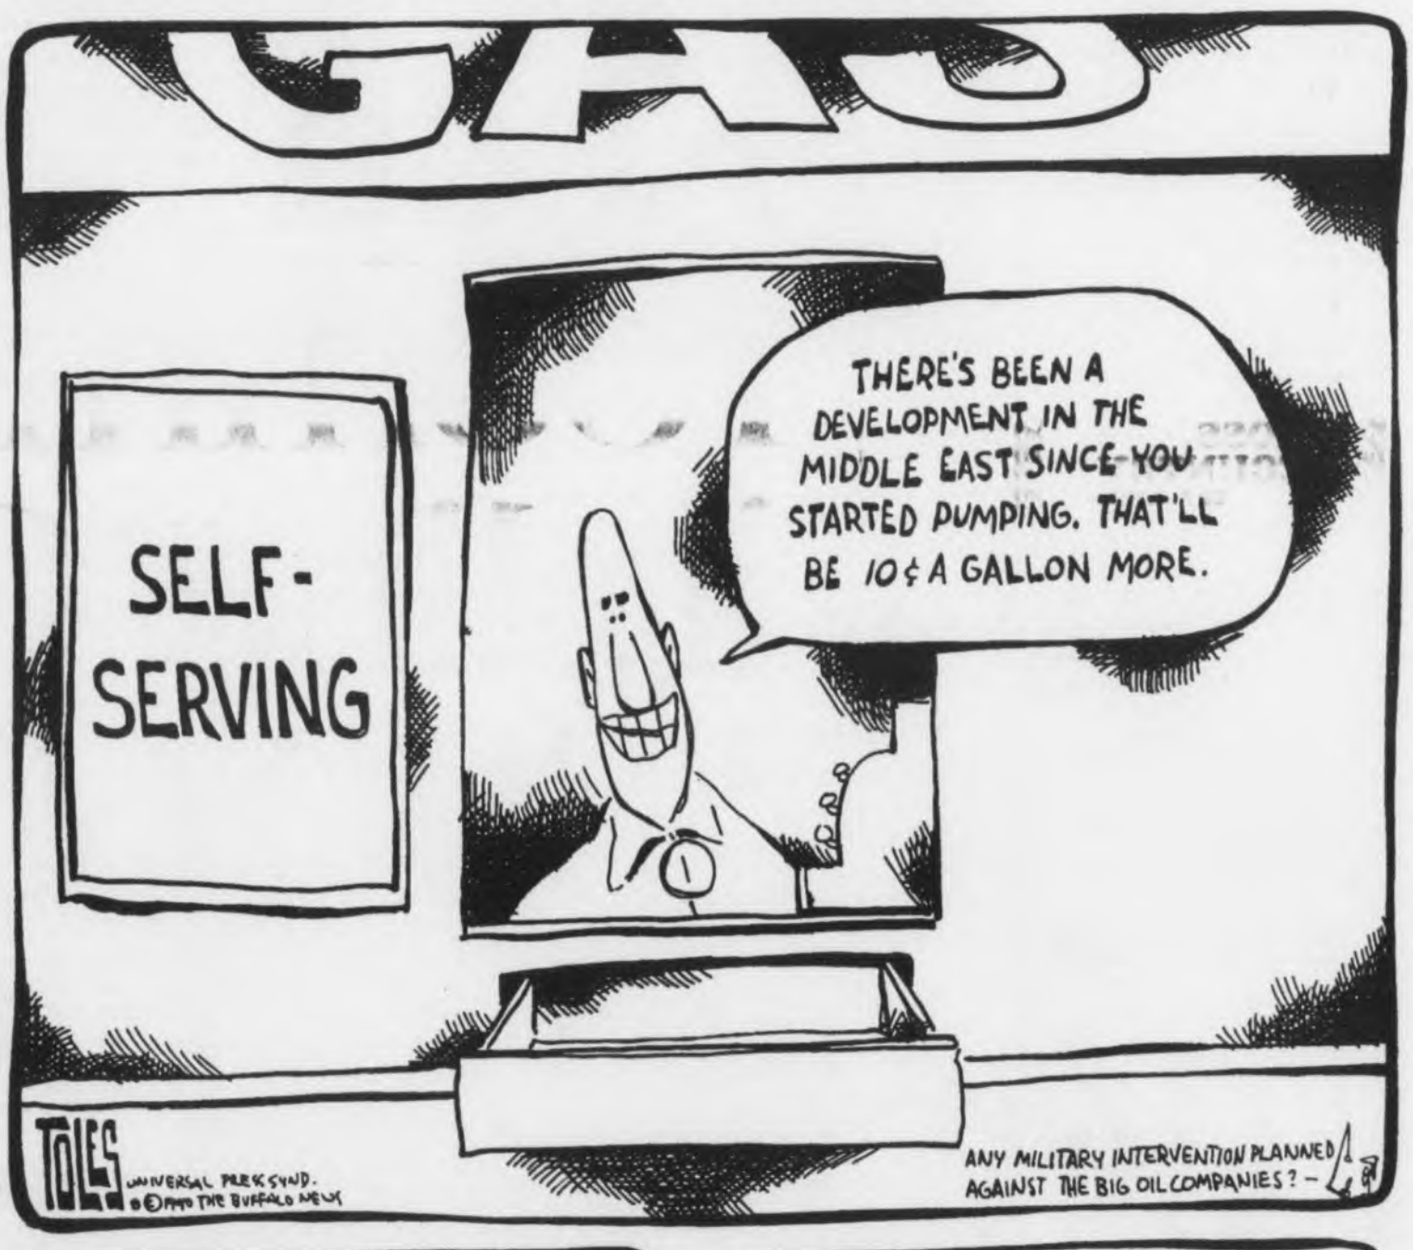
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

As a young person trying to shape an individuality of my own, one that will make me feel worth and significance, the most intriguing motivation I experience is the embracement of commitment. It seems very obvious that commitments in anyone's life can be challenging, exciting and fulfilling. Yet the awareness of the value commitment has toward one's own self-realization doesn't necessarily always make the choice of commitment simple.

The knowledge of the endless possibilities, the numerous choices and the various forms commitments can take will sometimes have a freezing effect. It is the incessant moments of choice, the continual decision of becoming committed, staying committed or changing commitments that can cause the immobilization of a person's life. This is precisely the state I constantly find myself in, a state of non-movement. Scared to make any serious choices, afraid of what any of life's commitments might entail, not unlike many, I end up in a mode of perpetual deliberation. I remain undecided but the ship keeps on moving.

I have made small movements and have developed convictions and affirmations, but all very sporadically, almost as if by chance and not choice. None of them involve anything lifelong. I falter on commitment when it begins to involve the rest of my life. Lifelong commitments escape my comprehension, so this is exactly the area of shaping my own individualism I need to come to terms with.

In hope of finding some answers I, naturally (my mistake), begin by observing other people and their commitments. Not many of their commitments make sense to me. I know it is because their commitments are out of my experience and thus beyond my understanding.



The word commitment has a way of bringing to mind romantic relationships. Commitment manifests itself most obviously in relationships between people. Working relationships, family relationships, friendships, peer relationships and, the most puzzling of all, spiritual relationships. The grass is always greener on the other side. I see people seemingly happy in their commitments, sure of themselves and the choices they make, and dedicated to their life choices. I don't understand many of their decisions.

I see people committed to different types of work and ask myself why. Why did they choose that? I see families loyally committed to each other and others that share little unity. I see mutually enhancing friendships and shallow, feeble friendships. I see peer concern and peer uninterest. This leaves romantic relationships and spiritual relationships.

I've walked down the street past the pink house with the white picket fence, a married couple with kids, cooking out, all playing, all smiling, and I wonder why those commitments? Why those choices? Are they aware of what they're missing? Some of them must be. What eludes me the most are people who are ethically committed, people of the cloth. A commitment like that, especially from my aesthetic point of view, looms over me as the least appealing choice I observe. To be honest, it would be the most frightening and freezing choice I think a person could make. It's not that I have aversions to these lifestyles — well, maybe I do — it's just that I don't comprehend them. I've come to realize why I don't understand them — they're not mine. What is mine?

The state of neutrality. Perpetual deliberation. Continual indecision. No choices. The ship keeps on moving. I get vertigo from the thought of having to commit myself to something in this life. Deliberating is safe. Neutrality is risk free. But in the mirror I see a person concerned with developing his own individualism, a person who deliberates and deliberates and ends up being no one. No choices, no beliefs, no convictions, no stances, no one.

What have I learned? Commitments scare the hell out of me. I have two options, make little movement in life or make as much as humanly possible. Commitments are difficult, but if I don't commit to something, I am going to die of old age and "no-one-ness." Everyone's commitments are different, everyone has regrets, everyone deliberates a little. If I'm honest, I say that no matter what choice I make I may have regrets. The commitments I will make reflect the kind of person I am. No one ever said it was going to be simple or easy. My choices shape my individuality so now all I have to do is decide. Well ... today I'll deliberate, tommorrow I'll decide.

Special provisions made for Iraqi, Kuwati students at University during crisis

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

Special provisions are being made for Arab students whose countries are being affected by the current crisis in the Middle East.

Some students from Kuwait and Iraq may have trouble returning to the United States or paying fees because of a freeze on Iraqi and Kuwaiti assets.

"K-State will defer fee payment until the end of the fall semester for students whose source of income is situated in Kuwait or Iraq," said Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center.

The governments of Kuwait and Iraq are currently working with the U.S. Treasury to make arrangements to support the students studying here, Davis said.

"There is no way of knowing how long it might be before funds are released to the students," she said. "We just have to follow the situation day by day."

The National Association for Foreign Student Affairs has been providing the center with information as it occurs.

Those students who live in residence halls and are having trouble returning to the United States from their countries will be given special consideration and will not be charged for their room during the time they are not there, said Bob Burgess, assistant director of housing and dining services.

"Typically our procedure is to call the people who have not yet arrived and find out whether they will be coming or not," Burgess said.

"There are three alternatives for the students in a situation like this," he said. "We can hold the room until the student is able to return; the housing contract can be transferred for spring semester, or we can refund the contract if the student is unable to return."

"Because of the special circumstances, the students will not be charged for the time they did not utilize our services," he said.

There is one Kuwaiti student who lives in Marlatt Hall that has not yet returned after going home for the summer. Marlatt director David Yoder said holding his room will not be a problem because the hall is not filled.

"There are over 100 vacancies in Marlatt," Yoder said. "His room will be available when he returns."

The student's room will automaticallty be held because, with the current conditions in Kuwait, it is almost impossible to call the country.

Marlatt resident Mustafa Ibrahim, senior in civil engineering, returned from Kuwait last week. He said the situation was tense, but had little trouble leaving the country.

Ibrahim used his passport, which he obtained through Jordan to leave Kuwait. He took a plane from Jordan to return to the United States.

Saudi students had a much easier time returning from their country in spite of the growing military presence in the country.

Uzma Quraishi, senior in community health and nutrition, left Saudi Arabia on July 6. She and her family stayed in Bangladesh to avoid the risk of being stuck within the country in the case of increasing tensions.

Quraishi said she went to Saudi Arabia to visit her family. Her father is a professor in civil engineering there.

"Life was going pretty normal." she said. "We just didn't want to take any chances." She said her family plans to return to Saudi Arabia on August 31.

Marc Anthony, sophomore in computer science, left Saudi Arabia on August 20 to return to K-State. Anthony is originally from Pakistan and was living in Saudi Arabia where

Military mobilization largest since Vietnam

Equipment, troops ready for desert, untried in combat

By Scott Berg
Science Reporter

The recent mobilization of troops to deter Iraqis from invading Saudi Arabia was the largest airlift since the Vietnam War. At one point, a transport plane was landing every 10 minutes.

The military equipment and soldiers being sent to the Persian Gulf is the best the U.S. has to offer, said Sgt. First Class Bruce Marvin, military science instructor.

Even though the soldiers are trained in desert warfare, few have actually fought in one. Most of the soldiers being sent have not been in a hostile environment, and those who have were not in the severe desert climate of the Middle East.

The average age of a soldier is 19, Marvin said.

"The soldiers that I trained in the past had a professional attitude and learned hard. I have no doubt that the people over there are of the same caliber," he said.

Chemical protection suits used by the armed forces are made of rubber, the only clothing substance that will keep nerve gas away from the skin. The outfits are normally hot to wear and hinder the wearer's mobility.

The rubberized chemical protection suits used by the Army in Saudi Arabia can handle anything the Iraqis are capable of using whether it's mustard gas or nerve agents, Marvin said.

"The suits slow the soldier's movement and its mask tends to tunnel his vision," he said. "They are trained to compensate and be able to do their work whether it's combat or non-combat."

The heat is the main factor with the suits, Marvin said. The soldiers have to keep an eye on each other for heat exhaustion while they're in them. Water is a necessity in the hot climate. The masks are equipped with an internal drinking hose that can be connected with a special nozzle attachment on the canteen to permit drinking in the field.

The M-1 Abrams, the Army's main battle tank, is a generation ahead of the Soviet-built T-72 tank that the Iraqi army uses, Marvin said. It has a longer range for its 105mm or 120mm main gun and can effectively fire on opponents while still being out of their weapon's range.

According to information received from Marvin and the Public Affairs Office at Fort Riley, the M-1 has a lower silhouette, and is harder to see and hit. The turret's sloped sides give the armor better chance to deflect hits.

The sighting system has laser rangefinding, digital ballistic computer, thermal imaging and improved ammunition that has improved the to-hit-accuracy of the weapons. Gun stablizing suspension makes accurate firing on the move a reality.

Agility has also been improved. The Abrams' speed acceleration and performance is better than that of the older U.S. M-60 tank. The M-1 accelerates from 0 to 20 mph in seven seconds with a top speed of 45 mph.

Bradley Fighting Vehicles, called M2s, are being used by the infantry, according to Marvin and the PAO. Main armament on the M2 is a 25mm chaingun, dual optically-guided missle launchers, and a 7.62mm machine gun.

Stabilizing the 25mm chaingun makes it possible to fire on the move against Soviet-made infantry vehicles like the Iraqis use. The twin missle launchers give the M2

Miami AP's No. 1

By The Associated Press

Miami, which ended the '80s as the nation's top college football team, is starting the '90s the same way.

The defending national champions are ranked No. 1 in the Associated Press' preseason poll. The Hurricanes beat Notre Dame by 25 points in voting by a nationwide panel of 60 sports writers and broadcasters.

"It's nice to be recognized, but it also puts a burden on you," Miami coach Dennis Erickson said. "When you're No. 1, everybody wants to play their best against you."

The Hurricanes, who have won three of the last seven national titles, received 24 first-place votes and 1,431 points. Notre Dame, which finished second last season, was runner-up again with 22 first-place votes and 1,406 points.

It is the first time Miami has been ranked No. 1 in the preseason poll, which started in 1950. Prior to this year, the Hurricanes' highest preseason ranking was No. 3 in 1986.

Miami lost six starters from last year's dominating defense, which allowed the fewest points and yards in the nation. But the Hurricanes return eight starters on offense, including Heisman hopeful Craig Erickson at quarterback.

"We have a chance to be a real good team," Erickson said. "It's going to be a challenge, though, because our schedule is a lot tougher. Last year, we won some games when we didn't play well. I don't think we'll be able to do that this year."

Certainly not on Oct. 20 when the Hurricanes play Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind. The last three seasons, the winner of that game has gone on to win the national championship.

Miami and Notre Dame both lost one game last season, but the Hurricanes finished No. 1 because they beat the Irish 27-10.

Auburn was third in the preseason poll, Florida State was No. 4 and Colorado was No. 5. Auburn received three first-place votes and 1,311 points, while Florida State — which handed Miami its only defeat last season — got six first-place votes and 1,268 points.

Colorado, which was No. 1 last season before losing to Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl, received four first-place votes and 1,258 points.

The remaining first-place vote went to Michigan State. However, only one other voter put the Spartans in the Top 10 and they wound up 23rd.

Michigan, last year's preseason No. 1, was sixth this year. Nebraska was next, followed by Tennessee, Southern California, Clemson, Illinois, Alabama, Texas A&M, Arkansas, Virginia, Brigham Young, Ohio State, Pittsburgh, UCLA and Washington.

Straw grabs hold of top QB spot

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Quarterbacks

Editor's Note: This is the first of a nine-part, position-by-position look at the Wildcat football team. Tuesday, running backs.

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Two seasons ago, K-State's Carl Straw was competing for the top spot at quarterback with Paul Watson.

Or was he?

If you listen to Straw, there was no real competition taking place in 1988. Not with Stan Parrish as head coach and Watson — a highly-touted Parrish recruit — in the fold and ready to go.

"My first year was a learning experience, and my redshirt year was tough," Straw recalled. "And then, in my sophomore year, I was No. 2 coming into the fall and ready to take the top spot, but I never really was considered the top guy.

"Not with all of the politics and everything else. But last year, Coach (Bill) Snyder came in and made it all fair."

And with Snyder's arrival in Manhattan, all bets were off and all jobs were wide open.

Straw took no time in grabbing his.

When he wasn't sidelined by injury, Straw threw for 1,095 yards in seven games and was intercepted only four times in 192 pass attempts. It was Straw who was on the field as the Wildcats made "The Drive" of 1989 — the touchdown march that beat North Texas 20-17 on the game's final play.

But regardless of the time Straw and his mates spent under center as the starter, Snyder's new offensive scheme gave Straw, Watson and Chris Cobb fits all season long.

And the learning process continues today.

"Every day is a learning day," Straw said. "I try to get one aspect of the offense down every day and use it as a building block. I don't think I've got it all, but I'm closer than I was before."

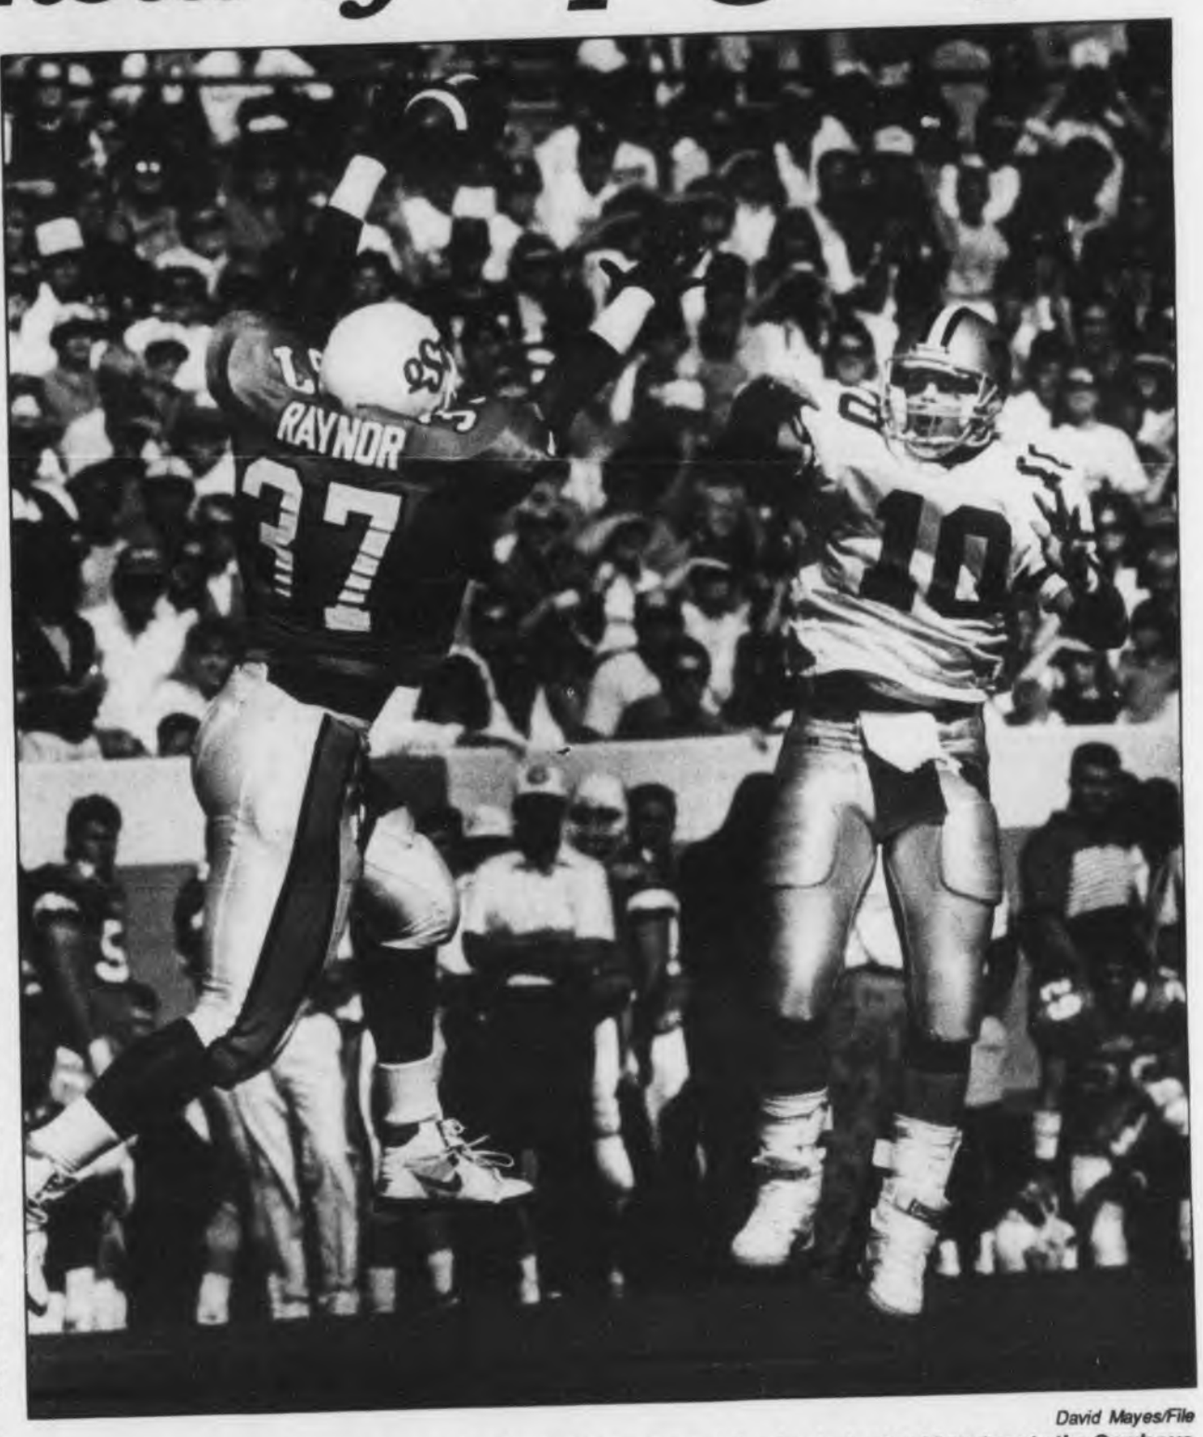
If there is a major selling point in Straw's favor in the eyes of the current staff, it's his toughness. Snyder speaks daily about the need for his team to be tougher, and Straw doesn't care if he's on his back when the play ends — just as long as its a play that has led to something positive.

"Maybe I'm tough in a way," Straw said. "If it's a tough game and the guys can look at me for leadership and feel confident, than I guess I'm tough."

Straw, the Big Eight's active leader in passing yardage and total yardage, spoke of the importance of mental toughness in his makeup.

"When you're a football player — especially a quarterback — and it's late in the game, your mind's got to be conditioned to where when you're tired, your mind is still clear," Straw said. "You've got to be able to make good decisions when the game is on the line."

Straw came through spring practice and two-a-days last week as Snyder's choice to be the one making those decisions when the season opens Sept. 8.



"It will continue to be a competitive situation, but he's the No. 1 guy right now," Snyder said of Straw.

At the Big Eight Skywriters' stop in Manhattan last Wednesday, Snyder listed Watson and redshirt freshman Jason Smargiasso as being neck-and-neck for the backup role.

Watson was seventh in the Big Eight in passing efficiency in 1989, throwing for 853 yards and two touchdowns in nine games.

Smargiasso, at 6-foot-2 and 195 pounds, is a graduate of New Wilmington, Pa., High, and is being groomed as the quarterback of the future.

That leaves Cobb, the starting K-State punter, and sophomore Matt Garber behind the top three.

David Mayes/File

Carl Straw slips a pass between the hands of an Oklahoma State defender during the 'Cats loss to the Cowboys in 1989. After last week's two-a-days, Straw has retained his hold on the No. 1 quarterback spot.

U.S. Open tennis set to begin minus old pros Connors, Evert

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The U.S. Open tennis championships, besieged by New-Age players wielding power rackets and power games, begins Monday without two crowd favorites — Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert — for the first time in two decades.

Connors, a five-time champion yielding reluctantly to age and injury, officially withdrew Sunday because of a strained left calf suffered Saturday in a match against Ivan Lendl. Connors, a week shy of his 38th birthday, hadn't missed a U.S. Open since 1970.

Evert, winner of six U.S. Opens, made an emotional departure from regular singles competition here last year.

If the Open will miss Connors' and Evert's fierce competitiveness and unique styles, it will not lack for drama, as top seeds Stefan Edberg and Steffi Graf try to hold off scrambles for their No. 1 rankings.

Edberg, who beat Boris Becker in the final of Wimbledon, likes his chance of winning the U.S. Open for the first time.

"I don't have any fear of it this year," said Edberg, a semifinalist in 1986 and 1987 but only a fourth-rounder the past two years. "It's full of terrible circumstances like bad weather, noisy fans, the planes, traffic. There is a lot to be frustrated about, and generally that makes it an open Open. You have to be strong to win it."

Edberg figures if he can't win it, the title might go to defending champion Becker, three-time winner Ivan Lendl or two-time semifinalist Andre Agassi.

Agassi, runner-up at the French Open, skipped Wimbledon to devote himself to practice and iron-pumping exercises for an assault on the U.S. Open, the tournament he considers the most important in the world.

> "You have to be strong to win (the Open)."
> —Stefan Edberg
> tennis player

Agassi, 20, is one of the New Agers building his game on power. But unless he fulfills his promise soon, he may be passed by the game's hardest young server, Goran Ivanisevic, the Yugoslavian who beat Becker in the French Open and came close to toppling him in the Wimbledon semifinals. Ivanisevic also came close to beating Edberg Sunday in the final of the Hamlet Cup Challenge at Commack, N.Y., losing 7-6, 6-3.

Ivanisevic, who will be 18 on Sept. 13, lost in the second round in his first appearance here last year. But he has vastly improved and looms as a major threat.

John McEnroe gave some hints that he could make this Open more interesting when he exhibited some of his old quickness and impressive shot-making abilities while beating Brad Gilbert on Friday at Commack. But a loss to Edberg on Saturday exposed McEnroe's inability at 31 to put together a series of good performances after long layoffs.

The power game of young players also is evident in the women's draw, with 16-year-old Monica Seles and 14-year-old Jennifer Capriati growing bigger and stronger by the day and closing the gap on Graf.

Seles said she won't wilt under the heat and pressure of playing on the stadium court, as she did last year in losing to Evert in straight sets.

Martina Navratilova, who set the power trend for women during the early 1980s, showed she's not over the hill yet by winning her ninth Wimbledon title. But whether she still has the endurance to add a fifth U.S. title remains doubtful. Navratilova, 33, is playing on knees that don't take kindly to the pounding they will receive on the hard courts at the National Tennis Center.

Bo's homer ties mark

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Bo Jackson became the 19th player to hit home runs in four consecutive at-bats when he returned from a 5½-week layoff Sunday in the Kansas City Royals' 8-2 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Jackson, activated after Saturday night's game, hit the first pitch he saw from Randy Johnson 450 feet over the left-centerfield wall for a two-run homer in the second inning. It was Jackson's 20th home run of the season.

The next inning, Jackson flied out to right. He later doubled and singled, making him 3-for-4.

Jackson had not played since July 17, when he homered his first three times up against the New York Yankees, then partially dislocated his left shoulder trying to catch Deion Sanders' sinking line drive.

In that game, Jackson hit two-run homers in the first and third innings off Andy Hawkins and hit a three-run home run off Hawkins in the fifth. Jackson hurt himself in the bottom of the fifth after the third home run, the 100th of his career.

Jackson is the first player to homer in four consecutive at-bats since Larry Herndon did it for Detroit on May 16 and May 18, 1982. Sixteen players — including Jackson — have homered four consecutive times over two games, including Ralph Kiner, who did it twice.

'Buffs, 'Vols battle to 31-31 deadlock

Offensive show thrills fans in first Pigskin Classic game

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mike Pritchard helped give No. 5 Colorado a two-touchdown lead with runs of 78 and 55 yards, but Andy Kelly's sensational passing brought No. 8 Tennessee back for a 31-31 tie in the inaugural Pigskin Classic Sunday.

The season-opening game between two teams who finished 11-1 last season was a standoff of contrasting styles.

Pritchard, a converted wide receiver who led the team with 12 catches last year, gained 215 yards on 17 carries.

The Buffaloes needed the big plays because they had five of the game's eight turnovers and Tennessee had a hot quarterback in Kelly, who passed for 368 yards, including 262 in the second half. Colorado had only 13 turnovers in the 1989 regular season, when it went 11-0 before losing to Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl.

Pritchard, who fumbled on Colorado's first play, scored on his 78-yard run with 7:11 left, giving the Buffaloes a 31-17 lead. Quarterback Darian Hagan, in trouble inside, lateralled to Pritchard, by himself on the sideline.

Then Kelly led the Tennessee rally, passing 14 yards to Carl Pickens to make it 31-24 with 4:09 left in the game. The Vols then held Colorado and regained possession on their 26 for the tying drive.

The passing of Kelly, who finished 33-for-55, got Tennessee down to the 4, and Chuck Webb scored on a draw play with 2:25 left.

Coach Johnny Majors elected to go for the tying extra point by Greg Burke rather than a two-point conversion, and the decision seemed to be a good one as Tennessee again held Colorado and got possession on their 23.

TENNESSEE VOLUNTEERS

A 13-yard run by Webb on a draw play and a penalty got the ball to the Colorado 41, but the game ended as Webb ran another 25 yards before being run out of bounds on the 16 as time expired.

Pritchard scored on his 55-yarder for a 17-10 lead 4:11 into the third quarter. He went up the middle on a trap play and out-ran cornerback Floyd Miley to the corner of the end zone.

Dave McCloughan, a cornerback who also had an interception, scored on a 55-yard punt return for a 24-10 margin with 9:34 left, running up the sideline and eluding punter Joey Chapman near the end zone.

The Volunteers needed only 41 seconds to pull to 24-17, as Kelly completed four of six passes, including a 24-yarder to Alvin Harper for the touchdown with 8:53 left.

Tennessee got the ball right back when Dwayne Davis fumbled the kickoff at the Buffaloes' 19.

But Kelly's twice-tipped pass was picked off in the end zone by Tim James. James also intercepted Kelly in the end zone when the Volunteers were threatening in the final seconds of the first half.

Colorado ended a string of seven straight losses at neutral sites dating back to 1972, including to Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 1 and in two Freedom Bowls at Anaheim Stadium.

Britt signs to play in Portugal

Trip overseas to afford forward new challenges

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

The next time Reggie Britt laces up his shoes and steps onto a basketball court, he'll be playing a whole new ballgame.

The rules will be the same, and the objective will still be to put the ball through the hoop, but Britt will find that nothing else will be quite as it has been.

The next time Britt plays basketball will be in the country of Portugal, where he will encounter foreign players, foreign languages, foreign lifestyles and foreign approaches to the game.

Making the transition from American college basketball to a foreign professional league can be very difficult for some players, K-State coach Dana Altman said.

"You can really be out there on your own," Altman said. "If you're not mentally prepared, it can be really tough," Altman said. "A lot of times you're the only American on your team, which really isolates you from the other players, especially if you have to deal with a language barrier."

Is Britt apprehensive about the adjustment to a different culture and the challenges of competing on the foreign professional level?

"To be honest, I am pretty nervous," Britt said."It hit me a couple of days ago as I was talking on the phone to the coach I'll be playing for that I'm leaving home, my friends, family and everything that I'm so used to for something that I don't know anything about. That will be difficult."

Britt learned of the opportunity to play in Portugal from Scott Woltzon, an agent from the Kansas City area, who used a highlight film of Britt's career to attract the interest of foreign teams. Woltzon also helped former Wildcats Charles Bledsoe and Fred McCoy find spots with teams abroad.

Britt said financial incentives had little to do with his decision to accept the offer to play professionally.

"Money, it's nice, but really it's just the chance to play again," Britt said. "I really didn't know if I would ever have the chance to play again, and that's what made the offer worth it."

Originally from Flint, Mich., Britt came to K-State from Coffeyville Community College, where he was named to the Jayhawk Conference Eastern Division all-star team.

In his first season as a Wildcat, Britt showed promise, starting eight games and averaging 5.5 points and 2.3 rebounds per contest and shooting 56 percent from the field. His athleticism and fiery play quickly made him a crowd favorite.

High expectations were placed upon Britt entering his senior season, which proved to be a disappointing year for him.

Many games found Britt cheering his teammates on from the Wildcat bench. He averaged just 3.6 points and 2.2 rebounds a game, and his thundering dunks, which had been his trademark, were now more a vent of frustration than a punctuation of triumph.

The disappointment of his senior year produced much of Britt's desire to get another chance on the court.

"I think everybody knows that last season was real frustrating for me," Britt said. "I think that has made me hungrier. It made me anxious to work hard and to improve my skills, to prove to people that I can play this game. It was frustrating, but I guess that goes to show that things aren't forever and that you can get another chance."

Altman said foreign leagues, which he compared to the level of competition in the NCAA Division I, offer opportunities to many players who aren't able to make NBA teams, particularly bigger players, because many foreign leagues limit teams to one or two players from the United States.

"It's a great educational opportunity and a great experience for kids to see the world and to learn a lot about life and about themselves," Altman said.

The success of American players in foreign leagues depends greatly upon the individual, Altman said. The approach to professional basketball is very different in other countries and a lot depends on each player's ability to handle life off the court, he said.

Britt acknowledges the challenges that lie ahead, but is prepared to make the most of the experience.

"So many things can happen, and there's so much that I'm unsure of, but if nothing else it will be a great learning experience," he said. "Without basketball I'd never have the chance to see Europe. I'll get to see another way of life and another culture."

As many things are uncertain on the court as off for Britt. He said he doesn't know what to expect from the competition and style of play in Portugal, but he knows the foreign leagues are fast-paced and physical, and he hopes the level of play is high because it will make him a better player.

"I talked to Charlie Bledsoe and he said it's real rough, real 'no blood, no foul' and that the games are real wide open," Britt said. "I'll have to hit the weights and get stronger and be tough on the floor.

"But it's all the same game and it's a chance to play," he said, his face brightening at the thought, "and I can't wait to get there and get started."

Reggie Britt dunks during a game last season. Britt will be playing his next basketball in Portugal, where the different players, language and lifestyle will challenge him further than just the game itself.

Jackson sparks K.C. win

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bo Jackson came back Sunday and picked up right where he left off.

Jackson returned from a 5½ -week stint on the disabled list and hit the first pitch he saw for a 450-foot home run, and later doubled and singled as the Kansas City Royals stopped the Seattle Mariners 8-2.

Jackson tied a major league record, becoming the 19th different major leaguer to homer in four consecutive at-bats. He hit three straight homers at Yankee Stadium on July 17, but hurt his shoulder later in the game and was put on the disabled list the next day.

"That pitch, I saw it so good," Jackson said. "I saw the seams."

Jackson hit his 20th home run of the season, connecting in the second inning against Randy Johnson for a two-run shot. Jackson finished 3-for-4 and scored twice.

"He had an incredible day, not just the home run," said Royals manager John Wathan. "Bo always seems to rise to the occasion."

Johnson said he knew Jackson's ball would land over the fence, but wasn't sure exactly where.

"He's a strong guy. I threw the ball hard," Johnson said. "It was just a matter of how far it was going to go."

Jackson is the first player to homer in four consecutive at-bats since Larry Herndon did it for Detroit on May 16 and May 18, 1982. Sixteen players — including Jackson — have homered four consecutive times over two games, including Ralph Kiner, who did it twice.

Two outs after Jackson's blast, Bill Pecota homered. In the seventh, Brian McRae hit his first major-league homer and drove in four runs in the game.

Jim Campbell (1-0) got his first big-league victory, giving up two runs on five hits in five innings. The Royals closed their seven-game homestand with six victories.

"Campbell got through five innings, and then (Steve) Farr and (Jeff) Montgomery came in a did a great job," Wathan said.

Wathan said he will rotate the lineup in the outfield now that Jackson is playing again.

"It's hard to get Brian McRae out of there right now," he said.

Jackson doubled in the eighth and later came home on Mike Macfarlane's sacrifice fly.

Johnson (12-8) gave up six runs on five hits and five walks in 6⅓ innings. He struck out eight.

The Mariners scored twice in the fourth. Harold Reynolds and Alvin Davis doubled, Jeffrey Leonard singled and Jay Buhner hit an RBI double. Pete O'Brien hit a grounder to shortstop Steve Jeltz, who threw home to get Leonard at the plate.

Taiwan victorious

By The Associated Press

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — Taiwan won its 14th Little League World Series in 17 appearances as Sun Chao-Chi struck out 16 in a 9-0 victory Sunday over Shippensburg, Pa.

In the first rain-delayed title game of the Little League championship, Sun struck out the first eight batters and drove in the game's first run.

The championship was held on a Sunday for the first time in the tournament's 44-year history after two quarterfinal games were postponed two days by rain.

Last season, the Taiwan team was beaten by a group of 12-year-olds from Trumbull, Conn., in one of the biggest upsets of 1989. Until last year, Taiwanese teams had won three World Series titles in a row and 13 of the previous 22.

It didn't take long for Taiwan to get back on top.

Liu Chien-Wen doubled in the first inning off Bobby Shannon and scored the only run Taiwan would need two pitches later when Sun singled to right. Taiwan added four runs each in the fourth and fifth innings.

Return to editor's chair welcomed

David Svoboda
SPORTS EDITOR

For me, sitting at the sports editor's desk in the Collegian newsroom is like lounging in front of the television in my late grandpa's well-worn recliner.

It's a good, relaxing fit.
And I hope it shows.

When I made my decision to come back to K-State for yet another fall — this is my ninth in Manhattan, counting undergraduate and graduate studies — little did I know I'd sit at this desk again.

But I really can't think of too many places I'd rather be.

I've done this before, you see. Back when most of you were in junior high or high school, I sat at this desk for the first time.

The year was 1985. The football team, after a bowl season my freshman year, had started its downslide, and the men's basketball program was still B.L. (before Lon).

The Royals went to the World Series that year, and I was there with my Collegian press pass and all, interviewing Dick Howser and the rest of the people that made that series great.

That next spring, I moved into the big chair — I became Collegian editor-in-chief. Wow, was I overmatched by that job.

I can truly say, looking back, that my stint in that chair was probably the best learning experience I've had as a student journalist.

It helped me learn that sports — writing, coaching, watching, participating — is my life, and that I shouldn't be ashamed of that.

How I decided to stay here for graduate school and to get certified to teach and coach is unimportant. You've already got more on my background than you probably ever wanted to read.

But I hope that my love of sports shows through every time you read the Collegian sports page.

I know the four young men who join me as full-time sports staffers have the same love of athletics that I do.

Scott Paske was a three-sport letterman at Augusta High, and he brings to the sports desk a player's perspective. I wasn't on the field at Salina Central, so it's something I lack.

Dan Wicker of Topeka, Russ Ewy of Halstead and Todd Fertig of Ellinwood round out the staff, and each brings unique abilities to his job. We're a Kansas-bred staff, and we're proud of that fact.

Because I've worked through the years with a great many fine people on the Collegian sports staff, what you'll see this fall won't seem to be too big a departure for those of you who have read this page before.

What we hope to bring you this semester is a bit more regularity in the presentation of material. You want standings, you'll get them, and on the same day each week.

Here's what we've got on tap.

■ Monday — Sports Monday, a two-page look at the events of the weekend past and week to come, returns, as does my column. In addition, a new "Fan Forum" feature makes its debut today. The Fan Forum is nothing more than a place for sports fans to get things off their chests that they don't want on the Collegian editorial page.

And the letters, which should be addressed to me in care of the sports desk in Kedzie 116, need not be complimentary, as Greg Grensing's is in today's edition. If something has you upset, say it.

Monday's page will also contain up-to-date Major League Baseball standings and Big Eight football standings, with scores of the weekend's contests.

■ Tuesday — Paske's column is a regular Tuesday feature, as is the Associated Press Top 25 College Football Poll. Wicker's look at the K-State intramural sports scene will also appear on Tuesday.

■ Wednesday — Wicker's column runs on hump day, along with Big Eight volleyball standings and National Football League standings.

■ Thursday — The Top 20 Cross Country polls appear Thursday, along with my club sports wrap-up. I encourage all coaches of club sports teams to contact me at the Collegian newsroom as soon as possible so we can do your organizations justice.

In addition, the Thursday page will provide an opportunity for us to run the longer letters from the Fan Forum feature as guest columns. If you feel strongly enough about an issue to write a long letter, we'll put your picture with it. You have to look at my ugly mug, after all.

■ Friday — The Big Eight football standings will run again, with a listing of the Saturday games and broadcast information. A football preview box also will run, with information on the Wildcats' game to be held the next day.

A new feature, Weekend Sports in the Little Apple, will also appear, and will be a listing of all events — collegiate, club and other — taking place in or near Manhattan over the weekend.

In addition, Paske or I will be previewing the weekend with a Friday column, which each of us will take on an every-other-week basis.

In short, we hope to bring you the best coverage we can in the best way we know how. If you have suggestions, let us know.

I hope you enjoy reading the sports page of this paper each morning as much as we enjoy putting it together for you. If you do, then it's all worth it.

And now, let's end the pregame show and get on with the game.

Henson accepts offer to play basketball for team in Greece

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Steve Henson's father said his son would play basketball for free if that's what was asked of him.

Thanks to a professional team in Greece, the former K-State standout won't have to.

Henson, a second-round selection of the Milwaukee Bucks in the National Basketball Association's June draft, departed Aug. 18 for Holland to enter training camp workouts with the team from Greece.

The 6-foot-1 McPherson native bypassed the NBA opportunity and reportedly signed a one-year deal to play with the European team for an undisclosed amount.

Like the monetary figure, many details of the recent step in Henson's basketball career are sketchy to his family and former college coaches.

"I'm not sure what the name of the team is or exactly when he will begin playing," said Mike Henson, Steve's father and coach at McPherson High School. "We've been in touch, but most of the planning has been done between Steve, his wife and his agent."

"We haven't heard a lot about what he's been doing lately," K-State assistant coach Greg Grensing said. "Things happened really fast, and it's been tough to keep up."

According to his father, security was the reason for Henson's decision to play overseas. Henson reported with other rookies and free agents to the Bucks' mini-camp in July. After competing in summer professional leagues in Detroit and throughout California, a deal between Henson and Milwaukee management failed to develop.

"Steve was under the impression that the Bucks were not willing to offer him a contract," Mike Henson said. "With them using what he thought were hardball tactics, he decided to take a sure thing."

Henson, K-State's fourth all-time leading scorer with 1,655 points, is no stranger to basketball abroad. Prior to his sophomore season, he toured Europe with the Big Eight Select Team, scoring 27 points in the final game against Czechoslovakia.

"The thought of playing in Europe was very attractive to Steve," Mike Henson said.

"Many people feel really negative that Steve didn't stay with the Bucks. We all think of Steve's NBA aspirations and the possibility of him playing at that level, but it's very possible that those were fueled more by his coaches and fans than by him."

Milwaukee will still retain Henson's draft rights, and Bucks' management has reportedly contacted him since he announced his intentions of playing in Europe.

"There's a small chance he could be back this season," Mike Henson said. "But from talking to him right before he left, I think he was happy with the situation. He is the type of person that just wants to compete for the sake of competing."

FAN FORUM

Thanks, Steve

Sports Editor,

The 1990 NBA Draft was conducted June 27 in New York City, and included among the selections made was K-State's own Steve Henson, the second round choice of the Milwaukee Bucks.

During Steve's four years at K-State, he represented the students, alumni and fans of the University in exemplary fashion, on and off the court.

No one will ever realize how many hours Steve gave to the University and to the young fans who he gave the best of role models. Steve's image was as fresh as a cool breeze and as open as the plains of Kansas. His honesty, integrity and class were as much a part of him as his jump shot.

First and foremost, Steve Henson was a competitor; he competed against his rivals as well as himself. He was a perfectionist and the most demanding, self-motivated athlete I've had the pleasure of being around. His teammates admired his toughness as well as his skill, and their confidence in Steve was evident in each and every game.

No athlete played the game with more passion or a finer work ethic than Henson. How many evenings did he spend, alone, shooting at the gym? To answer that question you'd have to go back to McPherson to start your count, as Steve started early in applying his skills toward the game.

A graduate of K-State in the spring of 1990, Steve Henson represents all the right things about collegiate athletes and then some. The way he played the game, with passion and little self-regard for his own body, was reflective of his approach to the game. Steve Henson was going to give everything he had for 40 minutes to help K-State win. No ifs, no buts about it, he had the heart of a lion.

As Steve embarks on a new challenge, K-State fans will have an appreciation, a deep respect for a young man whose like we'll probably never see again. I know come November all of us associated with K-State basketball will look at each other in a temporary state of shock when we realize that No. 12 is playing somewhere else.

Steve Henson will be a success in Greece. Why shouldn't he be? Steve Henson has never failed anything truly important to him in his athletic career.

Greg Grensing
assistant men's basketball coach

Rezoning neighborhoods concerns committee

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Staff

Preserving the appearance of existing neighborhoods was the main concern of Citizen's Advisory Committee members as they reviewed the summary report on a new Comprehensive Land Use Plan for the city of Manhattan.

Members were concerned because the plan calls for zoning much of the area in the central part of Manhattan, including neighborhoods near K-State and the downtown area, for high-density housing, rather than medium density, as in the current plan.

"Any new development needs to be consistent with the character of the existing neighborhood," said Connie Hamilton, member of the committee.

Hamilton said many new apartment complexes built in older sections of Manhattan are out of place with large, traditional houses.

"What does this plan say for the redevelopment of existing neighborhoods?" Hamilton said, referring to the ambiguous wording of the plan.

"What we need is strong language we can use to protect the neighborhoods," she said.

Bernd Foerster, professor of environmental design at K-State, and Manhattan resident for 20 years, said the city could be an attractive place for retirees, but even he is considering retiring somewhere else.

Many small Midwestern cities are looking to attract retired people to their cities, he said, because they spend money in the city without being on a payroll.

However, if Manhattan grows the way economic developers desire and the land plan allows for, retired people will move elsewhere, he said.

"I am concerned about the projected growth rate," Foerster said. "Because after all, excessive growth is cancer.

"And, there is a question of whether or not economic benefits would come with growth," he said. "I will retire soon, but the question is where. If they want me to stay here and spend my money, they'll have to work at it."

Jerry Petty, director of community development, said the decision to create a new land-use plan stemmed from the fact that the old one no longer applied.

"The existing plan was drawn in 1968, and a number of locations with zoning questions weren't even on the map, so the plan wasn't any good to us," Petty said.

"A number of problems have come up in the past few years," he said. "With the dramatically increasing University enrollment, there was pressure on developers to build complexes on new sites outside of the existing plan.

"At the same time, the older neighborhoods have a lot of pressure build to accommodate students near the University," Petty said. "It's all a matter of opinion, and concerns aesthetics — what is beautiful and what isn't."

Petty said the opinions of the four committee members — out of 17 — attending the meeting are much alike; that is, opposed to high-density building near the University. However, he said, other members of the committee who didn't attend favor such development.

"What we're trying to do is find some way to allow for everyone to be satisfied, and the committee was designed as a sounding board for the community," he said.

Another concern of the committee was the lack of space designated for schools.

Ed Schippmann of Howard, Needles, Tammen and Bargendoff, a Kansas City consulting firm which created the plan, said he left school

Saddam, Bush losers in public relations

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush and Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein are both learning that cultivating the right image through television can be a tricky business.

Saddam's lesson came in his failed attempt to ease international fears about the safety of Western hostages in Iraq and Kuwait. Instead, he provoked outrage by releasing a videotape that showed him patting the heads of cringing British boys.

The relentlessly vacationing Bush set out to show that the Persian Gulf crisis wasn't holding him hostage in the White House. But he has faced criticism that his golf-playing and motorboating in Kennebunkport, Maine, were inappropriate when U.S. soldiers were preparing for war along the Kuwaiti-Saudi border.

"Saddam Hussein must have figured that these tapes would play wonderfully all over the world," said Philip Robbins, chairman of the journalism department at George Washington University.

"The reaction ... is almost completely contrary to that," Robbins said. If it was meant to change world opinion, "I think it's failed miserably."

was delayed one week so energy could be conserved during an extreme cold snap. During the semester breaks the temperatures in classrooms and hallways can be reduced to 55 degrees, he said.

Charles Beckom, K-State police department chief, said the department can not cut back on safety-work assignments but is looking at a number of possible measures to help relieve the stress higher gasoline prices have put on the department's budget.

He said these measures include increasing the amount of time officers are required to be on walking patrol from the present two hours a week to four hours, asking those involved in minor accidents to come to the police office to fill out forms and more monitoring from parked vehicles.

In addition, Beckom said the department might have to start charging for non-basic law enforcement services, such as escorting, which it currently provides free of charge to other departments on campus.

Dave Gronquist, assistant director of facilities management, said higher gas prices would not increase the rent campus departments pay for vehicles in the University motor pool.

Gronquist said fuel cost is part of the motor pool's budget along with staff salaries, maintenance and vehicle replacement. Higher gas prices will mean less money for vehicle replacement, he said.

sumer does."

Prices outside the Manhattan area were about 15 to 20 cents lower.

Brandon Brazzle, an employee at Quality Petroleum in Wamego, said gas in Wamego has been holding steady at about $1.27 per gallon at the town's five service stations.

Stations in Topeka also reported an increase in the price of wholesale gas, although their prices remained at about $1.25 per gallon according to Frank Decker, president of Decker Oil Company.

"In Topeka, there are several stations selling gas below the wholesale cost, and I'm not really sure how they can do that," Decker said.

The price of wholesale gas in Topeka, Decker said, was $1.26 per gallon.

Some station owners in Manhattan said gas prices may be lowered soon, while others said the price may go up again.

Bud Crabtree, Griffith Oil Co. Inc. general manager, said he doesn't expect prices to get much cheaper.

"We get price changes every day and, because of the type of product we are dealing with, it makes us very visible and the source of a lot of criticism," he said. "The public doesn't understand, and sometimes we don't either."

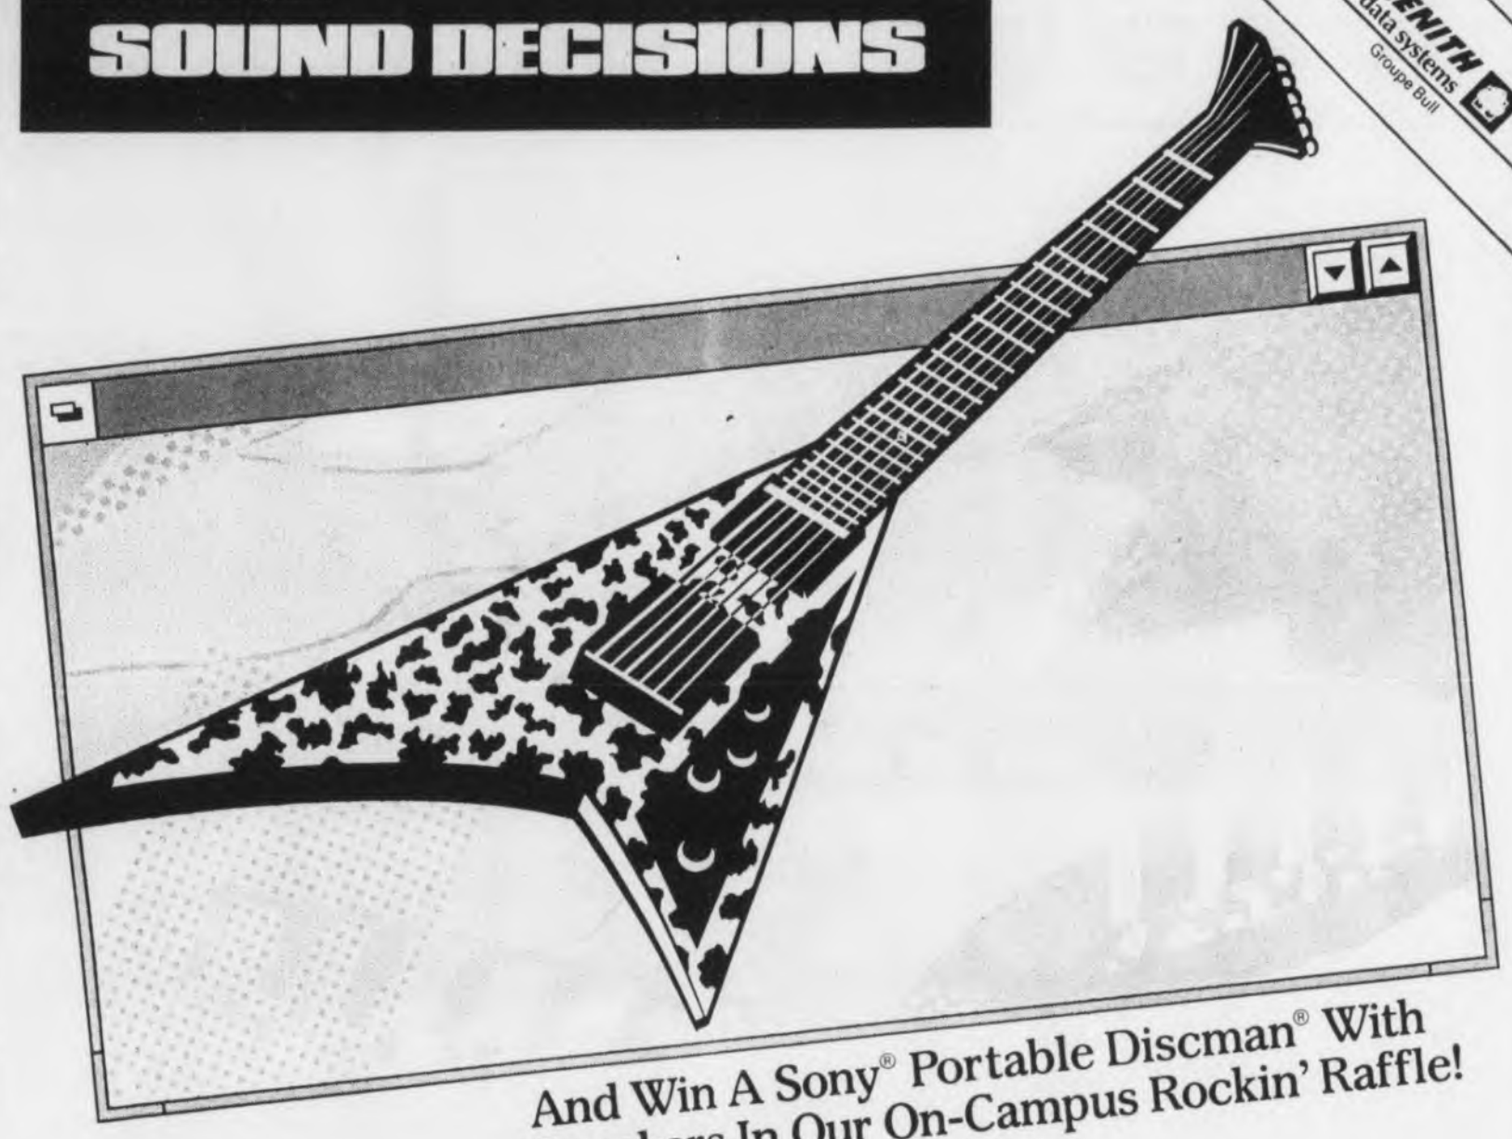
locations out of the plan by request of the city.

Petty said the city has no control over where schools are built. School boards are responsible for deciding where schools should be.

Schippmann said most of the cities he works with are responsible for planning school locations, and Manhattan is an exception to the norm.



Comments from the committee members will be added to the document, which will then be modified, if necessary, by the Urban Planning Board and forwarded to the City Commission for approval.

The sanitation and water reports are still being finalized, Petty said, and are counterparts to the land-use plan.

ily, who is still there, but he is keeping a close eye on things.

"There wasn't danger, but there is always a possibility," he said. "I'm not too worried about things in Saudi Arabia. We'll just have to take things one day at a time."

an antitank capability while the gunners are protected inside the vehicle.

Secondary weapons that can be manned by the infantry riding in the M2 include six medium and a large machine gun and 10 firing ports for assualt rifles.

"The Bradley Fighting Vehicle is a vast improvement over the old M113 armored personnel carrier. The speed, armament, transport and weapon systems are better," Marvin said.

Infanty use a variety of weapons centered on the M16 A-2 assualt rifle, M60 machine gun, light antitank weapons and squad weapon systems, which need more then one soldier to operate, Marvin said.

Airplanes the U.S. Air Force has sent over to Saudi Arabia include fighters, mid-air tankers, transports, radar planes and ground support fighter bombers, said Col. John McTasney, professor of aerospace studies.

He said he didn't know of any heavy bombers stationed in the region.

According to articles in Air Force Magazine and Aviation Week and Space Technology, about 20 F-117A Stealth fighters have been deployed as a deterrent in the Persian region. If fighting breaks out, the Stealth's objectives would be ground targets such as chemical weapons and nuclear facilities.

A single-seat, dual engine fighter-bomber, the F-117A is designed to exploit low-observable technology. It can be transported in the C-5 Galaxy transports by removing or folding its wings.

Transports and air-refueling tankers play an important role in getting the equipment to the Middle East, McTasney said.

One conventional surface attack jet that may be sent to the gulf, according to Aviation Week and Space Technology, is the A-10A Thunderbolt.

Most A-10A's are used by National Guard and reserve units, McTasney said.

Richards-Gebaur Air Force Base south of Kansas City is the closest A-10A base in the area. The reserves are on active standby and await orders. It is the first time in 30 years orders like these have been sent to the base.

Fighter jets being used in the gulf include the F-15E Eagle and F-16 Fighting Falcon. The Eagle serves as the U.S.A.F.'s totally integrated fighter for all-weather air-to-air fighting.

According to the articles, a Pentagon official was quoted as saying "it would be common sense to want the F-15E to be used for attacking conventional targets deep in Iraq."

The Eagle and Falcon are vastly superior to the Soviet-built Mig 29's and Mig 27's that the Iraqis use, McTasney said.

The F-16 was developed to replace the Vietnam War vintage F-4 Phantom as a fighter. By decreasing weight through the use of lighter composite metals, reducing drag and better control systems, the F-16 became the most manueverable fighter ever built, according to Air Force Magazine.

Weaponry for the fighters varies between the two designs and from mission to mission. The armament includes 20mm multi-barrel cannon and various air-to-air and air-to-surface missles.

As the need arose, reserve and guard refueling units were activated to help ease the burden, according to the articles. The KC-135's have increased in use while the KC-10's are pressed into service as part-time transports.

The Kansas Air National Guard refueling unit in Topeka was activated shortly after the airlift began. Part of the squadron was ordered to support the operations in early August.

A very important need in the gulf, McTasney said, is advance warning in the event of being attacked. This is the job of the AWACS radar plane.

The AWACS uses long range radar and surveillance equipment to look deep into other countries for early signs of an air attack, according to Aviation Week.

ceiving a full refund of their tuition and fees for the fall semester, or an incomplete, which would allow them to finish their semester's work upon their return," said Registrar Don Foster.

K-State isn't alone. The Board of Regents have issued a statement requesting all regent institutions to provide full tution and fee refunds to any students who may be called to active duty in the National Gaurd or armed forces reserve units.

Dave Strange, sophomore in architectural engineering and Junction City reservist, said his tanker unit hasn't been put on alert, and he doesn't think it will. Strange said it would be more likely for the government to send the 49th and 50th tanker units from Texas.

"Texas and California are the prime training areas for Middle East combat because the weather conditions there are closer to what they are like in the Middle East," he said.

Smith said the heat in Saudi Arabia will be a problem, especially with the suits the U.S. reservists have to wear for protection in chemical warfare.

"To imagine what it's like wearing one of those suits," Smith said, "imagine it being about 110 degrees with about 80 percent humidity, and you're wearing your heaviest winter coat, boots and big, heavy rubber gloves. Then imagine wearing a protective mask that makes it really hard to breathe.

"That's how it felt when we wore them in the middle of December," he said. "I can't see how it would be possible for troops to function in those suits in the desert heat."

Strange said one of the men in his unit had a heat stroke when they trained in the chemical protective suits at Fort Bliss in Texas.

Ian Benney, junior in computer science, said his father was called from his National Guard Military Police unit in Michigan.

"He called me about three weeks ago and told me he'd been activated," Benney said. "I haven't talked to him since, so I don't know for sure if he's gone or not.

"I'm worried about him going, of course," he said. "But he's a Vietnam vet — I'm sure he can handle himself."

Other officials worried about the long-range possibilities of sending troops to the Middle East.

"I'm afraid this will turn into a long-term thing, like Korea or Germany," said Cpl. Tim O'Connor, frontline medic of the 1st Battalion, 34th Armor and Tank Division. "I think we will set up camps as a peace-keeping force and stay for 10 or 20 years.

"If this does turn out to be a long-term conflict, it could end up affecting the people like me that have been commissioned, but are waiting for our first active orders," Baggerly said. "It could end up shortening the time I spend in training before getting my first assignment."

A WILDCAT WELCOME

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

The Memorial Stadium football field was filled with students playing volleyball, throwing discs and listening to music Sunday afternoon at the Welcome Back Concert.

The performance was part of Wildcat Welcome Week, which began last week and ends Wednesday.

The concert featured performances by the Moving Van Goghs, which includes Michael Leggs, graduate student in English; That Statue Moved, which has performed at the Welcome Back Concert for the past three years; and Ipso Facto, a reggae/rock group from Minneapolis, Minn.

The Parachute Club demonstrated a parachute jump, concessions were sold by the K-State Union and volleyball nets were provided by Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

Prizes were drawn between performances. T-shirts, Willie the Wildcat mugs, and other novelties were given away as the temperature hit 96 degrees.

"It's tiring. It's not as energetic as playing inside, but still, it's better than work," said Dave Burdett, bass guitarist for That Statue Moved.

Brad Sutcliffe, senior in electrical engineering, said the heat would have been more bearable if the water from concession stands had been free.

"It was OK. The band was OK, and I had some fun playing catch. I'm just relaxing, forgetting about what I have to do tomorrow," Sutcliffe said.

Tony Dicola, junior in electrical engineering, is a member of the parachute club and was the first to land. He said he didn't think the heat affected his jumping ability.

"It feels a lot hotter than 96 degrees," said Stacy Blagg, junior in mathematics, as she tanned in the stadium.

Other events during Welcome Week were the kickoff dance Saturday night, sponsored by KSUARH, and the Welcome Back Dance Friday night, which featured the band Filter Kings.

Fewer freshman leaves vacancies in residence halls

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

Following two years of campus housing shortages, students can look forward to not being packed like sardines into temporary housing and study rooms of residence halls this semester.

The current housing situation on campus is anything but a crunch. About 200 available vacancies remain in five residence halls, and Robert Burgess, assistant housing director, said the department doesn't anticipate operating at full capacity this semester.

The reason for the decline in on-campus housing is a decline in freshman enrollment, Burgess said.

"Because 60 percent of the dorm population are freshmen, we can expect a decline amd more available spaces as the University experiences a decline in freshman enrollment," he said.

While the low housing numbers came as no surprise to Burgess, he said it is still disappointing.

The department is just now publicizing the vacancies, Burgess said, "but in the future, the department is discussing pursuing a more aggressive marketing campaign."

All the different living-group options still have available space for students, Burgess said. Marlatt Hall has 101 assignable vacancies. Other residence halls under capacity are Haymaker, Edwards, Boyd and Putnam, each with about 10 to 15 available spaces remaining.

David Yoder, director of Marlatt, said this year's small number of walk-ins is in complete contrast to last year's overflow situation.

Unlike Marlatt, Derek Jackson, director of Haymaker, said many students have decided to live in residence halls in the past week, and he envisions the halls reaching full capacity soon.

One change in residence hall living is the increase in cost. Hall contracts increased this year by $25 per month. Collectively, the hike is $100 a semester.

Despite the increase, Burgess said he urges students not to worry about future price increases to compensate for the lower numbers. Housing contracts are determined on a yearly basis and prices cannot be changed.

"We budget for a certain amount of vacancies during the school year," he said. "When at full capacity, extra money is used to upgrade facilities. But even with lower numbers than last year, all operating costs are covered."

Although about 120 students decided to live in the residence halls during the week before school started, Burgess said vacancies will remain throughout the semester.

Greeks face life

Pledges attend orientation, lecture

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Staff

Sexual relationships and date rape highlighted the second half of an orientation meeting presented for all K-State greek pledge classes Sunday evening in McCain Auditorium.

The Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic council sponsored the program dealing with various aspects of greek life facing incoming pledges.

"We want to orientate pledges to the greek system and life as a whole," said Sean Hare, executive secretary of IFC and sophomore in business administration.

The evening's program discussed topics ranging from date rape to scholarship programs.

"I found all the information interesting, and the program cleared up some things I wasn't sure about," said Janelle Meyer, a pledge member of the Alpha Xi Delta sorority.

"It lets them know about some of the things they can expect and get involved in while being members of the greek system," said Kayla Dunn, pledge trainer of Alpha Chi Omega sorority and senior in elementary education.

A field consultant from the Sigma Kappa sorority was also present to promote the opening and rush activities of its newest national chapter which will open this semester at K-State.

The first session began at 6:30 p.m. and was open to pledging members of K-State greek houses. Another meeting followed at 7:30 and was open to the public. Other sponsors included the Union Programming Council's Issues and Ideas committee and the KSU Athletic Department.

In the 7:30 p.m. lecture "Hands Off, Lets Talk," guest lecturer Bob Hall discussed date rape, sexual aggression and communication in relationships. Hall operates a program called "Learning to Live with Conflict" which advises students on how to analyze and resolve personal conflicts. Hall will lecture at 120 universities and colleges nationwide this year.

"Bob Hall was a very informative and entertaining speaker, and we thought that the students at Kansas State would find his lecture very beneficial," said Kate Gosch, member of the UPC committee and junior in business.

"When in doubt, people should talk it out," Hall said. "Communication and respect are the keys in all sexual relationships."

The opening meeting advised the pledges about numerous activities and goals sororities and fraternities are often involved in. Responsibility and becoming involved were stressed as keys to increasing awareness among greek members. Scholarship programs and philanthropies were also explained and discussed.

Aggieville sports new image

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

After more than a year of construction with minimal setbacks, restorations in Aggieville should be complete in about one month.

Jerry Petty, director of Manhattan commercial development, said the target date is Oct. 1, although he hopes to finish sooner.

Petty said the majority of the internal work is complete in the two-block area. Some perimeter work will continue up to the contracted completion date.

"The amount of time it is taking is the maximum amount allotted for the project by the contractor," he said. Petty said construction will not inconvenience the retailers nor the customers.

Most of the construction still underway is along the south block of Laramie Street.

Bricked public walkways, new parking lots and street lights, and personalized bricks in the sidewalk are some of the new items in Aggieville.

The project costs $1.9 million, including construction costs and contractor's fees.

The idea for a remodeled Aggieville germinated about 10 years ago when city officials and members of the Aggieville Merchants Association formed a committee to look into the possibilities.

Dan Walter, president of the Merchants Association and textbook manager of Varney's Bookstore, said things ran smoothly once the idea was conceived.

"I think it makes the whole shopping center more inviting for all ages," Walter said, adding that he has compared current pictures of the area with older pictures. "It will look attractive and much more pleasant to a lot more people."

Petty said he hopes the remodeling will be good for business in addition to making Aggieville look nicer.

"It certainly has the potential to attract more business to the area," he said. "It also gives the stores a chance to show off a little and provides them with an area that is a lot nicer and a lot easier to keep clean."

Petty said a few problems came up along the way, but nothing that was not anticipated. Construction crews had to work around underground coal bins and old passageways beneath some of the buildings as they rebuilt the sidewalks.

"We knew those things were there, but there was nothing we could do about it until we got to it," Petty said.

The Merchants Association has been active in helping plan and oversee much of the construction. Petty said he credits much of the success of the project to their cooperation.

"We feel the merchants have been great, despite the inconvenience they were caused at times," he said. "We are just really looking foward to it being completed."

City seeks funding for traffic lights

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Traffic lights may be installed at dangerous intersections along Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

The corridor plan was approved Tuesday by the Manhattan City Commission. The city must present the plan to the Kansas Department of Transportation by Sept. 1 for Hazard Elimination Safety funding consideration.

Jerry Petty, director of Manhattan community development, said the intersections of Griffith Drive, Kimball Avenue and Allen and Casement roads would be included in the plan. All are considered high-accident locations.

Petty said the proposal is unusual because five intersections have been suggested in the past for funding by the city and have been rejected because the intersections weren't considered dangerous enough.

Petty said he feels this proposal has a better chance of being approved as a package.

During an impasse hearing, the commission decided to give city employees and firefighters a 4 percent mid-point salary adjustment for a one-year term. In one year the commission will review both the firefighters' and city employees' contracts on an equal basis.

Firefighters and the city staff have not been able to agree on contract terms. Employees have been asking for either a 5.5 percent salary adjustment or a 4 percent salary adjustment with a longevity plan, giving employees bonuses for working five years or more.

The city, however, could only afford the 4 percent salary adjustment, said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager.

After the contract was approved, Mayor Richard Hayter said after one year the longevity plan would be reconsidered, but timing was not appropriate now, considering unusual turnovers in the past year. He also said the city could not afford the plan at this time.

Sigma Kappa to open doors as new sorority

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Panhellenic Council will add its 12th member as the national sorority of Sigma Kappa colonizes at K-State next month.

A team of national officers will host rush for Sigma Kappa. An informational meeting scheduled for 7 p.m. Sept. 10 in the K-State Union Forum Hall will kick off the rush activities. Rush parties will continue through Sept. 14.

The sorority hopes to pledge 140 women, said Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser. Sigma Kappa has chosen to sign that many pledges in order to be comparable in size to other sororities on campus.

The University chose Sigma Kappa over four other interested national sororities because they had the strongest local alumnae support, the best plans for construction of a sorority house and the best organizational presentation, Robel said.

Sigma Kappa accepted the University's invitation to colonize because of its strong greek system, said Michelle Anderson, Sigma Kappa colony pledge educator.

"We also wanted to add another collegiate chapter in Kansas so our chapter at the University of Kansas would have a sister chapter," Anderson said. Sigma Kappa will be colonizing on four other college campuses nationwide this year.

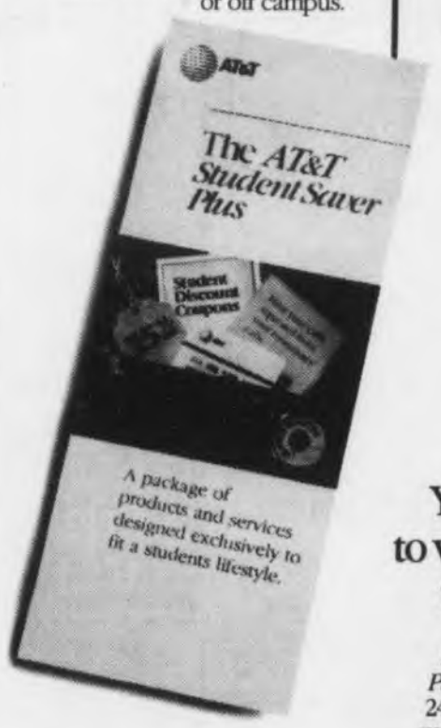
Sigma Kappa participated in the first two days of fall rush by presenting an informational slide show, Anderson said.

"We wanted to give rushees an opportunity to see what our colony would be like," Anderson said. "We told them we realized most of them would find sorority homes during fall rush, but we wanted them to learn more about Sigma Kappa."

The first two weeks of classes will serve as an intense period of public relations for Sigma Kappa, Anderson said. Sigma Kappa posters and balloons will adorn campus as Anderson visits the other greek houses and answers questions in the Union to allow students to learn more about Sigma Kappa.

"Rush will be open to any woman who is interested and is not affiliated with another sorority," Anderson said. "This is a great opportunity for juniors and seniors who may have felt they were too old to participate in fall rush.

"The neat thing about a colony is it is self-governing and the pledges can make Sigma Kappa what they want it to be," Anderson said. "There are great leadership opportunities because it is up to the women who join to decide how the colony will function."



Anderson will live in Manhattan and advise the colony for the fall semester. The sorority will be able to receive its charter and become an official chapter of Sigma Kappa next spring.

"They'll be active in much the same way as the other sororities," Robel said. "They will have Wednesday night meetings, functions, formal dances and participate in homecoming. The main difference is they will all be pledges."

The sorority is required by Panhellenic Council and the University to build a house within the next five years.

Legislators criticize gift laws

Lawmakers say statutes need updated, clarifing

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — If a lobbyist buys a legislator a $21 bottle of wine at dinner, only the lobbyist and waiter may know the tab.

However, if the lobbyist buys the same bottle of wine in a store and gives it to the legislator to take home, the purchase and the legislator's name go on a monthly spending report filed in the secretary of state's office.

The lives of lobbyists and public officials are full of minor favors, a meal or reception here, a round of golf there, perhaps even a trip to the ballpark. Lobbyists have already spent more than $330,000 on food and beverages this year.

Laws governing what legislators can accept from lobbyists and others and what lobbyists must report are supposed to give an accurate picture. Some legislators and lobbyists think the laws are sometimes inconsistent and confusing.

"It's not very clear," said Rep. Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, a key player in past ethics debates. "Most legislators know what they have to know."

The 1990 Legislature formed the Select Commission on Ethical Conduct to review ethics laws, and those regulating gifts to public officials may be among the laws studied.

Under Kansas law:

- Lobbyists must file reports if they spend $100 or more in a month. They must list a total for expenditures for food and beverages consumed in their presence.
- Lobbyists must list the recipients of gifts, speaking fees and other payments worth more than $20. Gifts include packaged food or beverages consumed when the lobbyist is not present.
- Legislators can accept no more than $100 in a year in gifts from a registered lobbyist or his group.
- Public officials can accept no more than $100 a year in gifts from others if they know or should have known the gifts purpose was to influence them — something the Disclosure Commission's staff acknowledges is probably impossible to prove.
- There are no limits on speaking fees public officials can accept, though they must report who gave them honoraria of more than $500 when they file statements of substantial interest in April. Those reports must list only the group's name and address.

Most lobbyists and legislators see the custom of giving small gifts, picking up the cost of a meal or treating someone to a round of golf as harmless. They say no one's vote can be bought for what amounts to hospitality.

"The perception of it is probably worse than the acts being performed," said Sen. Don Sallee, R-Troy, chairman of the Senate Elections Committee, which handles ethics legislation.

A provision that appears to irk lobbyists is the one governing the reporting of small gifts.

Lobbyists sometimes question why they have to report the names of legislators they treat to golf when they don't have to do the same for lunch companions, said Carol Williams, executive director of the state Public Disclosure Commission.

"I have heard lobbyists say, 'What difference is there?'" she said.

Pete McGill, a former House speaker who now operates a lobbying firm, acknowledged that lobbyists don't like to report legislators' names because it may embarrass the legislator.

Perhaps that's why the giving of tangible gifts is rare in Kansas. In 1989, lobbyists reported only 32 times in which they gave a gift worth more than $100 to a legislator.

However, McGill said the law has inspired its own custom — two lobbyists accompanying a legislator for golf and splitting green and cart fees, McGill said.

"When those statutes were written, green fees were $10," McGill said. "I think we need to readdress the issue."

Michael Woolf, executive director of Common Cause of Kansas, which advocates stronger ethics laws, has a simple solution: ban all gifts and require lobbyists to report all meals with legislators.

"They could go that way and throw the baby out with the bathwater," McGill said. "They would put the lobbyists out of business."

Honoraria appear to be even rarer than gifts.

In the most recent statements of substantial interests, only four legislators, statewide elected officials and cabinet secretaries reported receiving honoraria of more than $500. They were Secretary of State Bill Graves; Senate President Bud Burke, R-Leawood, and Reps. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, and Kathleen Sebelius, D-Topeka.

As an example, Graves received honoraria from the Anti-Defamation League and B'nai B'rith and Wagnon received a fee from Delta Kappa Gamma, a teacher's sorority.

Burke, who received fees from the American Psychiatric Association to speak on mental health reform and from the State Legislative Leaders Foundation, said he thinks lawmakers get invited to make such speeches only infrequently.

"I don't know anybody who's offered $100 honoraria to speakers," he said, referring to the $500 reporting threshold. "They're usually $500, $750 or $1,000."

Woolf replied: "That is the first loophole that's going to be used. If we start to clamp down on gifts and campaign contributions, that's going to become a big thing."

Governor backs public praying

By The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — To Gov. Norm Bangerter, an impending legal battle over the saying of prayers at public school graduations is a local issue that scarcely affects predominantly Mormon Utah's image in the global marketplace.

Nor does he see the bitterly divisive issue tainting Salt Lake City's bid to be host of the 1998 Winter Olympics.

"I doubt anyone who's going to come to the Olympics worries whether there's prayer in graduation at high school. I doubt that it's going to cross many people's minds," Bangerter said in an interview.

But Michele Parish-Pixler, state director of the American Civil Liberties Union, is among many non-Mormons who believe the governor's attitude helps perpetuate the outsider's image of Utah as a narrow-minded theocracy.

"We spend all this money to promote tourism, then we do this stuff," she said.

Perhaps not since non-Mormon efforts to permit hard liquor to be served by the drink failed in 1968 has an issue so sharply divided Utah residents along religious lines. The battle was joined July 30 when the ACLU filed suit in federal court seeking to ban prayer from public school graduations.

Bangerter, a Mormon and a Republican, said he may ask the state legislature for a special appropriation to help the two school districts named in the lawsuit defend themselves in court.

"I felt local districts were being somewhat intimidated by the threat of a lawsuit in doing what they desired to do," he said.

The U.S. Supreme Court banned organized, school-sponsored prayer sessions for students in 1962. Bangerter believes a legal gray area remains for opening and closing prayers at events such as commencement.

Seventy percent of Utah's 1.7 million residents are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and most of the graduation prayers are delivered by Mormons.

Many defend the practice, saying critics are taking potshots at a faith defenders say is virtually synonymous with a healthy and industrious lifestyle.

Others decry the church's influence on daily life in Utah, saying Mormons have no conception of the ostracism felt by everyone else.

Unless you really enjoy reading manuals, get a Macintosh.

Tim Moses
Computer Science
Vanderbilt University

"Macintosh practically eliminates the need to keep manuals next to my computer, because—regardless of which program I'm using—I can open, close, save, and print files in exactly the same way. And you can't say that about any other computer.

"Today lots of other computers are attempting to look and work like a Macintosh, but it's just not possible. They're too fundamentally different to begin with. This may sound a little strange, but comparing a Macintosh to other computers is like comparing apples to oranges. You can squash the orange into shape and paint it to look like an apple, but underneath the makeup, it's still an orange.

"It's funny—I work at the Vanderbilt computer store and I've seen lots of people switch from other computers to Macintosh, but I've never seen anybody with a Macintosh switch to another computer."

Roche will face challenges

New biochemistry head sets goal for department's future

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Communication of success is one goal set for the department of biochemistry as Thomas Roche takes the helm as department head.

Roche, who joined the biochemistry faculty in 1974, was appointed to the position on June 18. He replaces David Cox who accepted the position as dean of arts and sciences at Indiana University-Purdue University at Fort Wayne, Ind.

Roche said he faces many challenges this year, such as budget cutbacks, grant proposals and four vacant faculty positions. Nonetheless, he said he is confident in the department's abilities.

He said at this point he is not sure what effects the University-wide budget cutbacks will have on the department.

Currently, the department is seeking about $800,000 in research grants, which Roche said is important to its future.

"Our department is about 75 percent research and 25 percent teaching," he said. "We have a role that has been designated and geared for research."

Roche is also renewing a five-year grant from the National Institute of Health (NIH) for his own research which focuses on a giant enzyme system that has a central role in carbohydrate metabolism and factors in diabetes and obesity.

Roche said his research has been continuously supported by NIH and other grants.

"These days you get very nervous as to whether or not you get your grants," Roche said.

The department is also searching for new faculty to fill the vacant positions.

"We did have some faculty that retired or accepted other positions," he said. "We will get those positions filled because that puts a lot of strain on the system."

Roche said he will not have to sacrifice any of his research time for his new position. He sees his role as making a great department even better.

"I think the department has always been run well," he said. "It plays a very important role in the University's life sciences."

Thomas Isenhour, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said he is looking foward to Roche serving as head of the department and expects to see progress within the next five years.

Manhattan firefighters remove siding from an abandoned house at 615 Vattier Thursday evening after the house caught on fire. The Manhattan Fire Department and the Riley County Police Department are investigating the blaze as arson.

Arson investigation underway after fire

By Margaret Clarkin
Collegian Staff

A fire at a vacant house at 615 Vattier Thursday evening is being investigated as arson, said Chuck Tannehill, battalion chief for the Manhattan Fire Department.

The investigation will be carried out by the Manhattan Fire Department and the Riley County Police Department.

Fire department records said the structure sustained $12,000 in damage. There was one injury in the fire when student firefighter Matthew Chrispen, senior in fine arts, overheated while cleaning up after the fire.

The official report said fire started in a bathroom on the first floor, but it did not say what started the fire.

Henri Sellars, Manhattan High School student, said he was delivering papers about 5 p.m Thursday when he found the house smoking.

"I deliver to the house, and it was smoking pretty bad," he said.

Sellars said he went next door to the residence of Steve Thompson to call 911.

Tannehill said previous fires had occurred at the residence.

Thompson said the owner, Jerry Haffener, was trying to fix the residence up to make it a rental apartment for college students.

He said the owner was living in the house until May, when the first fire occurred.

"Someone set the back on fire, and he had to move out then," Thompson said.

Sellars said he saw a gas can next to the house and the firefighters moved it away from the house when they arrived.

Bulgarian protestors torch Socialist Party building

By The Associated Press

SOFIA, Bulgaria — Anti-Communist protesters set fire Sunday to the headquarters of the governing Socialist Party, throwing torches through windows and scattering documents in the street.

Police sealed off roads into the capital and announced a national alert.

President Zhelyu Zhelev said the country was in danger of "drifting ... into a military dictatorship." He cut short his holiday in the Black Sea city of Varna to deliver a nationally broadcast radio appeal for law and order.

Several firefighters and bystanders near the burned building were apparently injured by falling debris, said a doctor on the scene. One demonstrator said police were clubbing protesters inside the building.

The eight-story granite building from the 1950s, the largest in the capital of Sofia, was formerly the headquarters of the Communist Party, which changed its name to the Socialist Party after reformers ousted hard-line Communist leader Todor Zhivkov in November.

As firefighters fought to control the blaze, the commander of the national police announced that the main roads into Sofia had been closed to all but those on official business.

Bulgarian media carried a statement issued by the unidentified commander announcing that police across the nation had been placed on alert "so that no similar incidents happen in other regions." The statement did not elaborate.

By 3 a.m. today, five hours after the blaze began, the fire had been nearly extinguished by firefighters.

The crowd outside the building, which swelled to as many as 10,000 people at one point, had shrunk to about 1,000 by early today. About 700-800 police armed with clubs observed them but made no move to disperse the crowd.

On Sunday evening, several thousand demonstrators had gathered outside the party headquarters to demand the removal of Communist symbols from the building.

More than a dozen young people broke away from the main body of demonstrators, shattering windows on the ground floor of the party headquarters.

Groups use Ahearn exit to promote themselves

Area's popularity forces placement of more booths

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Students exiting from registration during the past week at Ahearn Field House were greeted with a carnival atmosphere as organizations offered information, gifts or coupons and the opportunity to further reduce their checking accounts.

Loleta Sump, facilities special events coordinator, said the area has became very popular with groups vying for the attention of students. Requests were so numerous that this year extra areas were made available for booths.

Groups asking for space are given consideration on a first-come, first-serve basis, Sump said.

Tammy Hemphill, staff person for Campus Crusade for Christ, said a booth is a good way to potentially meet every student on campus and share with them the resources the organization offers. She said CCC was getting a good response from students.

Brent Stockwell, senior in public administration and Union Program Council president, said coupons for K-State Union discounts were rarely turned down and increased interest in UPC informational material.

Ron Schulze, curator of education for the Sunset Zoo, said he hoped to increase student awareness about the zoo and to inform students of activities and tours sponsored by the zoo at his information table. A pygmy hedgehog, red-tailed boa constrictor, blue-tongued skink and three native Kansas raptors proved to be great for attracting students' attention, he said.

"People are attracted to the animals," Schulze said. "Even people that are afraid of the snake stand back and look."

Karen Chinn, senior in elementary education, and Jamie Mosher, freshman in physical education, said they took all the coupons and free gifts offered. Chinn and Mosher said it was too crowded to stop at any of the tables and that they found the atmosphere around the exit exciting.

Groups trying to raise money reported various degrees of success. Matt McMillen, director of Cat Backer Clubs, said he was pleased with the near 100 students who had joined the "I Contributed A Twenty" club by early Thursday afternoon. He said 90 percent of those signing up for ICAT bought $5 T-shirts.

Cindy Tannehill, junior in horticulture, said the Horticulture Club sold numerous plants to help raise money for the Mid-American Collegiate Horticulture meeting the club is hosting this spring.

Survival slim for miners

By The Associated Press

DOBRNJA, Yugoslavia — An explosion of methane gas or coal dust on Sunday trapped 169 coal miners underground, and an official said there was little chance any survived.

Only one man, who was working near the surface, was pulled alive from the Dobrnja-Jug pit of the Kreka mine, said Vidan Krsnanovic, technical director of the rescue operation 90 miles west of Belgrade.

If the trapped miners died, it would be the worst mining disaster in Yugoslav history.

"The rescue work is proceeding very slowly," Krsnanovic told reporters. "Corridors in the mine have caved in, there are high concentrations of toxic gases, and it is very hot inside."

He said about 90 rescuers, breathing equipment strapped to their backs, were searching for survivors. But, he said, it was virtually impossible any of the trapped miners survived.

"There is no need to talk about such a possibility," he said.

Krsnanovic did not give a figure for the number of bodies found. An earlier report by the official Tanjug news agency said two people were found alive and eight bodies were recovered.

The Tanjug report had said 170 miners were in the mine when the blast occurred about 1:30 a.m. Sunday.

There was no immediate indication how far underground the miners were trapped. The blast occurred at a depth of about 1,500 feet.

Tangled ruins of the conveyor belt that carried coal from the shaft were scattered around the mine mouth. Huge pieces of a concrete archway that formed the mine entrance were being pulled away by cranes.

The force of the blast ripped out steel supports and ventilation equipment, Tanjug reported.

Kreka mine, one of the oldest in Yugoslavia, was the site of a week-long strike for higher pay that ended Friday. Mining experts interviewed by Belgrade radio said high concentrations of the highly-flammable methane gas might have accumulated in the shafts during the strike.

Topekan charged with soliciting S&L funds

By The Associated Press

DENVER — The official in charge of regulating Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan solicited campaign money for a member of a congressional panel that oversees the S&L industry, The Denver Post reported Sunday.

In a copyright story, The Post said Kermit Mowbray, former president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Topeka solicited campaign funds from other regulators for former U.S. Sen. David Karnes, R-Neb., who was a member of the Senate Banking Committee.

Edwin Gray, former chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which governed the Topeka bank, said Mowbray's fund-raising "shows very poor judgment. It's dead wrong.

"If there was any kind of coercion, I would say that it is at the least highly improper and possibly a violation of the law," Gray said.

In an interview from his Topeka home last week, Mowbray told the Post he organized an effort to raise money for Karnes because he deserved support.

"I didn't see anything wrong with that," Mowbray said.

Federal law restricts government employees from raising money for federal campaigns, but Home Loan Bank employees aren't covered by the rule.

Karnes was chairman of the Topeka bank before he was appointed to the Senate in 1986. He ran unsuccessfully for the seat in 1988. He said he was unaware of the contributions from Mowbray and other regulators.

"Frankly, I was so busy I didn't have time to notice where my campaign funds came from," he said.

The bailout of the nationwide savings and loan industry will cost taxpayers at least $500 billion. The objectivity of thrift regulators has become an issue in Silverado's case, largely because President Bush's son, Neil, was on the Denver thrift's board of directors.

Last month, the Treasury Department launched an investigation into allegations that Mowbray deliberately postponed seizing Silverado until after the 1988 presidential election to protect Bush from any bad publicity stemming from his son's role at the thrift.

In testimony before the House Banking Committee in June, Mowbray said he received a phone call from Washington, D.C., directing him to put off Silverado's closing from October 1988 to December 1988. He said he didn't remember who made the call or whether he took the call personally.

Shortly after Silverado failed, Home Loan Bank Board Chairman M. Danny Wall fired Mowbray as president of the Topeka bank. No reason was given, and Mowbray has declined to discuss it.

During Mowbray's tenure as president of the bank, Karnes was a bank board member with Silverado Chairman Michael Wise, who donated $2,000 to Karnes' 1988 campaign.

As a member of the Senate Banking Committee, Karnes proposed the "Thrift Charter Enhancement Act of 1988," which sought to create incentives for investors to place additional capital in the thrift industry.

Mowbray, who earned $190,000 a year as president of the Topeka Federal Home Loan Bank, gave $2,000 to Karnes' campaign in June 1987. He said he suggested to presidents of the Home Loan Bank system's 12 regional banks that they also contribute.

Last week, Karnes said last week he never discussed Neil Bush or Silverado with Mowbray.

Army, rebels match wits in Sri Lanka

By The Associated Press

KARADIYANARU, Sri Lanka — The barefoot, rifle-toting guerrillas occupying this eastern village hardly seem a match for the crisply uniformed government soldiers down the road with well-oiled machine guns.

But here and elsewhere in Sri Lanka, the Tamil Tiger rebels — many of them only teen-agers — are engaging the army in a long and savage civil war.

"Step by step we will defeat the army," said a Tiger commander who uses the name Newton. That seems unlikely, in the view of observers and Western diplomats. But the army also seems incapable of beating the ragtag guerrillas.

In the north, the government launched a major offensive last week to relieve Jaffna Fort, a 300-year-old colonial outpost besieged by the rebels for 10 weeks.

After initial gains, the advance bogged down under heavy rebel mortar fire and machine-gun fusillades from bunkers, the government said.

On Sunday, military officials said, troops overran the guerrillas after a three-hour battle on Mandativu Island, a stepping stone to the star-shaped fortress.

But army troops have failed to meet their aim of reaching the trapped 250-man garrison in the fort, the government's strongest outpost on the rebel-controlled Jaffna Peninsula.

On the eastern front, the guerrillas have once again yielded the main towns and most of the roads to the army. They have faded into the jungles and the villages from where they have launched hit-and-run raids and mined roads for the past seven years.

Newton, asked about his tactical objectives, had a simple answer. "We are going to kill a large number of army," he said.

Newton and two other Tiger commanders, known as Karikalan and Nithi, spoke in a bare room in the dusty village of Karadiyanaru, on the main road leading to Batticaloa, 170 miles southeast of Jaffna.

Earlier, government officials had claimed all three had been killed.

The rebels were contacted by walkie-talkie from a checkpoint manned by a dozen barefoot teenagers who wore fatigue shirts and ammunition belts, stuffed with rifle clips, grenades and a toothbrush — for cleaning weapons.

The civil war erupted in 1983 over Tamil complaints that they were suppressed by the Sinhalese, who comprise 75 percent of the population and control the government. Tamils make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people.

The Tigers, who demand independence for their ethnic minority, are the only Tamil group continuing the fight. Others gave up in 1987 and agreed to negotiate for an autonomous region in the north and east.

After a 13-month cease-fire, the Tigers resumed the war June 11, by storming 30 police and army barracks in the east.

Villagers in Karadiyanaru appeared unhappy over the presence of the rebels. Food is scarce, commerce has stopped and the area is virtually cut off from the rest of the region. Army patrols occasionally come through, firing into roadside homes.

"All the poor people in this area get no help from the government or from anyone else," said one village elder.

An army officer commanding a checkpoint 12 miles to the west of the village claimed only about 100 Tigers were scattered in the bush, and the rest had fled to the north.

The army checkpoint had four small armored vehicles, and the troops looked sharp and well-trained.

Newton, asked whether his forces were retreating, only laughed. About 15 Tigers were seen in and near the village.

The Tigers' heaviest weapons are mortars, and most equipment is stolen or stripped from the corpses of army casualties. Newton proudly displayed a homemade mortar from a secret armory.

1990 Collegian named 5 Star All-American

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

The Associated Collegiate Press recently honored the Kansas State Collegian newspaper with a Five Star All-American rating.

The Collegian has received the All-American rating every semester since the 1978-79 school year. The spring 1990 newspaper was awarded marks of distinction in coverage and content, writing and editing, design, opinion content and photography, art and graphics.

"The spring staff was one of the best I've had the privilege of advising," said Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications and adviser for the Collegian. "I think the spring design overhaul catapulted the Collegian to the top in this competition. The design overhaul was a gutsy thing to do. It's something we don't usually do in January."

"The Five Star All-American rating is proof of last spring's high-caliber staff," said spring 1990 editor, Erwin Seba, senior in journalism and mass communications. "The Collegian staff always strives to meet professional standards, and they accept nothing but the best.

"One of the things the judges especially complimented, in addition to our traditional strengths in news reporting and photography, was the new design and series reporting," Seba said.

Seba and Johnson both credit Catherine Doud, spring 1990 assistant managing editor, with organizing many of the design changes.

"Cathy had a unique background which allowed her to lead the design team," Johnson said. "She was a former advertising manager and editor for the Collegian as well as an art major. Erwin saw fit to use her talents in a very appropiate way.

"Advertising played an important part in our rating," Johnson said. "We couldn't have a newspaper without ads.

"Something I'll always remember about the spring staff is their coverage of cultural and ethnic groups," Johnson said. "We weren't a white-bread newspaper, and I'm proud of the students that put it together."

The Collegian is now entered in the Associated Collegiate Press' Pacemaker competition. The top 10 percent of college newspapers receive All-American ratings, Johnson said. The top 3 percent go on to win the prestigious Pacemaker award.

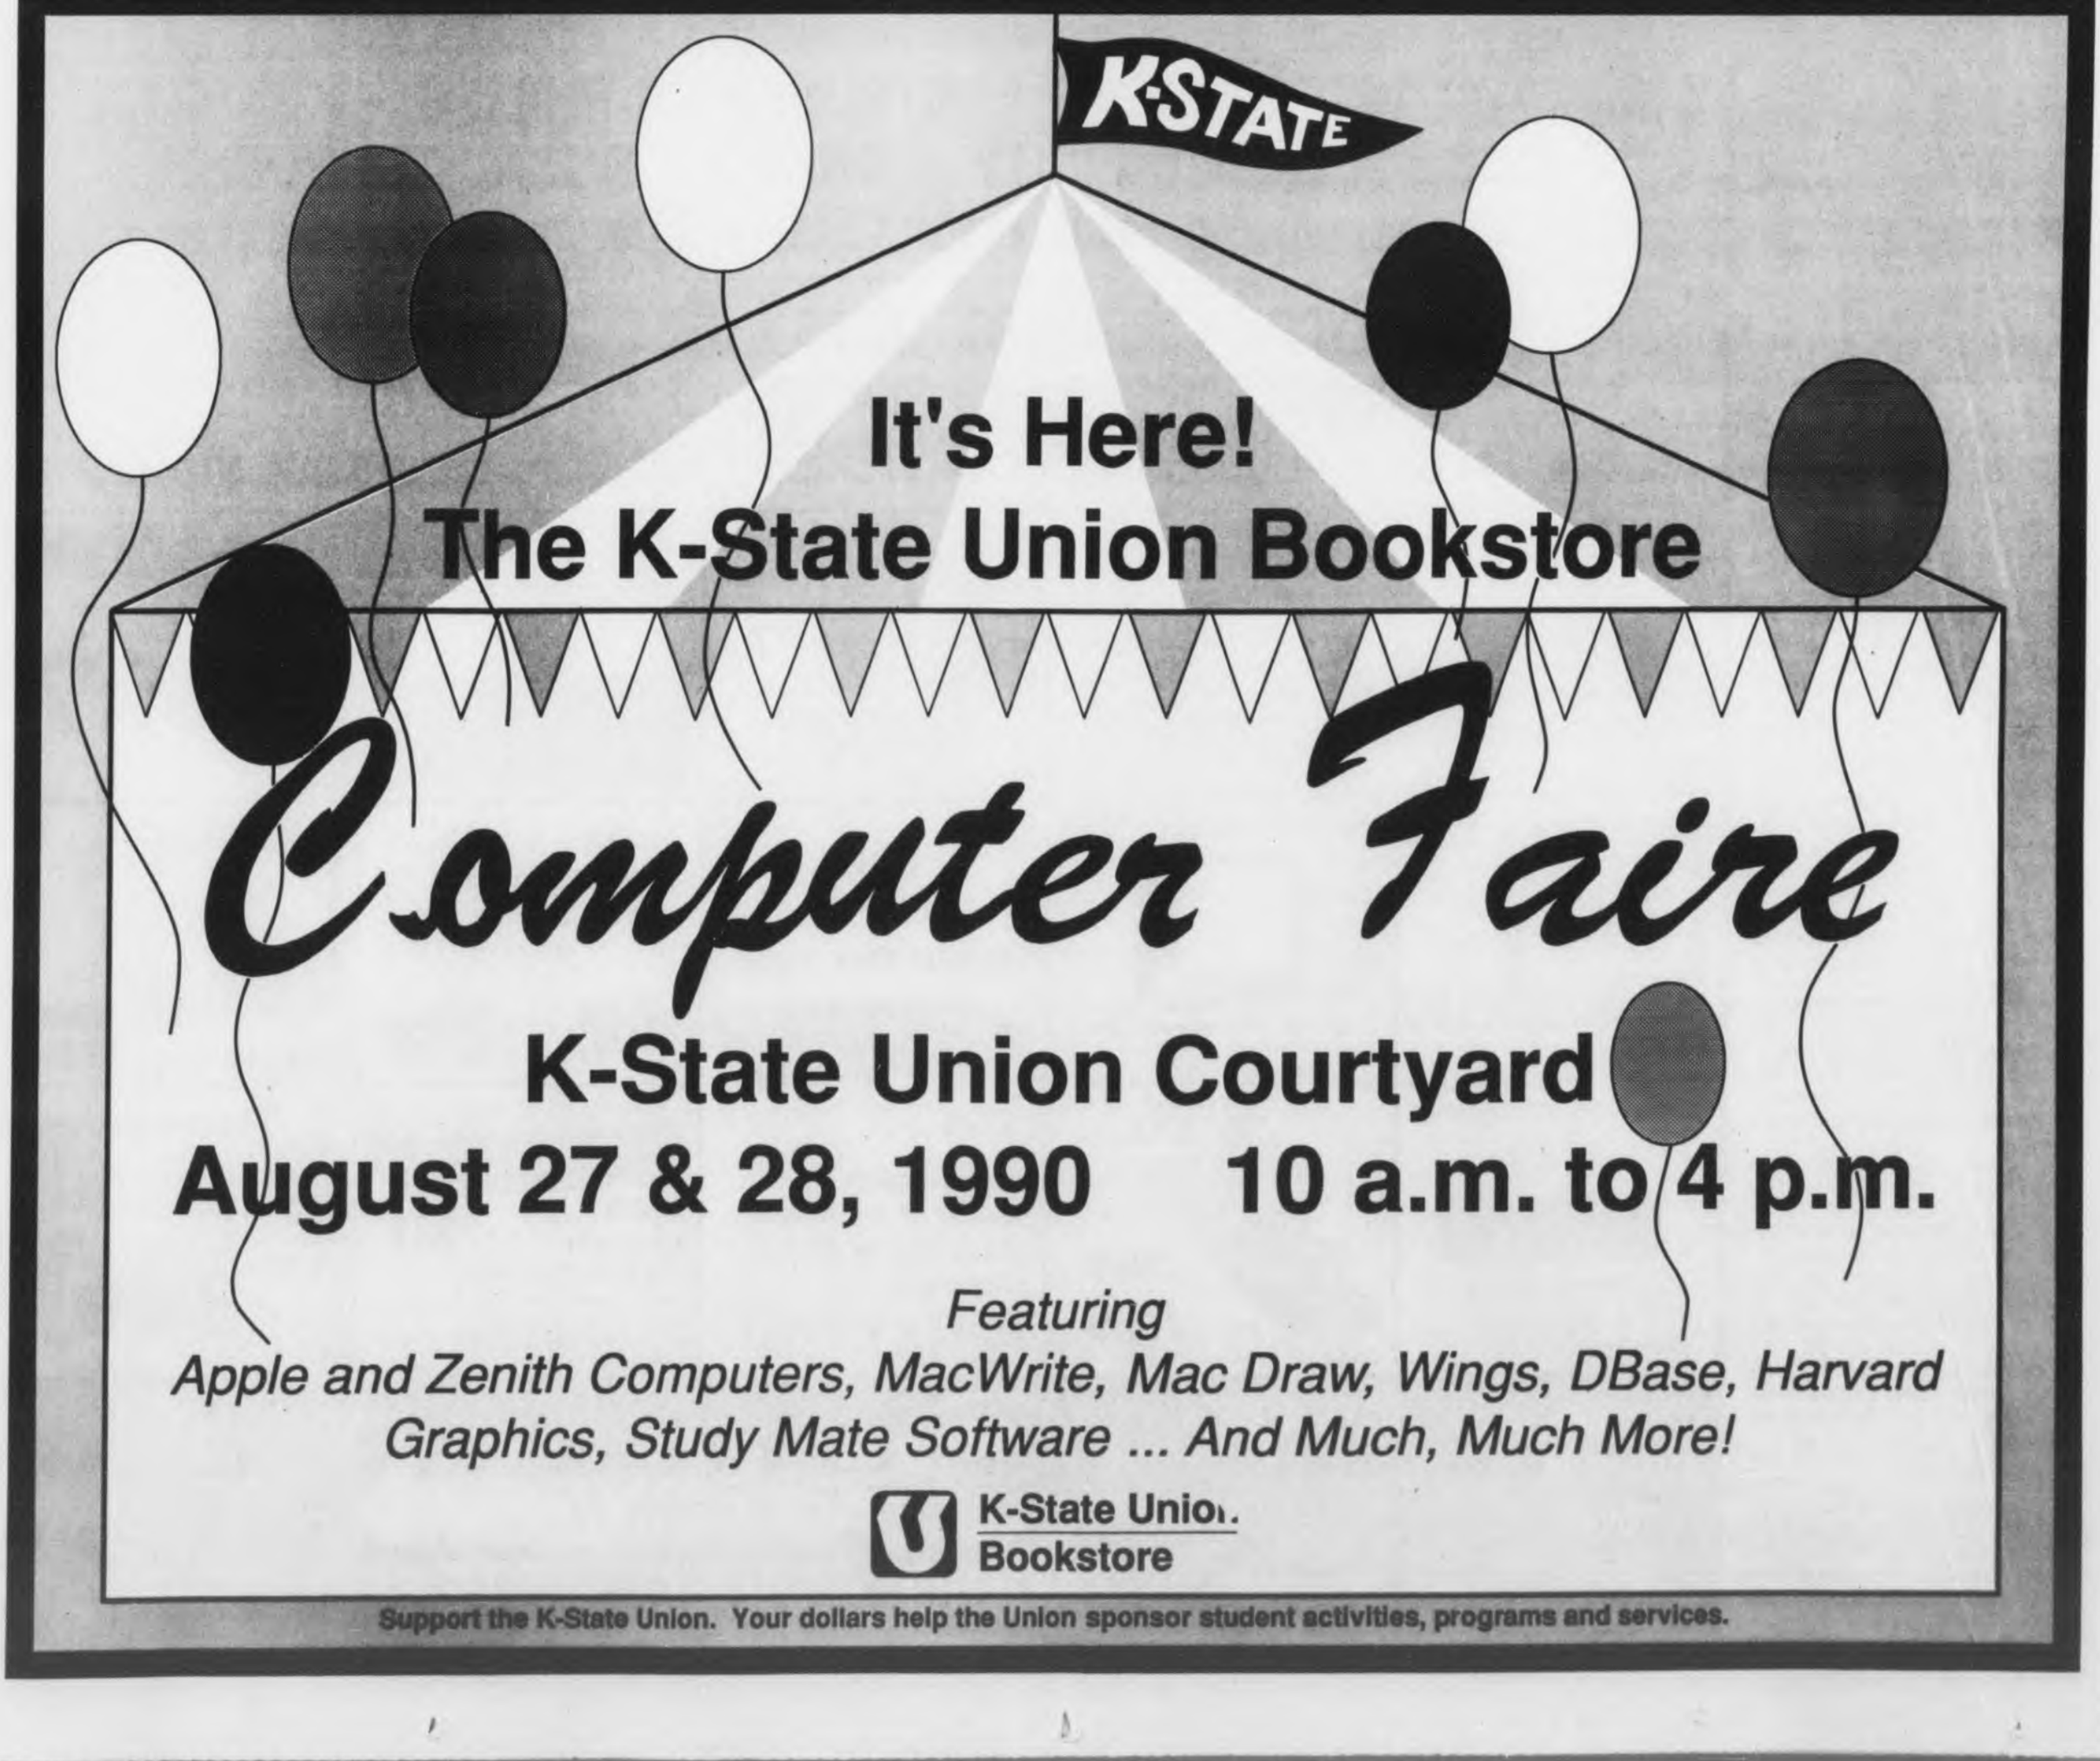
The TI-68.
The engineering calculator designed to handle tough technical problems.

The further you go in engineering, math or other technical courses, the more you need a scientific calculator that speeds you through complex problems. With 254 powerful advanced scientific functions, the TI-68 from Texas Instruments is both a smart choice and an exceptional value.

The TI-68 easily solves up to five simultaneous equations with real or complex coefficients. It evaluates 40 complex number functions. It allows polar and rectangular forms for entries and results.

A convenient last equation replay feature lets you check your answers without re-entering your equations. Formula programming provides up to 440 program steps for as many as 12 user-generated formulas.

You can perform operations in four number bases, one and two-variable statistics, and Boolean logic operations. And, the polynomial root finder calculates real and complex roots of quadratic, cubic, and quartic equations.



Only the TI-68 delivers so much functionality, value and ease in one compact, advanced scientific tool.

German merger support waning; Polls show majority favor unity

By The Associated Press

LEIPZIG, East Germany — East Germany is about to disappear, to be swallowed up by its rich western neighbor, and the universal enthusiasm of a few months ago has waned.

Polls say the vast majority of East Germans favor unification, which is barely a month away. But appearances don't always reinforce that conclusion.

The "We are one people" banners that hung from trees, factories and homes during the pro-unity frenzy of early 1990 are gone.

There are no cheering crowds and no convoys of motorists blasting their horns in anticipation of full unification on Oct. 3.

Reality has set in, especially since the economic merger officially began in July. The issue foremost in the minds of East Germans is how to tackle the huge challenges facing them as their crumbling economy is absorbed by West Germany.

Some show a decided lack of eagerness for unity, especially in Leipzig, birthplace of the uprising that ended 40 years of Stalinist rule less than a year ago.

"Maybe the GDR (East Germany) could have survived as a newly democratized country," said Maria Chudoba, who tends bar at the Cappuccino cafe in Leipzig. "But now it's too late to turn back."

Heinz Weisse, 74, and his 70-year-old wife, Gertrud, loading bales of hay onto a cart outside Weimar, said they wouldn't have minded seeing East Germany continue as a democracy.

"We're happy about unity, but it was not a necessary development," said Weisse, a retired hairdresser. "There's a good side and bad side to everything."

He said he and his wife had a relatively good life even under communism and, as pensioners, had been allowed to travel outside the country.

"We had our little house here, and we were born here, so we always came back," Weisse said.

Most East Germans have come to realize unification will not be an overnight cure for such problems as the high unemployment brought on by the July 1 economic union.

"We had our celebrations last year when the Berlin Wall came down," said Gisela Oswald, a 63-year-old retired opera singer in Weimar, an East German cultural center.

"We're glad unity is coming, but we've got to get to work now on some important problems, like putting the economy in order," Oswald said.

East German cities are decaying, the bottom has dropped out of industrial production and unemployment is soaring.

Leipzig has a desperate housing shortage, crumbling public and commercial buildings and an antiquated sewerage system.

"Prostitution will come with the joblessness because people need money," said Peter Fernau, chief of detectives in Bitterfeld, an industrial city. "We're also worried about heroin and the possible appearance of criminal gangs. There will be totally new dimensions to crime."

West Germany's legal system will be extended to the East, bringing in an entirely new code of laws.

"My officers are going to have to learn, learn, learn," Fernau said.

Many East Germans fear West Germans will make all the decisions about their future.

A recent poll by the West German magazine Stern indicated 88 percent of East Germans support unification, but 70 percent were disappointed by how it has been managed. The process has been largely orchestrated by Helmut Kohl, West Germany's chancellor.

East Germans will be in stiff competition with West Germans for jobs and business opportunities.

Office a 'lifesaver' in times of crisis

By Amy Cox
Collegian Staff

Whether it is an unfair grade or a death in the family, students are not alone when they deal with problems that affect their academic careers.

Susan Scott and Bernard Franklin are advisers with the Dean of Student Life Office, and many times, lifesavers for students.

Scott said the word crisis is not stressed. Rather, a student in a difficult situation is encouraged to contact the dean's office.

"We tailor ourselves to fit the needs at the time. We can work closely with the family or step back, whatever makes them comfortable," she said.

The office has assisted 400 to 500 students per semester, Scott said. She said she anticipates that number to increase with the addition of Franklin's full-time position.

"We may not be the first place a student thinks to contact in a time of need, but eventually we will be notified through a dormitory resident assistant or a hospital," Scott said.

The function of the Office of the Dean of Student Life has changed over the years. "At first we were the parent away from home enforcing curfews and visitation rules, but we have moved from that to more of a social worker," said Scott.

The same confidentiality rules of a professional therapist or lawyer apply, enabling a student to be open without the worry of broken trust. If there is a problem too large for the advisers to handle, they can direct the student to the proper community resources.

"Part of K-State's appeal is a large campus with a small-campus atmosphere. We are here to promote that so students realize it is not an unfeeling institution, but a human one," Scott said.

The human aspect is much more visible when an entire group of students is affected. Scott said that the Tiananmen Square incident was a time of tension for Chinese students.

Inventive bands offer alternative

By Rod Gillespie
Collegian Reviewer

With the arrival of the fall semester and mind-boggling academic activities, it's time once again to refresh our ears with mind-opening sounds from the alternative record bin. To wit: Trip Shakespeare's "Across the Universe" and the Pixies' "Bossanova."

Minnesota-based Trip Shakespeare released "Across the Universe," their most accessable effort to date, earlier this summer. The album provides an excellent platform for the perennial Midwestern underground faves to display their talents to a larger audience.

Trip Shakespeare has an uncanny ability to combine sensitive, meaningful lyrics with exceptional musicianship. Though avid college/alternative radio fans may be disappointed to find that the oft-requested "Toolmaster of Brainerd," from a live EP, is not on "Across the Universe," their disappointment will disappear after the first spin of this disc.

Listeners of DB92 this summer will recognize the powerful backbeat and soulful vocals on "The Crane," a biting indictment of bankers and our credit-crazed society: "When the dogs of the bank are upon me/And they've come to repossess my car/I'll be found at the base of the canyon /I'll be torn from the wreck of the motor."

Lyricist/guitarist Matt Wilson's words are also characterized by a clever sense of humor. Even "Drummer Like Me," a song bemoaning the problems inherent in relationships with musicians, has some whimsically chosen prose: "Not rich and I play the drums/ That's pretty much me/Do you want to throw in with me/I'm ready to play ... Got a friend with a drum machine/He's got rhythm and taste/He says I live in the '70s/And I can be replaced."

The success of last year's "Doolittle" vindicated the Pixies, a band that met so much music industry skepticism in the United States, they initially signed with Britain's 4AD label. Any remaining doubt will evaporate with their superb third release, "Bossanova."

The Pixies are a band that started out well enough, and they just keep improving. Their growth and maturity is evident on "Bossanova." It doesn't hold any surprises — listeners familiar to the Pixies will note the trademark brittle, melodic guitar lines interwoven with slabs of sonic crunch, quirky vocals and dry, throbbing drumbeats. The Pixies are so unique that their newest album doesn't have to be a radical departure from their previous work to inspire a youthful naivete in the listener.

In a confident and self-assured manner, "Bossanova" sustains the high energy of the Pixies' earlier music. The powerful instrumental "Cecilia Ann" sets an upbeat tone for the rest of the album — de-

Strong Complex modernization nears completion

By Tomari Quinn
Managing Editor

Construction continues at the Strong Complex, and officials hope to have most of the work completed within three to six weeks.

Renovations on Van Zile Hall, which is included in Strong Complex with Putnam and Boyd halls on the northeast corner of campus, began in fall 1989. About 60 residents live in Van Zile while Putnam and Boyd each house about 220 students.

When renovations are completed, two tunnels will connect Putnam and Boyd to Van Zile and all rooms in the Strong Complex will have air conditioning. A student store and a parking facility north of the hall will be added to Van Zile during the school year.

Richard Brenner, assistant maintenance superintendent, said the students' rooms in Van Zile are completed.

"The lobby is temporarily done — they've got to do a lot of touch-up," he said.

Work still needing to be done, Brenner said, are the sidewalks around the building, the Boyd and Putnam links, some outside lights and inside furnishing.

"In Boyd and Putnam, the air conditioning is not operational yet, but it is on in Van Zile," he said. "Also, the basement is not finished yet and is closed off to the public."

R.J. Reissig, sophomore in architecture and design and Putnam resident, said the construction hasn't caused much of a problem for the residents.

"It's pretty quiet right now," Reissig said. "The only problem is if you live in Putnam or Boyd and came back expecting air conditioning, and it wasn't ready."

Dining services for Strong Complex residents are not yet available, said John Pence, associate director of Housing and Dining Services.

"They're eating over at Derby (Food Center)," Pence said. "They were supposed to open food service on Monday, but now we're looking at the Tuesday after Labor Day — hopefully."

Pence said members of the Housing Department will meet with the construction company, Building Systems Corporation, on Tuesday and would then have a better timetable on the renovation completions.

"(The construction company) hopes to be done in the next couple of weeks — I don't know if that means three weeks or six weeks," Brenner said. "They worked 20 hours a day to get it ready for people to move in."

Dark horror gripping in Exorcist

Scott convincingly portrays officer

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

From the creator of the original "Exorcist" comes this summer's latest movie sequel, "Exorcist III: 1990."

For heartbeating horror, few match "Exorcist" creator William Peter Blatty. His newest chiller propels the audience into a chain of grisly murders strewn in the path of an aging homicide detective, played by George C. Scott. The doubting Lt. Kinderman must come to grips with the fact that bodily possession not only exists but is the culprit behind the bizarre string of murders.

The complicated and sometimes hard-to-follow plot is full of twists and foreshadowing. The film provides non-stop horror action — just when you think it's safe to relax, another twist leaves you on the edge of your seat.

Father Damien Karras, from the original "Exorcist," is found alive and possessed in a Georgetown hospital. A serial killer executed 15 years before has taken over his body and is seeking a bloody revenge.

Kinderman becomes the killer's source to the press and eventually discovers that the killer has the power to possess other people and make them commit horrifying acts. His faith and family are put at risk as he struggles to set his friend's soul free and destroy the killer.

Unfortunately, the plot loses some of its structure in transition from text to screen and may leave movie audiences feeling a little lost.

As with many sequels, knowledge of the "prequels" may make the film more enjoyable and easier to follow. Seeing "Exorcist" and "Exorcist II" may demystify the plot to a point — though Blatty does a good job of updating the audience with flashbacks.

Movie Review

Blatty uses vivid cinematography to set the dark mood and bring his novel "Legion" to the big screen. The film delivers shock value in the "Exorcist" tradition, though to a lesser extent. The explicit details of some of the murders are explained instead of shown, reducing some of the gore.

George C. Scott is very convincing in the role of Lt. Kinderman, and the dialogue between his character and Father Dyer, portrayed by Ed Flanders, adds a little light-hearted humor to the film. Unfortunately, Father Dyer is killed within the first 15 minutes of the film — and from that point, the terror never ceases.

"Exorcist III: 1990" is a well-written and skillfully directed thriller full of fine performances. The visual imagery conjures up the same eerie mood felt in the original "Exorcist." This is a sequel that is worth seeing. Although the film is very difficult to follow, Blatty has created another horror movie that will leave you covering your eyes — and awaiting his next spine-tingling chiller.

KSDB apologizes for playing song

The Cure's 'Killing an Arab' tune stirs controversy at campus station

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has created some tensions both in Middle East deserts and on K-State radio waves.

KSDB-FM disc jockeys recently played a requested song titled "Killing an Arab," by the The Cure, a British rock'n'roll band.

After the song aired, KSDB received several phone calls complaining about the song's racial overtones.

"The two DJs received the request, found the album with the song on it and played it," said Joe Montgomery, station manager of KSDB-FM. "The DJs were unaware that the song might cause some problems."

After the complaints were made, the radio announcers and Montgomery apologized on-air for playing the selection. A meeting with administrators was also held to decide what other measures should be taken.

Montgomery read the apology over the air and the script was made available for people to hear over the phone. The statement states that KSDB-FM does not purposely play songs to offend any of their listeners and that the title of the song did not properly represent the message behind the lyrics.

Several written apologies were

Kansas meetings should help goal

By Ellen Dayton
Collegian Staff

Leaders of the $100 million Essential Edge Campaign are gearing up for regional meetings as well as the start of the campus fund-raising campaign.

"As campaigns go, we're doing extremely well," said Gary Hellebust, director of corporate and foundation relations for the KSU Foundation.

About $8 million has been contributed since the campaign's kickoff in April, bringing the total raised in the campaign to $60.7 million, he said.

Hellebust said 27 regional meetings are scheduled in Kansas and across the country during the next year. Regional committees made of K-State alumni and friends have been working with the Foundation staff to expand the base of the campaign.

The first regional meeting will be Sept. 13 in Hays, Hellebust said.

"We've had a really good response from volunteers wanting to set up centers and host fund-raisers," he said. "This has been a totally volunteer-driven campaign."

The campus phase of the campaign will start at the end of September, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the Foundation. Students, faculty and staff will be invited to support the campaign through fund-raising organizations within each college and through donations, including voluntary payroll deductions.

"As the whole campaign is set up, the campus campaign will be set up the same way," Dowell said. "The more people involved, the better."

Grain science develops food for space rats

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

Rats in space may sound like something off the screen of a science fiction movie, but K-State's Department of Grain Science and Industry is producing food bars for rats NASA will be sending on the upcoming space missions.

Keith Behnke, associate professor of grain science and industry, said the department made 700 food bars for rats Aug. 7 at the newly-dedicated Extrusion Processing Center. Each bar costs an estimated $35-45.

The bars will be fed to rats that will venture into space in October, said Bonnie Dalton, NASA's payload operations branch chief for Ames Research Center. Rats will go into space again in January.

Because of zero-gravity conditions, Behnke said the bars must have low food disintegration and high nutritional value to keep fecal matter to a minimum.

"NASA develops the formula and sends the powder to us, and we add water, heat and steam," Behnke said. "The mixture is pressed through an extruder which forms and cuts the bars. The bars are cooled and put in moisture barrier packages, and sterilized using gamma radiation."

Behnke said the bars, which are 16 inches long, about one inch thick and 1.5 inches wide, look like huge gummy erasers. They are made of wheat gluten, soy protein isolate, starch, vitamins, oils and sugar.

Because the food bars look like the inside of a candy bar, Behnke said NASA first went to a confectioner to produce them, but the confectioner was unable to meet quantity demands.

NASA then contacted the American Institute of Baking. Wulf Doerry, director of Cereal Technology Research at AIB, said they were contacted in 1988 to coordinate production of the food into bars. AIB subcontracted to the Wenger Corporation in Sabetha. Later Wenger donated a $250,000 extruder to K-State which was used to make the food bars, and production was moved to the Department of Grain Science and Industry.

"Because of the uniqueness of the product, the process took constant supervision," Behnke said. "The mixture can't get too hot or it will blister, but if it is too cold, it will not be strong enough."

Doerry said the process is very labor intensive, and machining and milling it is more expensive than machining steel.

The rats are used in NASA-funded animal experiments for the scientific community, which will provide information to universities and other organizations, Dalton said.

Another reason for animal experiments is the effects of long-term space travel.

"Since the United States is considering sending people to Mars, NASA must consider the long-term effects of space travel on the physiological system because Mars is a 10-month mission," Dalton said.

She said the rats have no problem adjusting to the zero-gravity environment, but, as do humans, they sometimes have a harder time adjusting upon the return to

Iran wins confrontation between U.S., Iraqi forces

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — As Iraq and the United States square off in the Persian Gulf region, Iran is reaping economic and political benefits from the confrontation between two countries it considers its greatest foes.

Since the crisis began Aug. 2, Iran's oil revenues have skyrocketed, Iraq has withdrawn from occupied Iranian territory, and nations that once considered Iran the regional bogeyman are beginning to see Iraq as the main threat.

"The events of the past few weeks have been a godsend" for Iran's president, Hashemi Rafsanjani, an Asian diplomat in Iran said.

An official Iranian source said, "We do find ourselves in a comfortable position. But as a matter of principle, we unequivocally condemn Iraq's invasion of Kuwait."

Both spoke on condition of anonymity in telephone interviews from Tehran.

The embargo on Iraq's oil exports has pushed up oil prices more than 50 percent, boosting Iran's oil revenues by $33 million a day.

Those earnings account for more than 90 percent of Iran's hard currency earnings, badly needed to speed up reconstruction after the August 1988 cease-fire in its war with Iraq.

"The Iranians are producing oil at capacity," said Charles Snow, a political analyst with the Middle East Economic Survey, an oil market newsletter published in Nicosia. "It's really in their interests to keep prices as high as possible."

Mohammad Adeli, head of Iran's Central Bank, last week told Tehran radio that Iran's foreign exchange earnings were up 12 percent over last year.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, anxious to secure his eastern border with Iran while confronting the U.S-led multinational force in Saudi Arabia, agreed to a prisoner exchange and withdrawal from occupied territory.

Iranian officials have called the settlement Iran's "greatest victory" since the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini overthrew Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in 1979 and installed an Islamic Republic.

Many Arab and Western nations, including the United States, backed Iraq in its war with Iran because they feared Khomeini's fundamentalist revolution would spread.

Now "the Iranians feel vindicated," said Shahram Chubin, an Iran specialist with Geneva's Graduate Institute of International Affairs.

"We've benefited from higher oil prices and the peace settlement with Iraq. But it's just as important that other geopolitical realities are also being realized," the Iranian official said.

"Those countries which considered us a threat and threw their weight behind Iraq are reassessing their policies because they realize who the real aggressor is."

Rafsanjani, leader of Iran's so-called pragmatists, has been cautiously moving to improve relations with the West. But many countries, especially the United States, have been wary of Iran's intentions in the region.

Iran has long called for the withdrawal of foreign forces and said security in the gulf was a matter for the region itself, but its calls have gone unheeded by gulf Arab states.

Now that they find themselves threatened by Saddam, there may be "an opening for Iran to act in concert with regional countries," Chubin noted.

Iran offered on Sunday to allow the thousands of foreigners who were trapped in Iraq and Kuwait by Bagdad's invasion to flee across the Iranian border. Turkey and Jordan, who have been receiving the bulk of the evacuees, have threatened to close their borders.

Although it has condemned the Iraqi invasion, Iran has criticized the United States for deploying its forces in Saudi Arabia and the gulf.

"Iran is afraid that the U.S. presence in the region may become long-term," Chubin said. "They want to make sure the foreign military buildup is a U.N. operation, and not a U.S. one."

earth.

Rats are a very good model, Dalton said, because they are close to humans in metabolic structures. For sanitation reasons, NASA needed a food which would be more desirable in zero gravity than the food previously used.

"The new food, which K-State is producing, only has one-seventh the amount of crumbing as the food used previously," Dalton said.

Behnke said bars will be made as NASA needs them. The amount and when they are needed fluctuates along with space launch scheduling.

Paul Neumann, research assistant of grain science and industry, said, "K-State won't get rich from this project, but it's good experience."

The office was able to facilitate information on families and finances.

The office is anticipating the possibility of aiding another large group of students if the crisis in the Middle East continues. Scott said that if students in the military reserves were mobilized a Board of Regents policy would be established and the housing department would keep a room reserved for those students.

"We are a safety-net service so that no student falls through the cracks," Scott said.

Trip Shakespeare and the Pixies are unusually inventive bands that stand out like islands of originality in the sea of bland techno-trash pop currently inundating campus radio. Both "Across the Universe" and "Bossanova" are highly recommended.

larly expressed interest in raising money for Farrell Library.

"Students have taken on the library as a pet project," Johnson said. "It's a critical need on campus and something that's never really had to raise its own funds before.

"We want to make sure the library receives as much money as possible," he said. "We're also trying to build a support base for the library to use to raise funds in the future."

ions represented at the hearing, said current policy adversely affects the long-term employee.

Dale Clark of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees said the extra cost of about $8,000 would be worth the added productivity gained from the program.

Also during the meeting, Sunset Zoo officials announced a special promotion called "Dinamation," an international exhibit that will be shown in Manhattan from September to December.

The exhibit will begin at the Sears opening at Manhattan Town Center Sept. 19.

Designed for children, the exhibit will include robotic dinosaurs of the future. Also featured is a 20-foot time tunnel, showing the continents of the earth shifting and changing over the next 50 million years. Television monitors will show continually-playing educational videos, and souvenirs will be sold.

The exhibit is sponsored by Manhattan Town Center, and all proceeds will go to the zoo, said Don Wixom, zoo director.

sent to certain individuals and to the Arab Student Association, Montgomery said.

"We do not play indecent or obscene music, and we don't try to offend our listeners," he said. "We are now increasing our sensitivity to our listeners. Currently we have taken the song off the air. However, I cannot guarantee that the song will never be played again."

Even though the song was not intentionally played to harm or hurt ones feelings, the circumstances in the Middle East increased the emotions of the listeners and the effects of the song were greater.

"Regardless of one's personal views on what is taking place in the Middle East, sensitivity must be shown to the people of Arab descent in this country who have nothing to do with the bellicose state of affairs there," said Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs. "The playing of songs with such lyrics as 'killing an Arab' or 'bomb Iraq' is inexcusable, and the Manhattan community, with its diverse population groups, cannot afford such insensitivity."

KSDB-FM radio announcers work on a voluntary basis and are usually radio-television majors. Some of the announcers are high school students, soldiers and members of the Manhattan community, however.

Beirut radio reports hostages to be freed

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A Beirut radio station said Monday that Anglican church envoy Terry Waite would be the next hostage to be freed by pro-Iranian kidnappers in Lebanon.

The communist-run Voice of the People also said all six American hostages would be freed once Iran's frozen assets in the United States are released.

The station, respected for its balanced reporting and investigative work, said it drew the conclusions from interviews with Iranian and Syrian officials as well as Shiite Moslem leaders after the release of five Western hostages in the past four months.

The latest to be freed was Irish teacher Brian Keenan, who was set free Friday and is undergoing medical tests in a Dublin hospital.

The first two were Americans Robert Polhill and Frank Reed, freed 10 days apart in April.

Swiss orthopedic specialists of the International Committee of the Red Cross, Emanuel Christen and Elio Erriquez, were released respectively Aug. 8 and 13 after 10 months in captivity.

"Sources familiar with the hostage issue are certain that Terry Waite is the next in line for freedom after Keenan," the station said in a 15-minute evaluation of the hostage issue.

Waite disappeared after leaving a west Beirut hotel Jan. 20, 1987 for a rendezvous with Islamic Jihad, a group that claims to hold American hostages Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland.

No group has claimed holding the 51-year-old Englishman, from Styal in Cheshire, and none of the freed hostages has mentioned seeing him in captivity.

Several Lebanese Shiite leaders lately asserted that Waite was alive and well, which suggests he is being held separately from the 12 other hostages in Lebanon.

Keenan said upon his release that he had seen Anderson and British journalist John McCarthy in captivity and that both of them were well.

Voice of the People quoted an unnamed source close to the Iranian Embassy in Beirut as saying Waite and other European hostages held in Lebanon would benefit from "positive stands lately taken by France and Britain toward Iran." It did not elaborate.

France in July pardoned and freed from prison five members of a pro-Iranian assassination team. The French Foreign Ministry said the release of the Swiss captives may have been a result of that.

Britain has recently distanced itself from "The Satanic Verses," a novel by British author Salman Rushdie who is under an Iranian death order for writing the book.

There are four Britons, two West Germans and an Italian in addition to the six Americans held in Lebanon.

The station quoted the unnamed source as saying "the solution of the question of Iranian frozen assets in the United States will promptly lead to the termination of the plight of the American hostages in Lebanon."

The radio station did not attempt to explain the discrepancy between what its anonymous source and the statement by Asfahanian.

Resuming classes more than books

By Steve Franzen
Campus Editor

The first day of classes for K-Staters meant more this year than just books, papers and syllabi.

This year's first day meant freebies, a chance at a career in television soap operas and a new car.

Campusfest '90, which occupied the north lawn of the K-State Union, offered all this and more to students.

"This is the best first day of school I've had since I've been here," said Donnell Dantzler, junior in electrical engineering.

Five large white tents housing games, free samples and movie clips covered the back of the Union. The promotional event was sponsored by the Union and its bookstore.

"This is a welcome back, goodwill-type of thing between the Union, the bookstore and students," said Bonnie O'Neill-Totin, coordinator of Campusfest.

O'Neill-Totin is the national sales manager for MarketSource Corporation in New Jersey, which has put together the nationwide campaign targeted at college campuses.

She said the event allows student unions to showcase and promote the products they sell daily.

"The best type of advertising is to put it in the students' hands and show them that it is a good product," she said.

O'Neill-Totin said she was covering 50 Campusfest dates from Delaware to California through November.

One of the main attractions of the Campusfest was housed in the CBS-TV tent, where her husband, Bill, works.

His tent was equipped with numerous TV monitors, video equipment and a stage. On the stage, students were asked to act out a scene from the soap opera, "The Young and the Restless." Each acting session was taped, and the videotape was given to the students.

"You guys are hams, you got right up there," said Chris Galli, the cameraman for the skits.

Galli said the tent had already given away 60-70 tapes by 1 p.m. He said that was more than twice as Abortion still hot topic as elections near

Hurt opposes Finney's stance

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Democratic gubernatorial nominee Joan Finney's vocal opposition to abortion is the cause for soul-searching for the two local Democratic incumbents to the Kansas House.

Both Reps. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, and Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said they strongly disagree with the position of the Democratic ticket on abortion and have expressed their concerns to Finney.

Hurt said she could not support the ticket now because of the abortion issue.

"I need reassurance. Even though her personal views are anti-abortion, she is interested in protecting the rights of individuals as a government official," Hurt said.

She said this reassurance could be in the form of public announcement from Finney of support for abortion as public policy.

Hurt said she expects party leaders and pro-choice organizations to lobby Finney in an attempt to change her stance on the issue.

The strong anti-abortion stance could be potentially harmful to the Democratic ticket, she said.

"I don't think there are enough anti-choice votes to swing an election if pro-choice forces vote in force," Hurt said.

Hochhauser said although she suppports the ticket, she would like to see Finney's abortion stance changed.

"To be fair to all the viewpoints on the issue requires more tolerance," she said. "I would like to see her views tempered."

Hochhauser said she empathizes with Finney's views on education, higher education, family and women's issues, so she will support the ticket in the general election.

Hochhauser said judging how Kansas voters will react to Finney's stance in November will be difficult, partly because pro-choice voters may be leary of Gov. Mike Hayden's record on abortion.

"Hayden was endorsed by anti-abortion forces in 1988," she said. "Then he did a survey and changed his views."

Catholic politicians under fire; Loyalty to church questioned

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

While abortion has always been a controversial issue, recently it has become even touchier for Catholic politicians.

Catholic politicians who publicly support abortion rights have found their loyalty to the Church questioned.

The controversy flared initially when Cardinal John O'Connor, in a recent essay on abortion, raised the possibility of excommunication for Catholic politicians who supported abortion rights.

Catholics who are excommunicated can no longer receive sacraments such as Holy Communion and last rites.

O'Connor wrote that "Catholics are perceived not only as treating church teaching on abortion with contempt, but helping to multiply abortions by advocating legislation supporting abortion or by making public funds available for abortion. Bishops may decide that, for the common good, such Catholics must be warned they are at risk of excommunication.

"If such actions persist, bishops may consider excommunication the only option."

Later O'Connor said he was speaking of excommunication only in an abstract sense and had not meant to threaten any politicians.

Whether they feel threatened or not, many Catholic politicians have reaffirmed their stands on abortion.

Nancy Malir, press secretary for Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kansas, said Slattery is Catholic and has voted for federal funds to help protect mothers' lives.

Although Slattery is personally against abortions, his staff director, Howard Bauleke, said he has a different view on governmental legislation concerning them.

"Jim is Catholic and is personally opposed to abortion," Bauleke said. "But not all people share his views. He feels that any attempt by government to restrict availability of abortion prior to viability is unworkable public policy."

Rev. Norbert Dlabal, pastor of St. Isidore Chapel, said the issue of excommunication based on political ideology comes down to separation of church and state, one of the concepts our government is based on.

"No one should be elected based on their religion," said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan. "They should be elected on their qualifications and their willingness to represent the majority. Whether they are Catholic or not should never enter into the picture.

"I personally am Lutheran," she said, "but that shouldn't affect the laws I help pass or not pass while I am in office. I represent the majority. My religion has nothing to do with it."

Malir agreed.

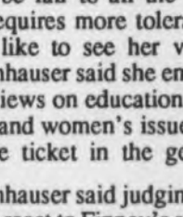
"Jim Slattery has a strong faith in the Bathroom incident triggers search by campus police

By Steve Franzen
Campus Editor

The K-State Police have posted a sketch and information sheet on bulletin boards on campus in order to gain more information about an incident that occurred last Friday on campus, said Investigator Richard Herrman.



A female student employee reported encountering a naked male in the first-floor women's restroom in Bluemont Hall at 4 p.m. Friday.

"What we are doing is alerting the females on campus about what happened," Herrman said. "We would like to find out who it is and what he is up to."

Herrman sketched the composite Monday from the student's recollection with the help of a police kit. The student has chosen to remain anonymous.

"She would feel more comfortable without it," he said of the clerk's plea for anonymity.

Herrman said the suspect is thought to be a white male, 20-22 years of age and with sandy-blond hair. He is described as having a medium build and medium complexion. According to the student's description, his hair is about one inch longer on the sides than the top, and his part is on the left.

Herrman said the student said she entered the bathroom and heard heavy breathing, but the sounds stopped abruptly. She entered a stall and heard the breathing again. He said she glanced towards the sound, and saw a naked male looking up at her from the floor of the next stall. She left the restroom immediately, returned to her office and called the campus police.

According to campus police logs, the call was received at 4:05 p.m., and two campus police officers arrived at the scene at 4:10 p.m.

The officers searched the restroom and surrounding areas, but found no one and did not call for back-up.

"The majority of these people are harmless, but I can't guarantee anyone that," Herrman said.

K-State officials have been formally notified by the Bureau of Air and Waste Management that the University's license to store hazardous waste materials has been relinquished.

The University was granted an interim storage permit in 1980 by the bureau, which allowed hazardous wastes to be accumulated and stored at one location pending shipment offsite for treatment or disposal, said John Lambert, director of the department of public safety. The permit costs about $2,000 a year.

A plan was submitted by the department of public safety to close the storage location on Nov. 15, 1984, and became classified as a generator facility only. The reclassification allowed the University to save money on hauling the waste away and time in storing the materials. The measures also ensure the safety of the campus and Manhattan community, Lambert said.

The facility was officially closed Dec. 2, 1986. Now, hazardous waste materials are required to be removed from campus within 90 days, he said.

"Hazardous waste is a legal term," said Steve Galitzer, hazardous waste coordinator. "It is nothing more than old chemicals. Most of the chemicals are no more hazardous than what is found in a shop or laboratory."

Chemicals are picked up by the department and determined to be waste or not by characteristics set by the Environmental Protection Agency, he said.

About half of the chemicals that the department picks up are recycled and re-used on campus, Galitzer said.

Chemicals that cannot be re-used are temporarily placed in a storage site north of the football stadium until they are picked up by the Chemical Waste Management and taken away for proper disposal, Lambert said.

"The waste is handled by EPA carriers and incinerated so it doesn't get back into the environment," he said.

It costs $700 per drum to ship the waste, Lambert said. One shipment can run from $5,000 to $23,000, depending on campus activities.

Hazardous waste at K-State is comprised of used or old chemicals, paints and solvents from facilities, ink from student publications and waste from experiments and research projects.

"Nothing has really changed," Lambert said. "For the past 10 years, K-State has routinely had a licensed EPA carrier remove hazardous materials on campus on a long-term basis, and this notification requires the materials to be removed from campus within 90 days.

Germanies clash over abortion

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl's party declared Monday that an abortion dispute must not be allowed to torpedo a treaty merging the two Germanys' laws.

"The treaty must not fail for any reason," said Volker Ruehe, general secretary of Kohl's Christian Democrats. "Agreement is needed in the next few days."

The opposition Social Democrats have threatened to scuttle the treaty if Kohl goes ahead with a decision to extend West Germany's abortion restrictions to East German turf. Kohl and top members of his coalition met into Monday's early morning hours with Social Democrat leaders to discuss the abortion dispute. A deadlock persisted, and another meeting was set for Wednesday.

Rescuers recover 69 bodies

DOBRNJA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Rescuers Monday recovered the bodies of 69 coal miners and tunneled toward about 100 others trapped by an explosion, although there was no sign they were alive.

Yugoslavia's federal trade union demanded that all those responsible for the accident, including local officials and government ministers, resign. The cause of what would be Yugoslavia's worst mining accident has not been determined, but the investigation is focusing on an accumulation of coal dust or methane gas.

Early confirmation unlikely

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court will be one justice short when it begins its new term Oct. 1 because there is not enough time before then for nominee David Souter to win Senate confirmation, sources said Monday.

"It's a matter of timing," said a Senate Judiciary Committee aide who requested anonymity.

The aide said the earliest date for a committee vote on Souter's nomination would be Sept. 27, a full two weeks after the Sept. 13 start of his confirmation hearings.

Souter was nominated to replace Justice William J. Brennan, who resigned last month, citing health reasons.

If all goes smoothly for the judge from New Hampshire, his nomination likely will reach the full Senate the week of Oct. 1 or Oct. 8.

Hayden requests debate tour

TOPEKA (AP) — If Republican Gov. Mike Hayden has his way, he will share the stage a lot with State Treasurer Joan Finney, his Democratic opponent for governor in the general election campaign this fall.

"We would like to debate her as often as we can," Hayden told reporters today during an impromptu news conference while signing routine proclamations. "We don't necessarily see that as an advantage to us."

Hayden also said he has no intention of changing his sometimes abrasive campaign style, despite advice to the contrary from GOP State Chairwoman Rochelle Chronister.

His hard-hitting method of campaigning has worked in the past, Hayden said, and he sees no reason why it should not work in this campaign.

"Each of us has to prove we have the mettle," he said. "Mrs. Finney should be expected to answer the tough questions just like any other candidate."

KU revises assessment test

LAWRENCE (AP) — Educators at the University of Kansas are developing an assessment test reflecting the state's new standards for mathematics instruction.

The KU School of Education has a $210,000 Kansas Department of Education grant to develop and administer the test, which will be given in late March or early April to third-, seventh- and 10th-grade students.

In the past, students were tested annually for minimum math competency, but stiffer competition means meeting minimums may not be enough, said John Poggio, KU's associate dean of education.

Farm bill seen as disaster

WICHITA (AP) — The 1990 farm bill being considered by Congress is a silent disaster waiting to engulf rural America, according to a National Farmers Union analyst.

"If I was a rural banker or a rural merchant in America, I'd be so scared I'd be trying to get out of business and get out of town," Howard Lyman said Monday.

Lyman and other National Farmers Union staff members are touring the country trying to warn people about the devastation they believe is approaching.

"The difficulty is people don't want to believe it," Lyman said. "They want to think the hard times are behind us. The numbers are just horrendous, but nobody wants to believe it."

Wefald withdraws from history course

Busy meeting schedule prevents President from keeping consistant class schedule

By Carrie Miller
Collegian Staff

Students who signed up last spring to take HIST 531, Topics in American History since 1945, from President Jon Wefald, have been informed he will not teach the class.

Wefald decided not to teach the class shortly after his name was printed in the line schedule.

"I love to read and teach history, but with the Essential Edge Campaign this fall, I'll be attending at least 20 regional and national meetings. That would have made teaching the class difficult," Wefald said.

Wefald has been a tenured professor in the history department since July 1986 but has yet to teach a class. The last time he taught an American history class was nine years ago when he was the president of Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn.

Although Wefald cited time constraints as his only reason for dropping the class, Thomas Van Sant, who would have been the graduate teaching assistant for the class, said he believed Wefald had a deeper concern.

"He was concerned that he'd not have the academic freedom to express his own opinions, as they could be interpreted as the position of the University," Van Sant said. "History and political science teachers try to stay neutral, but biases show through. That could cause him some problems in the administrative side of his job."

One of Wefald's main objectives as president is fund raising, which requires him to act as the corporate head of a multi-million dollar operation, Van Sant said.

"If the son or daughter of a state legislator attended Wefald's history lecture, which criticized the Bush administration's position in the Middle East, and that son or daughter reported that back to their parent, it could hurt K-State's chances for funding," Van Sant said. "This type of problem was one of the concerns Wefald expressed to me.

"I don't think it's possible to teach this course with that concern," he said.

Wefald also thought it might appear strange that an administrator with so much fund raising to do had time to teach a University course, Van Sant said.

"Not to belittle the role of the professors at this University, but for Wefald to teach this class would be like Lee Iacocca going to work on the assembly line at an auto plant," Van Sant said. "The workers would certainly think it was odd that the head of this huge corporation was putting together cars."

Van Sant said that same question can be asked of other full-time administrators who have the time to prepare and teach classes during the week.

"The crux of the question is 'Can you be an effective administrator and instructor at the same time?' and I don't think you can," Van Sant said.

Wefald said he would like to teach a class in the next one to two years.

Public grows anxious in Bush waiting game

Fort Riley public affairs officials nervously said they had "nothing to comment on" today despite rampant rumors of soldiers of the 1st Division shipping out for Saudi Arabia. That, of course, is neither a denial nor a confirmation, which is sure to send the Junction City merchants into a tizzy.

But at the beginning of this spiraling impasse President Bush said what has become the theme to this year's world party.

"Just wait and see."

Well we've waited. And waited and waited and waited ...

But what have we seen?

We've seen the honorable president of God's chosen guardians of freedom unwilling to be held hostage in the White House and being forced to fish off the coast of Maine and shave his golf game down to 54 minutes.

We've seen another president who's deluded into thinking he's God's chosen, visiting what he called his guests who seemed awfully jittery and nervous. Our free press tells us that the president is sick and obviously insane.

We've seen handsome, daring anchorbeings risking life and limb on aircraft carriers asking young soldiers if they're ready to die for the security of their nation's oil. Then the networks promise footage of "the latest propaganda" (wink, wink) "fresh from the insane, diabolical, sick, perverted, twisted, appalling mind of Saddam Hussein, right after these messages."

But it means nothing, and we know less than nothing.

Despite all the television coverage and ratings hype by the networks, we are left in the biggest media brownout since Tiananmen Square. And though six months ago the world was ushering in a new era of peace, we have taken a dark turn down a seemingly endless twisted path of hate, paranoia and, quite possibly, war.

Why is the world so dead-set against President Saddam Hussein, and why is everything so hush-hush?

Hussein has been compared to everyone's favorite Lord of Evil, Adolf Hitler. The same people compare the world's response to Iraq's imperialism as nothing short of an Allied effort. It almost makes World War III seem appealing, maybe even romantic.

Although the world has rallied around these economic sanctions against Iraq for now, it's simply a honeymoon period. It's doubtful the other freedom-loving nations will hang tough with us mule-headed Americans. They'll give up. And it will be up to us to secure our oil interests. Oh. And our freedom, too.

The hell of it is this: We'll never trust Hussein again. Sure, he says he has no plans of invading Saudi Arabia, but if the world's collective memory serves it correctly, he said that about a little suburb of Iraq that used to be called Kuwait.

We're in this little stalemate for the long haul. And no one knows what will happen. Mostly because we will tire of it. Then the media will get bored, either Bush or Hussein will blink, our allies will sell us out, Iran will still shout "death to America," and Fort Riley will still hide behind the emerald curtain.

And we'll just have to wait and see.

Ironies appear in issues

Dwayne Lively

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Just a few thoughts while I sit here trying to figure out how many of the 28 people who say they are enrolled in the class I'm teaching actually are enrolled:

This Essential Edge thing has me bugged. Why did the Foundation choose the monetary targets it did? Were the goals based on need, or what the Foundation thought it could reasonably collect? What happens if the larger goals are filled first? Will the Foundation stop collecting money from those constituents, or will they try to get them to donate to other funds? Or will it just collect money above and beyond the goal? If that happens, what is the fate of the library if the other donations reach $100 million before the library's goal is met?

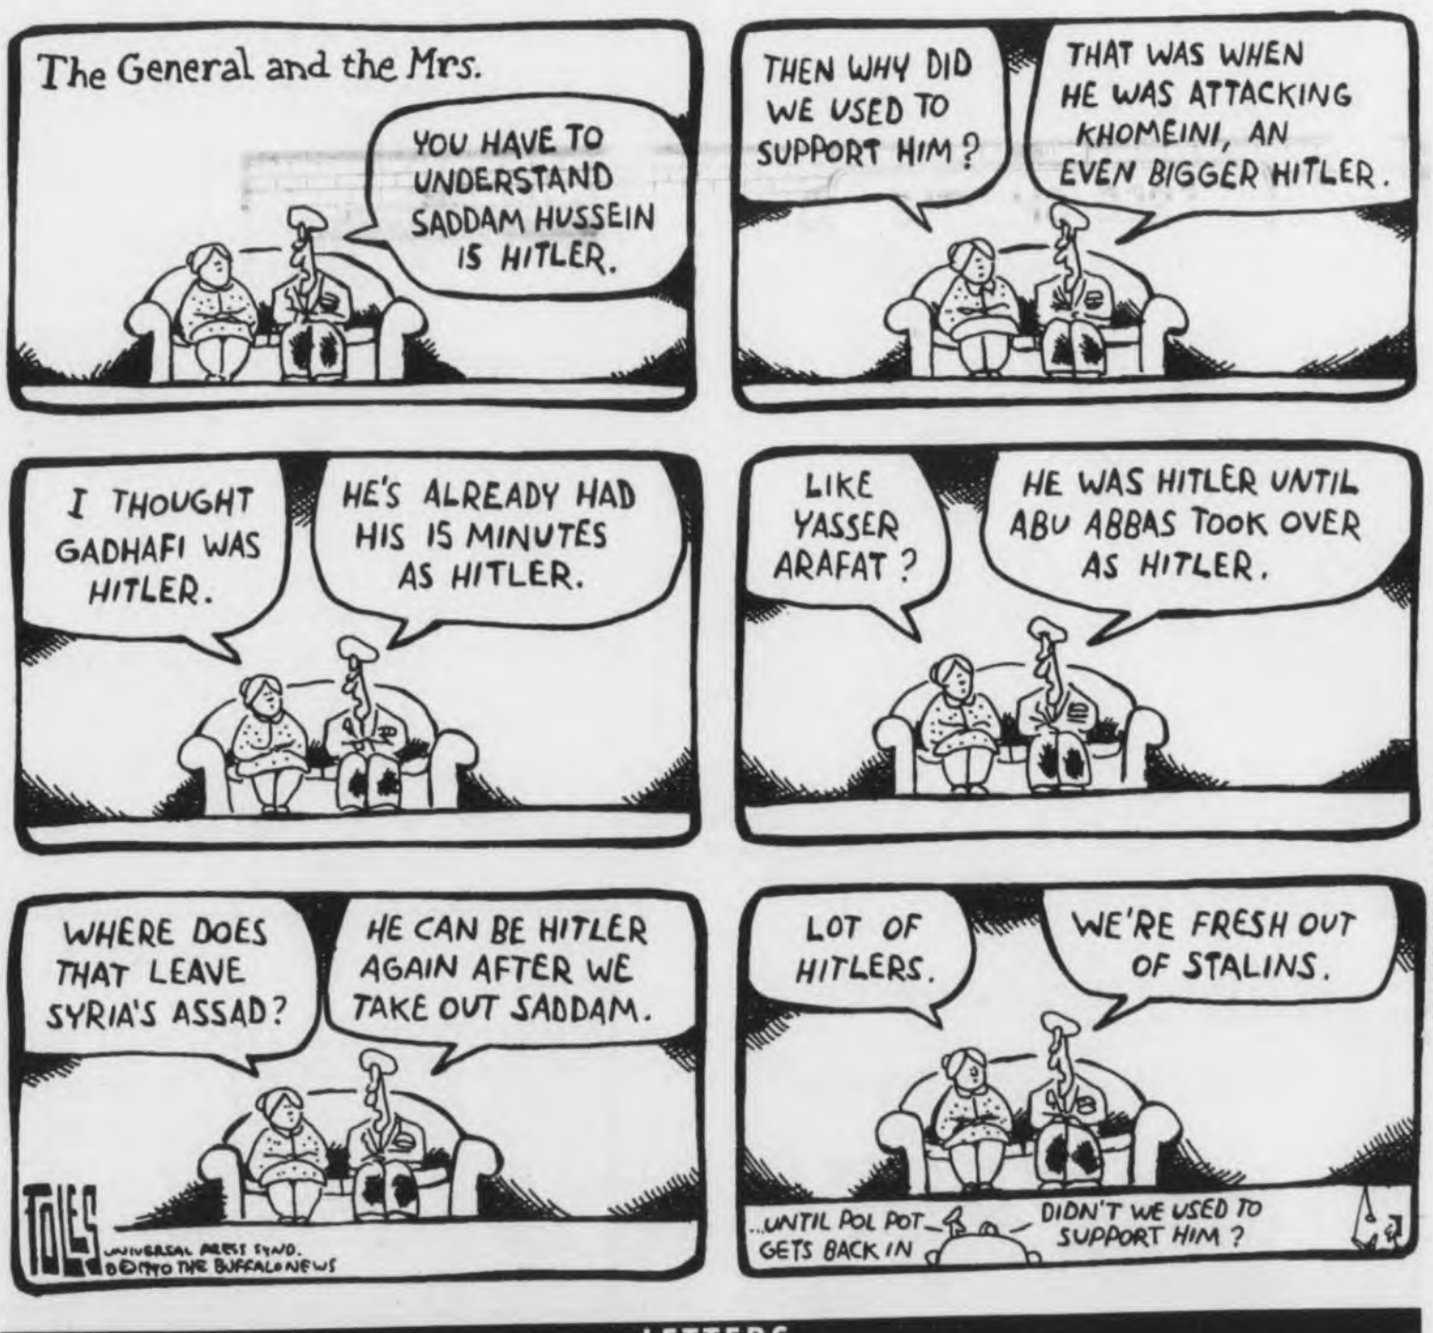
The military buildup in Saudi Arabia has provided the world with another of those great ironies that often occur in tense situations. The United States has sent billions of dollars worth of superhigh-tech equipment to the Middle East, including Stealth fighters, AWACS reconnaissance planes, M-1 Abrahms tanks, F-16's, F-15's, F-18's, three aircraft carriers and countless destroyers and frigates. But what did they overlook, the one item they are currently rushing boxes of over to the troops in the desert? Not water ... lip balm. It seems the dry weather is causing some debilitating cases of chapped lips.

Speaking of water, last week I saw one of our soldiers in the desert pour water over the head of a fellow soldier. Call me crazy, but that pourer should be bumped down a rank and given the worst duty — like cleaning latrines — available in the desert. He should be an example that in the desert, you don't horse around with water. Better yet, the soldier should have to stand in the sun, without water, and guard the entire water supply. Maybe then he'd learn its importance.

Speaking of the military, it's been fun watching armed forces recruitment commercials on television during the military buildup. The commercial reminds us that if we join the military, we can really get ahead in business and pay for our education. "Some of the best people in the white-collar world started out in green." This is especially humorous when such a commercial runs near an update on the Middle East crisis. You really see then how the commercials don't promise what they deliver and how the military forgets to mention this war thing they're trained for.

In general, I do believe that the vast majority of people who join the military are dedicated, have strong senses of pride and duty, and planned to go into the armed forces long before they ever saw a commercial. Still, you wonder how many people get in who really don't understand duty to country. The commercials certainly don't require it, except as an afterthought: "Get money for education and hands-on training which will help you when you get out, while serving your country in the X". What they're selling isn't the military and what can happen to you while you're in, but what benefits you can have once you get out. In other words, the military is portrayed merely as a stepping stone to something better. This seems to be an odd way to recruit: "Get in so that once we've spent millions of dollars training you to do a job, you can leave and use your skills somewhere else."

I think the consequences of this are illustrated in two quotes from young privates who saw their first action in the invasion of Panama. The first said he just joined the Army to pay for his education and that "I never expected to have to go to war." I would like to ask him exactly what he thought the Army was for.



The second was even more scary: "People were screaming. It wasn't at all like you see in the movies." I like to think he was kidding when he said that. If he wasn't, I like to think he's no longer defending me.

Which reminds me, why is it that during a budget crunch the military always cuts troops and equipment instead of cutting their public relations departments? It seems that while thousands of troops have been sent to Saudi Arabia, I don't think they've sent too many P.R. people. I still haven't figured out how the P.R. departments contribute to my defense. Maybe they try to persuade the enemy that what we're doing is right. Surely they would never have to persuade us of that. Would they?

Which reminds me again, when the Marines shipped to Saudi Arabia, they left behind a number of women who served in the various units. They explained that because war could break out any minute, and it is illegal for women to fight in a war, the women had to be left behind. This brings up two questions: what were the women trained to do, and why would they not be able to do it in war? If a war were to break out, wouldn't the legality of women in combat be the last thing on the minds of the Marines?

Why is it that Stanley Koplik, the executive director of the Board of Regents staff, has, through his method of establishing individual funding priorities, set up a system where all of the regents schools compete against each other for funding — the result being the large funding cuts across the board we are currently suffering? Why doesn't Koplik instead prepare a package deal which includes the top priority from each school so that all of the schools can lobby the Legislature and eliminate the selfish competition and bias that Koplik's way encourages?

Well, I can't figure this class-size thing out. I guess I'll just fail them all. Let God sort them out.

LETTERS

Editor,

This letter is in regard to the first edition of the Collegian for the fall semester, the Kansas State Preview. I was at first moderately impressed by the informative articles, numerous ads, etc., but then I came across the picture taken by staff photographer David Mayes, plastered on Page 1 of the "Flint Hills" section, of the paramedics performing CPR on an accident victim. The picture is connected to an article about the paramedics of the Life-Star helicopter and their professional duties in emergency situations. I understand how the article is of interest to the public, but taking a picture of a dying person is immoral, morbid, cold-hearted and, most of all, disrespectful to the victim, not to mention his family. The picture could have easily been of the paramedics alone, but why show the victim? How does showing a dying person help the article?

The reason I am writing this is to let you know a picture like that does damage you are unaware of.

The article gives in slight detail what the paramedics had to do in this particular emergency and goes on to say that the victim pictured did not survive, therefore his family has obviously suffered a great loss and seeing this picture of his demise will certainly intensify their sorrow. They had mental pictures of how they last saw him, now they have this. Please, for one minute, put yourself in the position they are now in. How would you feel? Believe me, that pain is with you always.

Some time ago, I read of a well-known Czechoslovakian tennis player who said, "In my country there is no such thing as freedom of the press. In this country there is no such thing as freedom from the press." That picture should not have been printed.

Voting important

Editor,

It's great to be back in school! And, K-Staters, it is time we examine some of the problems faced by our university.

Our educational system has had its budget drastically reduced — primarily thanks to the current administration in our great state. It is time for change, time for new leadership, time for a governor who understands finances!

After all our efforts of lobbying in Topeka last semester, it is important for us to continue our strong push to win this fight for financial support for education.

Your responsibility is to:

1. Get an absentee ballot by contacting the county clerk in the county you are registered.
2. If you are not registered do just that. Contact your county clerk.
3. Use that absentee ballot to vote.

The freedom we enjoy in this country is guaranteed by our proper use of the privilege of voting. We must all exercise this right and vote. KSU is 20,000 strong. It is up to us to make sure our governor will not only say he wants education to be improved, but support it.

K-State Players

Auditions test nerves and skill

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Student actors and actresses generated a feeling of nervous energy as they paced the floor and silently rehearsed their lines Monday evening. They were waiting for their chance to audition for K-State Players.

About 100 students are expected to participate in auditions at Nichols Hall Monday and Tuesday, said Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech. Callbacks are scheduled for Wednesday.

Directors will select the casts and stage crews for "Pumpboys and Dinettes," "Amadeus," "Arkansaw Bear" and "Steel Magnolias."

Directors are looking for energy, poise, basic stage presence and an actor's ability to overcome inhibitions, Shelton said. Students perform a reading for each of the productions. Tryouts for "Pumpboys and Dinnettes" also require singing and auditions for guitars, drums, bass, harmonica, accordian, fiddle and piano.

"Many directors feel that casting is 75 percent of the work," Shelton said. "If a production is cast well, it will play well. If it isn't cast well, the director's and actors' jobs are much harder."

Camille Diamond and Kevin Kelly, juniors in theater, were tap dancing in the hall to calm their nerves. Both Diamond and Kelly have performed for K-State Players before.

"We like performing a lot — that's why we're theater majors," Diamond said. "We sort of pray each year we'll get to do it again."

"This is a very exciting, hectic time," Shelton said. "I'm nervous for the people involved."

"I like theater, and I like to sing," said Deidre Ensz, junior in theater. "I really want a part and I'm hoping for anything female I can read for."

"I have high hopes for an outstanding season," Shelton said. "I think we have selected plays students can handle well. We've also made an effort to select plays that want to be seen. It's more of a commercial season than usual."

'Triple threat' Jackson ready for season

Editor's Note: This is the second story in a nine-part, position-by-position look at the Wildcat football team. Wednesday, the offensive line.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Pat Jackson may have finally found his calling — in uniform number and position.

Jackson, the leading rusher for K-State in 1989 with 328 yards, also caught Wildcat aerials for 285 yards and passed for a touchdown against Northern Illinois. These are the statistics that led to the number on his jersey.

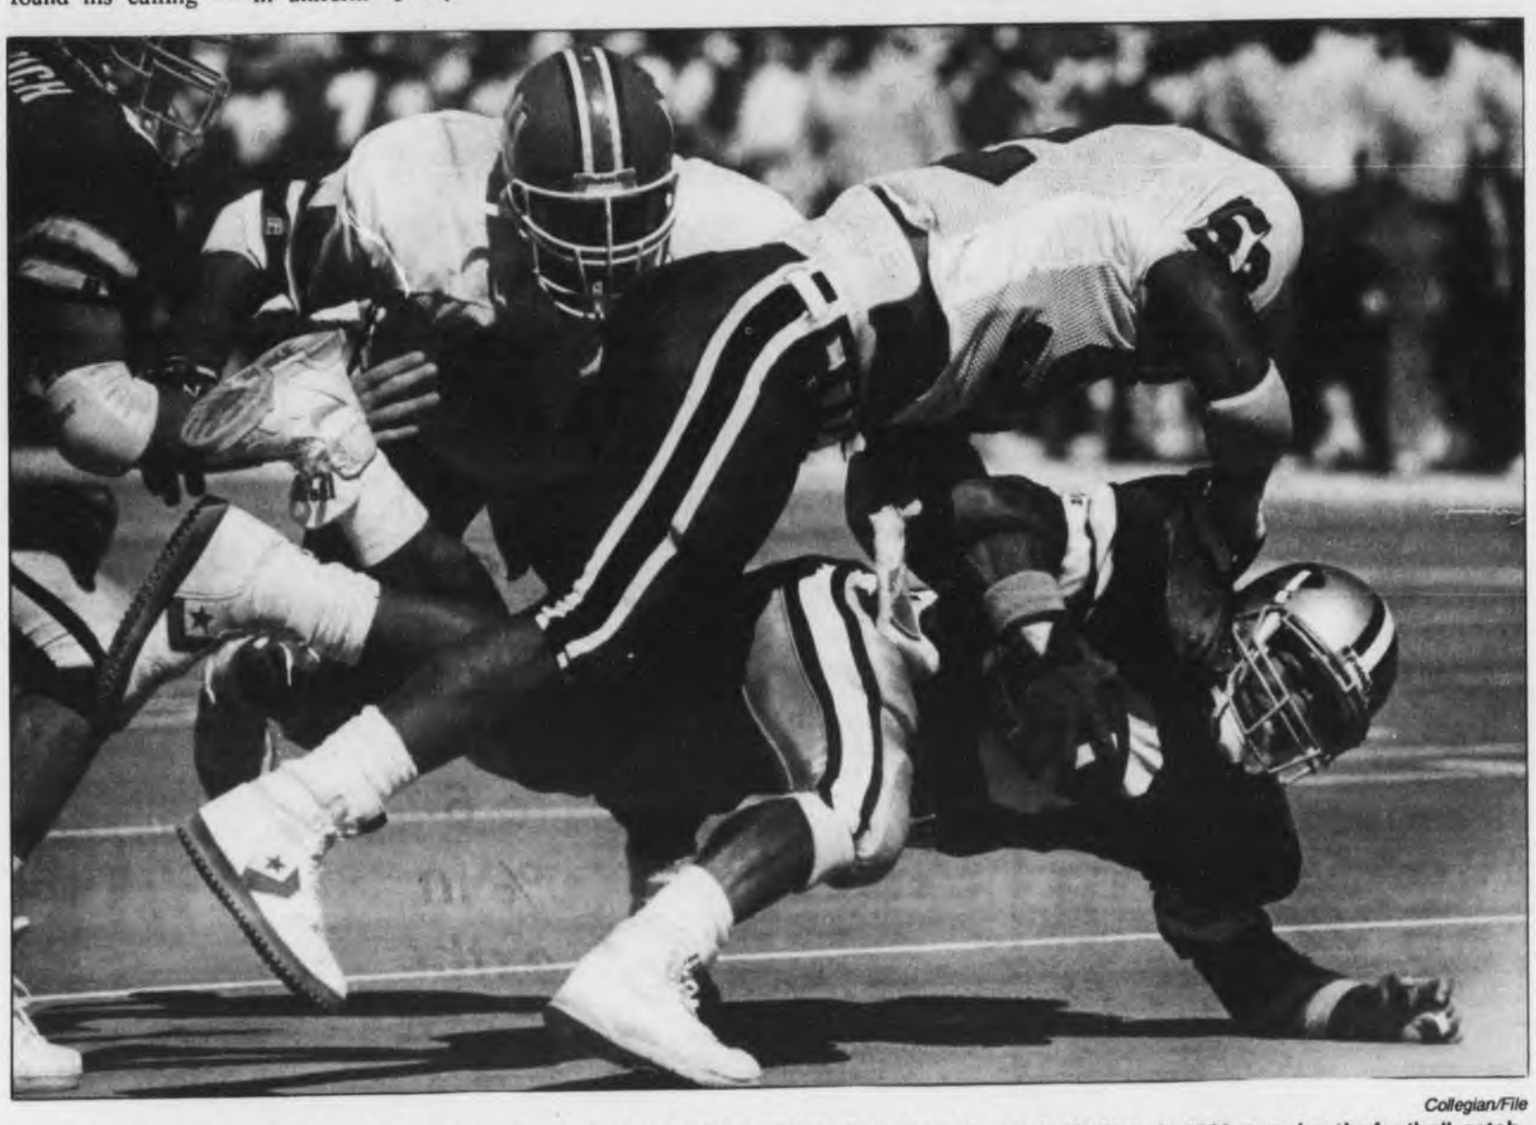
IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Running Backs

After tossing around four jersey numbers of his idols, Jackson has settled down with his own No. 3. He would even like to remain at No. 3 if he turns pro because it is the number that is going to get him there.

"The three is for triple threat," Jackson said. "Coach is going to be using me doing a lot of different things."

Jackson started his college days at Waldorf Junior College in Iowa in the quarterback slot. He was recruited by then-Iowa coach Bill Snyder, and probably would be running, catching and throwing for the Hawkeyes had Snyder not taken the head position at K-State.

Jackson did not move to the running back position full-time until the 'Cats faced Northern Illinois last season. The feeling of being comfortable did not come until two or three games later.



"In fact that was my first game (Northern Illinois) and I had no practice as a running back," Jackson said. "I didn't feel totally comfortable with it until the spring. Now I think I know what he (Snyder) wants me to do moving from receiver to running back."

Jackson will again lead the running attack that Snyder believes is greatly improved and will be a deeply balanced attack.

"Pat Jackson returned an improved football player with a purpose," he said. "He's come back with a renewed interest and is more physical after one year in the program."

Although Snyder is seeing the improvement in the running attack leading to better balance in the offense, the runners are not quite up to Pat Jackson returns as the Wildcats' starting tailback. Jackson did virtually everything on offense for K-State in 1989, carrying the football, catching passes, and throwing the ball as well. Backing up the elusive Jackson at the position will be Antoine Dulan.

Collegian/File

Eric Gallon enters the year as the No. 1 fullback. He hopes to combine with Jackson to give the Wildcats a more balanced offensive attack.

Late surge by Brett could end with 3rd batting title

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two months ago, George Brett hardly could be thinking of a third American League batting title.

When he searched through the AL hitters' statistics for the week, he began at the bottom of the list to find his name.

Media and fans were convinced he had become just another aging has-been trying to hold on in his twilight years. Even Brett had self-doubts, particularly when he was demoted from third to fifth in the batting order in early May by manager and old friend John Wathan.

Brett

"It was the first time in my life a manager called me into his office to say, 'Hey, you're not really doing the job, we're going to move you back to fifth to take a little pressure off,'" Brett said. "I kind of walked out of there going 'Wow.'"

Then one day, the mechanics started to come together. Brett says it happened on a couple of foul balls in Boston mid-July.

Teammate Willie Wilson, himself an AL batting title winner and Brett's teammate for 13 years, says Brett finally got mad at himself, went into the dugout tunnel one day, rattled things around and came out recharged.

Royals hitting coach John Mayberry says Brett's swing was there all along, he just got a slow start.

Whatever the theory, Brett, 37, has been sizzling since early July.

He was hitting .266 at Detroit on July 8 when he went on a 16-game streak that raised his average to .307 by July 26 at Toronto.

Now when he checks the batting leaders he starts at the top and doesn't have to look far down. Only three other AL players are above his .314 average.

"For the first time," Brett said last weekend, "when I got up I read the sports page and said, 'I wonder how Rickey (Henderson) did yesterday. I wonder how (Rafael) Palmeiro did yesterday. I wonder how (Wade) Boggs did yesterday.

"The one thing I cannot do is try to go out and win the batting title. If I get my hits, I can't worry about what they do."

Henderson currently leads the league with a .321 average. Palmeiro follows at .318, Alan Trammell at .317 and Brett.

"When I went from .260 to .315 I was hitting .450, .480," Brett said. "I need another one of those to get in serious, serious contention, I think."

He didn't help himself Sunday against Seattle. Brett struck out three straight times and was 0-for-4, but joked about the strikeouts.

"I remember doing that in 1984 and last year in Texas. This was the third time," he said. "I think that's enough. That's no fun."

Others aren't worried about the outing, given Brett's experience with batting titles down the stretch.

Brett last won the title in 1980 when he hit .390, the highest average in the big leagues since 1941 when Ted Williams hit .406.

He won his first title in 1976 (.333) when he collected three hits on the final day of the season against Minnesota. It was a showdown with teammate Hal McRae and Rod Carew.

"George is always hungry for the hitting," Mayberry said. "He's still as determined for hitting as he was when he came up in '73."

Wilson has seen Brett on a number of streaks through the years, but thinks this one is different.

"This is the longest streak I've seen him in, because he's had to come so far," he said. "We're rooting for him. I've never been on any team that's been jealous of him. He doesn't flaunt his success."

Should Brett win the race, he would become the first player to win three batting titles in three different decades.

"To win one when you're 23 years old and turn around and win one when you're 37 — it would be a great feat to do," he said.

Baseball game sparks riot

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Hundreds of baseball fans stormed onto a field to protest their team's defeat Sunday night and hurled broken bottles, trash cans, rocks and burning chairs in a rampage that left nine people hospitalized.

President Roh Tae-woo ordered an investigation into the incident. The prosecutor general's office said six men were being held by police for questioning.

One of the injured was hit in the abdomen by shards of glass and was hospitalized in serious condition, police said. Seven other spectators and one riot policeman also were hospitalized.

The rampage began three hours into a game between two professional teams, the Haitai Tigers and the Lucky Group Twins. The Twins were leading 10-0 in the bottom of the seventh when the trouble started.

About 400 Tigers fans jumped over barricades surrounding the playing field and stampeded around the mound, witnesses said. Another 20,000 fans shouted and booed from their seats.

Protesters hurled hundreds of broken bottles, metal trash cans, rocks and chairs which were set afire, witnesses and police said. The rampage lasted 50 minutes until police intervened.

Trial begins for players

COVINGTON, Ky. (AP) — A judge dismissed charges Monday against a former St. Louis Cardinals ballplayer who was on trial with two current team members for their part in a May 19 brawl at a service station.

Kenton County District Judge Steve Jaeger said prosecutors failed to present enough evidence for jurors to decide whether pitcher Greg Mathews broke the law.

Mathews went on trial Monday with catcher Tom Pagnozzi and pitcher Frank DiPino on misdemeanor charges of disorderly conduct. They face up to 90 days in jail if convicted.

Covington police officer Antonio Browning testified Monday that he saw Pagnozzi throwing punches into a crowd of people. Officer Anthony Williams testified that he saw DiPino holding a man in a headlock and punching him in the face.

Police said Mathews was arrested after he opened the door of the police cruiser to speak with DiPino and Pagnozzi after they were arrested.

Graf wins opening contest

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Top-seeded Steffi Graf was among the victors Monday in the first day of play in the U.S. Open tennis championships.

Graf, the two-time defending U.S. women's champion, played faster than usual to beat the oncoming rain, and rushed out to a 4-1 lead against an overmatched, exasperated qualifier, 19-year-old Maureen Drake. But after 16 minutes, with the wind whipping papers and hats around the court and a 20-minute downpour starting, the umpire suspended play.

Graf looked no less grim and determined when she came back an hour later. She won the next two games quickly and then, after another 25-minute rain delay, won 6-1, 6-1. Altogether, the match took 41 minutes to play, but lasted 2 hours and 13 minutes.

The rain returned even more heavily after Graf and Drake left, flooding the courts and postponing the match between men's defending champion Boris Becker and Juan Aguilera and an evening match between No. 8 Brad Gilbert and 1988 champion Mats Wilander.

Third-seeded Monica Seles, who beat Graf in the French final, opened play on the stadium court with bagels for breakfast — 6-0, 6-0 against Elena Pampoulova.

Wildcat football team deserves second look

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

I'd like to begin another semester of writing these scrambled thoughts by offering a personal thank you to the Pride of Wildcat Land — K-State's marching band.

Their early-morning rendition of the Wabash Cannonball the other day — which preceded the alarm on my bedroom clock by two hours — has me primed and ready for another year of Wildcat athletics. And it should be an interesting one.

Late August is the time of year when a sports lover's life has become totally devoted to baseball box scores, while trying to accept the fact that results from National Football League preseason games mean absolutely nothing.

Another translation is that the Chiefs' horrible performance to this point is not directly related to what the Royals were doing back in April and May.

Fortunately, the final days of summer bring the sports scene closer to home, as the K-State football, volleyball and cross country teams approach their inaugural game days of 1990. The 'Cat baseball and golf teams will also work through fall slates, while several other programs are involved in off-season workouts.

Unfortunately, the anxiety and hoopla surrounding it all is accompanied by annual potshots from national magazine and newspaper writers. Football fans, you know what I'm talking about.

The Big Eight Skywriters, a group of touring Midwest sportswriters, made their stop in Manhattan last week to meet with K-State coach Bill Snyder and an assortment of newcomers and returning players. Like many of his predecessors, the second-year coach was forced to handle the barrage of questions associated with wearing the shoes of the conference's last-place team.

For any Rip Van Winkles, the Orange Bowl and K-State football are two items that have not been mentioned in the same breath by many competent human beings. Intrastate rival Kansas will get to play there this season, but the reason can be attributed to a misfire in the forecasting of the Jayhawk grid program's current state instead of being the Big Eight championship representative. The 'Hawks meet top-ranked Miami, Fla., Oct. 13.

Snyder let his realist side show through. He explained that K-State's Himalayan climb to respectability has to begin somewhere, and not by getting pummeled 70-0 by a national power. Hence, the 'Cats will play a non-conference schedule that includes NCAA I-AA opponent Western Illinois, and lower-echelon foes New Mexico and New Mexico State.

The 'Cat coach said all of this without waving a white flag over his head. He expects a lot from his players, but wants them to enjoy some success along the way, even if it means a $50,000 buyout on a contract to take Wyoming off this season's schedule.

"We're just trying to level the playing field," Snyder said.

Because he's done that, it's easy to find a sports page that labels K-State as the Mildkittycats, Mildcats or Wildkittens. It forces you to bite your lip, and remember that childhood saying about sticks, stones, bones and names.

According to USA Today, the 'Cats have a million-to-one shot of winning the Big Eight crown this year. Odds like that make a Lotto America ticket seem more justifiable. However, from knowing Coach Snyder since the early stages of his tenure here, I'd say that sports page is either being used as litter box liner or a motivational tool on the K-State lockerroom bulletin board.

All of the negatives have made it difficult to spend a Saturday afternoon in KSU Stadium. Attendance figures over the past few years have shown that. But a Straw-to-Hernandez miracle 11 months ago should be all the spark you need.

It's like the 5-iron tee shot on a par-3 that lands four feet from the cup. You can spend the rest of the round touring the woods, sand, water and other forms of Mother Nature, but one swing can prolong your golfing career for at least another day.

And Snyder's 'Cats deserve another day.

Union Station to open as non-alcoholic bar

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

The contractors for the Union Station are planning to open the non-alcoholic bar at the end of September, said Teto Henderson, Union Station manager.

"Union Station does not have an exact date of opening, but it should open at the end of September. It is running right on schedule, however," Henderson said. "We have had a few changes of additions and deletions, but now it is just a matter of getting it all done."

The Union Station will serve lunch and dinner, and provide a non-alcoholic bar, a wide-screen television, an 800 square foot dance floor, a DJ, and enough open seating for 200 people.

"Union Station is going to be an extremely nice place," Henderson said. "It is a place with a very relaxed atmosphere where the University community can come and get together with friends and meet new people."

Prices of items sold in Union Station will be the same as those sold elsewhere in the Union, he said.

The opening will provide more jobs for students, Henderson said.

"We will be hiring up to 15-20 students with jobs ranging from kitchen help, operation managers, door monitors and DJs," he said.

Enthusiasm from students about the opening is a main goal of the Union Station management right now, he said.

"We are excited about getting different student clubs, greek organizations and residence halls involved with Union Station," Henderson said. He also said plans are being made to make the Station available to be reserved for certain nights of the week.

Union Station will be an integral part of the Union Program Council activities, said Stan Winters, acting program director for UPC.

"UPC is looking foward to working with Union Station and booking entertainment so students can be directly involved with the entertainment that comes," Winters said. "Union Station will be a great benefit for the students and the faculty.

KMKF keeps Top-40 format

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

Radio stations KMKF 101 and KHCA Angel 95.3 are different in more than just the type of music played.

Rumors circulated that KMKF, a contemporary hit radio station, was going to change formats. Robert Elfman, KMKF program director, said the rumors were not true.

The rumors said KMKF would change to an album-oriented rock, or AOR format. AOR, instead of playing hit singles like Top-40 radio stations, plays songs mostly off albums usually geared toward harder rock 'n' roll and classic-rock music fans.

"To be quite honest, we haven't even considered it," said Elfman. "We're doing well right now, so I don't see any reason to change."

Jim Johnson, a part-time announcer, said one of the supporters of the rumor was Jeff Wilson, the morning disc jockey at KMKF. Wilson could not be reached for comment.

"You never can tell in broadcasting," Elfman said. "He (Wilson) might have been joking when he said it."

The station is building a new tower that will boost its power from 3,000 watts to 50,000 watts.

"We can almost reach Topeka now," Elfman said. "With the new tower, we should be able to reach from Salina to Lawrence to the Nebraska border."

He said the tower is under construction and should be completed by mid-October.

Jerry Hutchinson, program manager and part owner KHCA, Angel 95.3, said the new the station has been successful since it began programming contemporary christian rock music on Aug. 3. The station and frequency had been dormant since KSKT, known as the KAT, went bankrupt at the first of the year. Hutchinson, along with Vern Osborne and Bill Stallard, bought the station shortly afterward.

"We're really satisfied," Hutchinson said. "There is an audience that is familiar with the music — even more so than we anticipated."

Hutchinson said the ages of the listeners who dropped by to give requests at the back-to-school remote in the Anderson Village shopping center ranged in age from five to 50 years. The majority of the audience appears to be in the 16-35 age group.

Hutchinson said that other similar formats were faring well in Wichita and Emporia.

"It's one of the fastest-growing formats nationwide," he said.

Violator's grace period over

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

The registration week grace period of not ticketing parking violators is offically over, say the campus police.

Charles Beckom, chief of the K-State police, said there weren't many problems last week with campus traffic. He said that was due to the new enrollment process, which staggered the amount of students on campus on a three-day time period instead of two.

During enrollment and registration, students were only staying on campus for a short time. Therefore, the officers did not put much emphasis on ticketing the faculty or student parking lots. More concentration was aimed at the no parking, handicap and fire zones.

Also, barricades were set up at the 17th Street and College Heights Road entrances to keep drivers from parking in the areas near Lafene Health Center and Seaton Hall.

Lt. Robert Mellgren, K-State police officer, said President Jon Wefald had asked the police department to relax the parking restrictions during registration, but now that classes have begun the grace period is over. Students should expect full enforcement of the parking laws, he said.

Residence halls also adopted a system for registration to alleviate the parking problems for residents moving into the buildings. Students were allowed to park in front of the halls to unload their cars. After unloading, the residents were required to move their vehicles into the parking lots next to the complexes.

Looking into the school year, Beckom hopes students will take precautions to help avoid parking problems and reduce expenses caused by parking illegally.

Students should comply with rules and regulations set up, he said, to automatically reduce the number of traffic and parking tickets issued. Also, students should keep in mind the large influx of cars and adjust the time they allow to get to campus and park accordingly.

"Basically, just plan ahead," Beckom said.

South Africans strike, demand fighting halt

By The Associated Press

SOWETO, South Africa — Tens of thousands of blacks went on strike Monday to demand an end to factional fighting that has killed more than 500 people. Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu angrily blamed police and pro-apartheid whites for the violence.

Tutu called for creation of a new police force acceptable to blacks as he addressed about 6,000 people gathered at a funeral for seven ANC supporters killed in the battles.

"The evidence is overwhelming that the police have not been impartial," he told the cheering listeners.

Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok later rejected charges that police took sides in the conflict. He said in a statement that individual officers may have acted improperly but that the force as a whole tried to maintain order.

The strike left the streets of Soweto, a sprawling black township of 2.5 million people, nearly deserted. Many businesses in Soweto and neighboring Johannesburg were forced to close or operate with skeleton staffs. Most trains and buses were

Lafene workers hand out water on 100 plus day

By The Collegian Staff

Lafene Student Health Center helped students beat the heat Monday by handing out free glasses of water from 1 to 3 p.m.

Handing out the water was planned in June in conjunction with Wildcat Welcome Week. Students walking across campus from class to class found the water a refreshing treat in the humid afternoon.

The water was provided by the Health Education Department of Lafene. The department decided to present something more than the normal informational booth about Lafene and what it offers, said Cindy Burke, director of health education.

"I've handed out around 700 glasses of water to students and faculty so far today," Burke said. "We started out with lemonade, but once we ran out of that we had to switch to water."

Jackie Lowe, Lafene custodial supervisor, helped hand out the water. She said the students seemed to respond well to the booth and appreciated the water. "It cools students off and really seems to make their day."

"I thought it was great to see something that was free after going broke buying books and supplies for school," said Larissa Rivera, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine.

The water also gave students a solution to combat heat exhaustion, a condition that can be brought on by the high degree temperatures experienced yesterday, Burke said.

"We just figured that once in a while you have to do something really crazy," she said.

Mike Venso/Staff

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center, hands out a glass of cold water to one of hundreds of students who stopped by the booth in front of Lafene Monday. The Lafene crew worked most of the afternoon distributing water and cookies to keep students cool.

Cause of body odor isolated by scientist

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — That stench wafting from the sweaty and unwashed may be body odor to you. But to a Philadelphia chemist, it's the result of 3-methyl-2-hexenoic acid.

George Preti, a scientist at the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia, said Monday that he and his laboratory team have isolated and identified for the first time the chemical basis for underarm odor.

The 3-methyl-2-hexenoic acid was identified, Preti said, after collecting sweat from the underarms of a group of male volunteers who wore pads for 24 hours to absorb the stuff. He said the compounds on the pads were then chemically analyzed.

"There were three dozen compounds isolated that can be odoriferous," said Preti. "We picked this one because it seemed to have the most odor, based on seven noses in the laboratory."

The compound was then synthesized and vials of the stuff were left on a bulletin board for the entertainment of passing noses. Most people agreed, he said, that 3-methyl-2-hexenoic acid was the genuine article — pure eau de locker room.

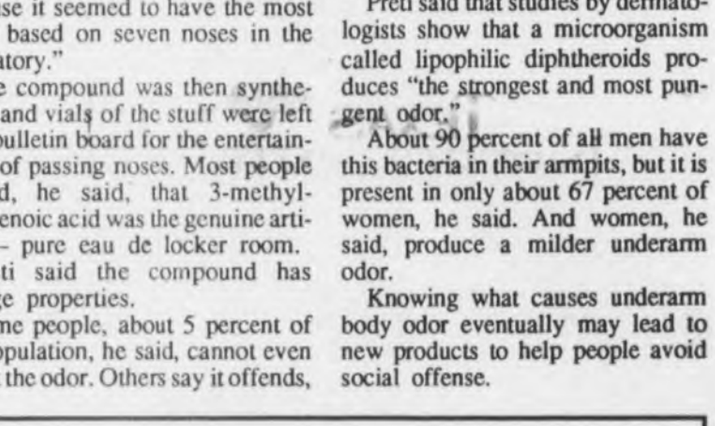
Preti said the compound has strange properties.

Some people, about 5 percent of the population, he said, cannot even detect the odor. Others say it offends, but only faintly.

To Preti, however, 3-methyl-2-hexenoic acid is the odor equivalent of a brass band, playing loudly right next door. And out of tune.

He waved a closed test tube of the compound through the air, made a face and noted, "I can smell it even when it's covered."

Preti said the chemistry that results in body odor starts with secretions from a gland called the apocrine. This gland is most common in the arm pit, but is also present in the groin and in the breast.



"Its only known purpose is apparently to create scent," said Preti.

Two types of skin bacteria that live in the armpit feast on the aprocine secretions and then give out several dozen compounds. One of them is 3-methyl-2-hexenoic acid.

Preti said that studies by dermatologists show that a microorganism called lipophilic diphtheroids produces "the strongest and most pungent odor."

About 90 percent of all men have this bacteria in their armpits, but it is present in only about 67 percent of women, he said. And women, he said, produce a milder underarm odor.

Knowing what causes underarm body odor eventually may lead to new products to help people avoid social offense.

I would've bought a Macintosh even without the student discount.

"The first time I saw a Macintosh, I was immediately hooked. It's a work of art. I saw the student pricing and my next move was obvious: get one.

"Some other computers are cheaper, but they're a pain to learn, and working on them can be a grueling experience. Last year, a friend bought another kind of computer against my advice and has used it for maybe 15 hours. What a waste.

"Macintosh, on the other hand, is a logical extension of the mind. It lets you concentrate on what's in your paper, not on how to get it on paper. You can create professional-looking documents in minutes, and you lose the fear of learning new programs because they all work in the same way. "Once you've worked with a Macintosh, there's no turning back."

Fort Hays professors display art at Union

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Leland W. Powers and Frank Nichols are art professors at Fort Hays State University — but you can see their works here at the K-State Union Gallery from 8 a.m to 5 p.m. until Sept. 7.

Powers and Nichols have diverse works but they complement each other well — they are equally strong and provocative in imagery, design and color.

Powers uses a variety of mixed media, gridding curves of white lines on black paper and using shocking instances of color and three-dimensional shapes to interrupt the mass of greying marble-like squares.

He may have been contemplating a marble floor when he fantasized about the underworld of the tiles and created this series of works which explore a place beyond the greyness of the majority, the rolling black and white hills-world of the everyday. In fact, the floor of the Union Gallery is not unlike the marble image in Powers' works. Inspiration comes from strange wombs.

Nichols colors over the lines, virtually pacifying his images with deep earth tones and odd shades of otherwise familiar colors. He uses hand-colored etchings crowded with ideas, symbols and emotion. His works are discomforting in a vague way, but yet are familiar. He enhances landscapes with fantasy and his figures are simply intriguing. The strength of the humanity of his people is easily seen in the tension of the muscles combined with the immovable strength of the rocks in "Sioyphus."

Nichols' works are laced with disturbing images: the dove of peace nailed to a slab, a crowd of

Taiwan buys U.S. grain

Officials sign contracts for local wheat totaling $11.9 million at Statehouse

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A delegation from Taiwan signed four contracts Monday in the Statehouse to buy 3.336 million bushels of U.S. wheat.

The total value of the four contracts is $11.979 million.

The 12-member Taiwan delegation announced the sale in the Senate chamber after opening several bids. The wheat, which comes to 90,800 metric tons, will be shipped to Taiwan between October to January. A metric ton is about 36.7 bushels of wheat.

The four grain companies that will sell the grain to Taiwan are Cargill Inc., based in Minneapolis; Mitsui Grain Corp., based in Chicago; Agrex Inc., based in Kansas City, Mo. and Harvest State Corp., also based in Minneapolis.

Two of the companies, Mitsui and Agrex, are owned by Japanese firms, said Steven Graham, administrator for the Kansas Wheat Commission.

The Wheat Commission and the Kansas Board of Agriculture sponsored the delegation's visit to Kansas.

Graham said he did not know if all of the wheat going to Taiwan would be from Kansas. However, the Kansas wheat crop is estimated to be at 460.2 million bushels, a record high.

All the grain is top quality, hard red winter wheat, Graham said, with the price per bushel ranging from $3.51 to $3.64. He said the price per bushel includes transportation costs to the West Coast and storage costs.

The delegation is visiting six other states besides Kansas during this trip — Idaho, Nebraska, Wyoming, South and North Dakota and Minnesota. Board of Agriculture officials said the delegation plans to buy grain from each of the other six states.

Gov. Mike Hayden, on hand for the contract signing, said Kansas and Taiwan have had a good relationship for several years.

"It's a pleasure to see our friends from Taiwan," he said. The delegation was headed by T. T. Chiang, who wished Hayden well in his re-election bid.

The strike was called by the anti-apartheid Soweto Civic Association to "protest the violence, police behavior and to mourn our dead." Residents in several neighboring townships also took part.

Heavily armed South African troops and police in armored vehicles patrolled the townships. Police commanders reported no new violence in the Johannesburg area.

Savage fighting erupted in the townships around Johannesburg on Aug. 12, pitting Xhosas and other blacks loyal to the African National Congress against Zulus tied to the conservative Inkatha movement. Police said at least 515 people were killed.

Police said Monday at least 10 blacks were killed during the weekend in the eastern province of Natal, which has been the scene of factional fighting since 1986.

par. However, the coach knows there are points that are going to be much stronger.

"I'm not sure that we are where we were in the spring, but I'm confident that we will be," Snyder said. "We are a much tougher group and physical group of running backs than we have been in past seasons."

Following Jackson in the No. 2 tailback spot will be Antoine Dulan, the senior from Topeka's Washburn Rural and Vili Sanft out of Euless, Texas.

"Dulan had a very fine spring and is close to being back to where he was in the spring," Snyder said. "Vili Sanft is a hard-nosed and dedicated football player."

Besides the running back position, there is a deep corps of rushers in the fullback slot. Eric Gallon will return to fill the top spot. Snyder is excited to see what type of offense the backfield will produce with a pairing of Gallon and Jackson.

"He (Gallon) is an improved player coming off of a fine season last year and a tremendous spring," Snyder said. "He and Pat have a lot of skills that they will be able to use together."

Behind Gallon will be Richard Boyd and Curtis Madden, along with newcomer Rod Schiller from Texas who Snyder believes will make an impact rather quickly.

Powers' works cry out for freedom from the black and white of grids to something beyond. Even the curves are gridded and bound until disturbing shades of color, neither warm nor cool, illuming something wholly other.

My favorites of Powers' works seem to be a series of a single idea — especially "The Run," which is a softer version of "Passage."

Nichols' works are less obviously thematic and more realistic. My favorites are the ones with which I can easily relate, such as "Chicago," in which the feeling of the city itself is personified. If you like the fantastical, then you must see "Cycle" and "Allegory of the Church."

The show is an excellent example of the new fine arts fee put to use — allowing K-State to bring visual arts to campus and upgrade awareness once shows arrive. This is an intense, incredibly stimulating show which shouldn't be missed by anyone who paid their fee.

Oleen said people have almost started to refer to the abortion issue as a Catholic or non-Catholic issue.

"There's not a clear line, because not all Catholics are either pro-abortion or anti-abortion," she said.

"It's really not a religious issue," she said. "It seems, though, whenever there is an emotion-ridden issue like abortion, people are accused of either using or ignoring their religion."

Fuel

'Chemicrazy' combustable on stereo

By Rod Gillespie
Arts and Entertainment Editor

People may be upset over the price of gas, but the latest album from That Petrol Emotion, "Chemicrazy," is worth the money. You won't find this kind of fuel at the service station — this high-octane mixture belongs in your stereo.

"Chemicrazy" doesn't feature the same raw intensity or fierce Irish nationalism that characterized the band's earlier works — instead, it is more refined musical combustion.

The album won't disappoint That Petrol Emotion's hightest fans, though. Songs like "Hey Venus" and "Scum Surfin'" are constructed with the familiar guitar latticework of crunchy riffs, wailing sitar-like melodic lines and choppy, oblique arpeggios.

"Hey Venus," the album's first track, throttles the album up to speed with a percussive sonic backdrop and ascending power chords. The verses describe a nightclub glamour girl who can be had for a price — and her anxious suitors: "Sawdust Casanovas are dying to take over/Lipstick on bankrolls it's a deal/Telling stinking lies/Cheap chat and shifty eyes/Double the price — you got a steal/Hey Venus — Hey Venus/Wants us all so bad/Hope it drives her mad."

"Scum Surfin'" is the lament of a surfer forced to ride a toxic wave — a frighteningly realistic scene: "Laugh at bad luck let it ride/Surfin' on a putrid tide/Disappear without a splash/Walk on water — talkin' trash/Triple vision sealed my fate/Things I hear are things I hate/Hopes that end in dust and ash/Head is empty talkin' trash."

What distinguishes "Chemicrazy" from earlier efforts is the album's softer-edged side — reminiscent of early Echo and the Bunnymen. The liner notes included with the compact disk feature the quote "Civility costs nothing." Ciaran McLaughlin's lush vocals and thoughtful lyrics on tracks like "Another Day," "Mess of Words" and "Sweet Shiver Burn" typify this kinder, gentler attitude.

"Another Day" aptly describes the melancholy angst of breakup: "When you're not here it's like gravity is falling on me/so here I stay in my room/another day spent in isolation/another day lost and gone."

"Mess of Words" bemoans deceit in the breakup of a relationship: "Spoon-fed spite deceives you/nervous stammer betrays the way you really feel/words of wisdom slurred ... Skim across the surface/remember to forget those things you've heard a thousand times/just a mess of words."

"Sweet Shiver Burn" captures the feeling of being swallowed whole by a town: "Sunset tears ... this town will squeeze you/Cling to fears ... the ones you've always known/Good as gold ... and twice as hard to part with."

The songwriting and musicianship on "Chemicrazy" is complemented by some clever sampling — this is the 90s, after all — which includes angst-ridden lines from "The Twilight Zone." The whole package adds up to a tank of fuel you can burn when your car is out of gas.

Blues guitarist killed in helicopter wreck

From Staff and Wire Reports

Thiry-five year old Grammy-winning blues guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan was killed Monday morning when the helicopter carrying Vaughan and four other persons, including members of guitarist Eric Clapton's entourage, crashed into a hill near a resort concert hall in East Troy, Wisconsin.

Announcement of Vaughan's death was made by Clapton's publicist in Los Angeles, Ronnie Lippin, who quoted Clapton as saying that Vaughan and the other victims "were my companions, my associates, and my friends. This is a tragic loss of some very special people."

David Saab, a junior in business and avid Vaughan fan, was shocked after learning of the guitar player's death.

"He played the guitar in such a manner as to make blues and rock an inseparable style rather than two different extremes. If there was an heir to the pattern and style of Jimi Hendrix, it was Stevie Ray Vaughan," Saab said.

Brad Musser, a local blues guitarist, could not find the words to describe the loss of Vaughan's death.

"Stevie Ray Vaughan was not just a major influence, he was my influence," Musser said.

The crash site was at Alpine Valley, a ski resort and outdoor theater complex about six miles southwest of East Troy. Clapton, along with guitarists Robert Cray and Vaughan, had played at the theater Sunday evening.

In addition to the helicopter pilot and Vaughan, the others killed were Bobby Brooks, Clapton's agent at Creative Artists Agency; Nigel Browne, a Clapton bodyguard; and Colin Smythe, one of Clapton's tour managers.

Vaughan was born Oct. 3, 1954, in Dallas. He followed his brother Jimmie, also a well-known musician in the band the Fabulous Thunderbirds, from Dallas to Austin in 1972. Going from club to club and band to band, Vaughan developed a rocking Texas roadhouse blues style. In 1981, he formed the band Double Trouble. The band's style of playing caught the attention of record producer John Hammond, who helped Vaughan find a record label.

Vaughan had a platinum album with Double Trouble with "Couldn't Stand the Weather," released in 1984. That same year, he won a Grammy Award for best traditional blues recording for a song called "Flood Down in Texas." In 1989 he again won a Grammy in the contemporary blues category for his album "In Step."

Guitar Player Magazine cited Vaughan as the best electric blues player in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1988, finally naming him to its "Gallery of the Greats" in 1989.

Many fans regard Vaughan's best work as his latest release "In Step." It was Vaughan's first release since returning from drug rehabilitation in 1988.

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

President frees women, children from his country

By The Associated Press

President Saddam Hussein of Iraq mingled with foreign hostages Tuesday and then decreed that the women and children held captive in his country were free to leave.

A statement from the Revolutionary Command Council said the decision was made "to preserve the image of Arabs," the official Iraqi News agency said.

The agency, monitored, in Nicosia, Cyprus, said the foreigners could leave starting Wednesday. It was not known how many women and children were among the hostages in Iraq or whether the decree also applies to foreigners in Kuwait.

There are 500 Americans trapped in Iraq and 2,500 in Kuwait.

The Iraqi news agency said Saddam made his decision after foreigners expressed concern about their children. During Tuesday's televised encounter, a woman with a British accent asked Saddam why he was using foreign children "in something they can't understand."

At the same meeting, Saddam told the foreigners he was willing to talk to President Bush and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on television about ending the Persian Gulf crisis.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler, asked about Saddam's suggestion, said: "It's sick, and it doesn't even deserve a response."

Another department spokesman, Mark Dillen, said the U.S. government had received no official word of the planned release of women and children. "We hope it's true, but we have seen promises and statements by Iraq in the past that have proven false," Dillen said.

Despite Saddam's conciliatory gestures, Baghdad hardened its position on Kuwait, declaring it a 19th province of Iraq. The White House condemned the move.

Also Tuesday, U.S. officials said an American civilian died of a heart attack in Iraq. The 56-year-old man, who was not identified, was believed to be one of 63 Americans rounded up and taken to strategic sites in Iraq for use as human shields against attack.

Tutwiler said the death "underscores the barbaric nature of Iraqi Iraqi policy toward foreign nationals in Iraq and Kuwait, and makes a lie of Iraq's claim that they are all well treated and in no danger."

Senate plans for busy semester

Franklin appointed as new adviser; several issues remain in committee

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Student Senate will organize plans for the fall and hear updates on summer committee work at their first meeting of the semester on Thursday.

"Some people think this is a winding down time for Senate, but this is a time when we can really make things happen," said Student Body President Todd Johnson. "This is a critical time, and it's important the senators don't get burned out."

Senators will hear the first reading on a bill allowing senate replacements to be sworn in by any member of Senate Tribunal.

In the past, only the chancellor of Tribunal was able to swear in members, said Senate Chairman Chris Kern. This is a time saving measure for Senate, since the chancellor isn't always available.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, will be introduced as a new adviser for the Student Governing Association, Kern said.

Franklin was elected the first black K-State student body president in 1976. In 1978, he became the youngest member of the Kansas Board of Regents.

Senators will take action on a bill held over from last semester to purchase a new typewriter for the SGA office.

Several issues Senate anticipates acting on during the semester remain in committee, Kern said.

"After talking to committee members, I think it is possible we'll be even busier than last semester," he said. "I think things might start slowing down around November."

A bill to allow alcoholic beverages in the northeast corner of the KSU Stadium parking lot during home football games is is still in committee, Kern said. The bill would also provide for the sale of 3.2 beer inside the stadium.

A program to promote designated drivers in conjunction with Aggieville bars is also in committee. The program will be partially funded by a donation from the Manhattan chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving. Campbell Distributors Inc. will furnish most the supplies for the program.

The bars will offer discount or free non-alcoholic drinks to designated drivers. Senate has been asked to provide funding to promote the program, Kern said.

Senate is expecting results from a preliminary study to expand the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Johnson said. Money for an addition is available without raising student fees.

Senate will allocate $220,000 to applicants for money from the Educational Opportunity Fund later in the semester, Johnson said. EOF money is taken out of student fees to fund scholarships and programs for educational advancement. Forty-three groups have applied for more than $568,000 in funding.

A request to have a restricted fee for engineering programs will be submitted to the Board of Regents in November or December, Johnson said.

Johnson said he is opposed to the engineering fee because it would set a precedent for other restricted fees for other colleges.

Student Senate passed a resolution last spring stating they could not support an engineering fee at that time. Student Senate may take interest in this subject again when the fee is presented to the regents, Johnson said.

Senate passed a resolution last semester stating they did not support the restricted fee. Senate is waiting on a report outlining the needs of the library.

Fred Wingert is expected to resign as chief of staff at this year's first Student Senate meeting Thursday, Todd Johnson, student body president said.

Wingert was appointed to the position last December breaking a precedent that freshman not hold top postions in student government.

Wingert confirmed he will officially turn in his resignation Thursday.

Wingert is taking a semester off to help his father, George Wingert, campaign for the 5th district congressional seat, Johnson said.

"This is a commitment to my family I feel I should make," Wingert said. "I am sure I can have the most impact on Kansas, K-State and higher education if I help my dad get elected.

"I feel like Student Senate, which was elected by the student body, deserves the first explanation of my resignation since they are the ones that approved me," he said.

Wingert declined to comment further on his resignation until after the Senate meeting on Thursday.

Johnson's nomination of Wingert was rejected unanimously by the Student Senate Nominee Committee last fall. At that time, Johnson suspected Wingert's lack of K-State government experience and his freshman standing as the reasons.

The Student Senate approved Wingert without committee approval. A resolution passed 36-16 after a senate debate directly addressed the question of Wingert's lack of governing experience.

"Fred did an excellent job," Johnson said. "We had a difficult time getting him approved, but there is no one I would've rather had as chief of staff. I never had anyone mention the fact he was a freshman. In fact, if I told anyone they were shocked."

The main duties of the chief of staff are to lead cabinet meetings, work with committees and assist the student body president with his duties, Johnson said.

The chief of staff also succeeds the president if he is unable to complete his term in office for some reason.

Mike Steinle, graduate student in business administration, is expected to replace Wingert as chief of staff, Johnson said. Steinle was responsible for creating the idea of a lobby team, which was a major issue in Johnson's campaign.

"Mike was my lobby team leader last year, and he will walk right on to the job," Johnson said. "There will be little transition shock.

Enrollment up

Middle East crisis may cause decline of Fort students

By Lori Stauffer
Campus Editor

Preliminary figures indicate enrollment will match last year's record figure of 20,100 students.

Registrar Don Foster said numbers for the regular enrollment period reached 18,105 students. This number surpasses last year's figure of 17,922.

Administrators are looking for the 20th day enrollment figures to continue the rising trend and again reach the 20,000 mark.

"There is an asterisk we need to add to that, however," said Don Hoyt, assistant provost in charge of Planning and Evaluative Services. "The 20th day figures include on- and off-campus enrollment. Fort Riley is a significant part of the off-campus numbers, and we don't know how much of Fort Riley will be in Saudi Arabia. Student enrollment will be down significantly if this occurs."

Foster said there is some concern the unrest at Fort Riley — due to the crisis in the Middle East — may cause some students from the military base to not enroll.

"We are expecting an increase of 400 students. If Fort Riley students are not available, we are not likely to have that increase," Foster said.

The decrease in freshman enrollment is also a factor in considering what the final figures will be, he said. Because graduating high school students began a decline last year, K-State's freshman class has also seen a decrease. Hoyt, however, said the freshman class should not cause a great effect on the overall enrollment figures this year. He said for the next two years Kansas will continue to see a decrease in graduating seniors, which will decrease the overall enrollment size at the regent schools.

He said he predicts the freshman class will again see a rise in enrollment in 1992.

Foster said K-State has seen the largest increase in enrollment in the senior class. He accounts this rise to the size of the freshman class in 1987.

"It is a natural progression," he said. "We had an increase of sophomores in 1988 and an increase in the enrollment of juniors last year. It be-

Balk will study students' grief

By David Frese
Features Editor

Most would agree students spend a large amount of time thinking about the future. That's just the way college life is.

Whether it's a term paper due tomorrow or a job interview next week or a decision to get married to someone, future events play a great role in how college students live, think and react in the present. But what happens when the life of someone close is cut short?

Death and bereavement are not easy things to deal with, and Dr. David Balk, assistant professor in human development, has been granted funding by the National Institute of Mental Health for a two-year project studying the effects on college students who have lost someone close to them.

Balk is no stranger to bereavement. When he was in college his dentist had a son who was murdered. Balk said he remembered lying back in the dentist's chair a month or so after it had happened as the dentist talked to him about his son.

Meaning of Death for College Students

Termination of this life, but survival of the spirit	34%
Endless sleep	8%

The end, the final process of life	5%

"There I was in the dentist's chair, and he wanted to tell me about his murdered son," he said. "I was really uncomfortable then. I'm not that way now. I understand what college students must go through when someone close to them dies."

The study will begin as soon as Balk recruits enough students. The project itself will take two years, but Balk hopes to be able to give academic credit for those who participate. Whatever happens will be done within the parameters of University guidelines.

Dr. David Balk, assistant professor of human development and family studies, is studying students coping with bereavement.

"There's definitely a lot to be learned from it," Balk said. "That might be one benefit we might be able to give people."

In a previous study done by Balk, he discovered that about 60 percent of college students have had someone close to them die within the last six months. Balk said those numbers were completely unexpected.

"That really blew me away," he said. "I think over 40 percent said they had a friend die within the last year. About 25 percent said a member of their family had died within the last year. At least 10,000 students or more here on this campus have had someone

U.S. plane crashes overseas

WEST BERLIN (AP) — A huge U.S. Air Force transport plane crashed and burned early Wednesday at the Ramstein Air Base in West Germany, killing several people, a U.S. military spokesman said. One report said nine people were killed.

Air Force spokesman Capt. Ed Worley said the C-5 cargo plane was headed to Frankfurt's Rhein-Main base, but did not know whether the aircraft was involved in the round-the-clock deployment of U.S. troops and supplies to the Persian Gulf.

"There were some deaths and some people are in the hospital, but we don't have the numbers sorted out yet," said Worley. "We think there were 17 people on board."

A local official in Ramstein, speaking on condition of anonymity, said nine people were killed.

Gainesville battles serial killer

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Two more bodies were discovered Tuesday, two days after three women students were found slain and mutilated in their apartments, setting off a wave of fear at the start of the school year.

"It's clear this part of the country has some maniac on the loose," University of Florida President John Lombardi said during a staff meeting. "It reminds us of a natural catastrophe. The killer is selecting victims by criteria that are not clear to us."

The bodies of a man and a woman were found together Tuesday morning at a student apartment complex near one where two bodies were found Sunday, said Alachua County Sheriff's Lt. Spencer Mann.

Police set up a command post between those off-campus sites and about two miles from the apartment where a third body was discovered early Monday.

Police had said they believed the earlier discoveries of the three mutilated young women were related, but they were not ready to link Tuesday's findings.

Some students fled home, while others' parents rushed here to guard their children. Some students said the slayings were reminiscent of those by executed serial killer Ted Bundy.

Tornadoes rip Illinois towns

CREST HILL, Ill. (AP) — Tornadoes ripped through several northern Illinois towns Tuesday, flattening an apartment complex, a high school and at least 50 homes and killing at least 15 people.

State authorities said National Guard troops were called out to prevent looting in devastated communities around Joliet, some 40 miles southwest of Chicago, where at least four twisters tore a seven-mile-long path of destruction.

Lockport Fire Chief Dave Martis said the bodies of at least seven people killed by the tornado were found near an apartment complex in Crest Hill, a community on the outskirts of Joliet. Three bodies were lying in a cornfield next to the complex, and four others were pulled from the collapsed buildings.

"When the storm went through, some of the buildings disintegrated," Martis said. "High winds blew some of the people into the corn field."

Five people died in Plainfield, a community to the northwest of Joliet, said John Watson, ambulance services chief for the Plainfield Fire Department.

Rare gonorrhea hits Wichita

WICHITA (AP) - A rare strain of gonorrhea resistant to penicillin treatment has exploded in Sedgwick County in the past month, a spokeswoman for the city-county health department said Monday.

The department has treated 21 cases of penicillinase-producing gonorrhea, a sexually transmitted disease, since the first of August, said Judy Reno, director of personal health. That compares with only five cases for all of 1989, she said.

"This is certainly in epidemic proportions," Reno said. "This happened in Wyandotte County and Geary County last year, and we luckily escaped it, but now it seems to be here."

Common gonorrhea can be cured with penicillin, but penicillinase-producing gonorrhea cannot, Reno said. Other more expensive drugs are available to treat the disease, she said.

The problem is that people who suspect they have gonorrhea may try to treat it themselves using penicillin tablets left over from a previous sickness, Reno said. Although the drug will eliminate the symptoms of gonorrhea, it will not cure the disease, she said.

"If there's one message we want to say, it's don't treat yourself," Reno said. Instead, make an appointment with your doctor or with the health department, which charges according to a person's ability to pay.

"Most often people will make an assumption about who gets sexually transmitted diseases, but this one is cutting across all economic and social strata of our community, so you're not protected," Reno said.

The health department treated about 3,000 cases of common gonorrhea last year.

Fort Riley waste site priority

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency added 106 waste sites Tuesday to the national priority list for cleanup, including one in Kansas.

That site is Fort Riley, near Junction City.

The 106 sites include 23 federal government facilities.

The action brings the total number of sites on the list to 1,187, including 116 federal facilities, mostly Defense Department installations.

Another 20 sites, all non-federal, have been proposed for listing, with decisions expected within a few months, the agency said.

Parties debate abortion issue

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Republican Party urged its candidates Tuesday to develop their own positions on abortion, while Democrats skirted the issue as the two parties adopted their platforms for the general election campaign this fall.

Both parties seemed bent on trying to avoid internal divisions over the volatile abortion issue by virtually ignoring it in their platforms, which are broadly-worded statements on various issues. Candidates are not bound by the positions, but opponents sometimes try to use them for embarrassment.

The Republican platform, adopted at the Statehouse without amendment or dissent, said only, "The Republican Party urges its candidates to express, and work for, their personal views on the issue of abortion. We encourage the development of sound public policy as it relates to the question of abortion."

The Democratic platform, also adopted at the Statehouse but only after prolonged discussion and several amendments, never mentioned the abortion issue — by design.

Full parking lots pose problem

Police chief expects on-campus traffic to lessen soon

By Tomari Quinn
Managing Editor

Parking permit sales appear to be about the same as last year, and officials said they expect the high numbers of cars on campus to decrease next week.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said the exact count of the permits sold will not be known until after sales figures are compiled from tables at the residence halls and enrollment.

Although parking spaces seem to be at a premium, Beckom said the number of cars on campus tends to level off after Labor Day weekend. Large numbers of visitors on campus is also a contributing factor to the filled parking lots, he said.

"As those visitor numbers dwindle out, we will begin to see it stabilize," he said.

John Pence, director of public safety, said he also expects the number of on-campus cars to drop off after Labor Day, and said the crowded lots are usually a problem at the beginning of the semester.

"There is an overabundance of cars on campus," Pence said. "Most fall semesters, we have this problem until students learn the procedure, learn that they can walk to class and so forth."

Many new people that are not accustomed to the system will learn the ropes of how to get around the University after the first week of classes, Beckom said.

Finding an open parking space early in the morning can be a problem, said Laura Vetter, sophomore in philosophy and pre-law.

"Every parking lot is full," Vetter said. "I think they're glutting, taking advantage of the situation.

"Forty bucks for a chance to get a parking place — it's ridiculous," she said. "They need another parking lot."

Pence said about 10,000 to 12,000 permits are normally sold by this time in the semester, and many more probably won't be sold.

"I don't know if it's more than other semesters," he said. "Every year for the last four or five years, parking has been trouble at the start of the semester."

Students living less than a block from the University are driving to campus, Beckom said, and will begin walking once they realize it's faster than searching for a parking space.

A parking lot often underused is B-16, just behind Weber Hall, he said. The lot is often less than half-filled.

"The reason people don't use it as much is because of the walking distance," Beckom said. "We still haven't become a walking society."

Beckom said he considered the University a large city, and said that unlike many large cities the University has been able to accommodate the majority of the people with nearby parking lots.

"Every University faces the fact that there is no way to have the perfect parking situation," he said.

Mike Welchhans/Collegian
Eric Becker, senior in English, hands his parking permit fee to Derek Jackson, graduate in personnel administration, Tuesday in the Derby Food Center. Tuesday was the first day hall residents could purchase permits.

Skaters on campus facing restrictions

By The Collegian Staff

Skateboarders are now restricted to bike paths on campus. The decision was approved by the administration following several complaints about damage to facilities outside McCain Auditorium and Durland Hall.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said McCain and Durland have both been damaged by skateboarders who often skate both inside and outside of the buildings. The skaters damaged the benches and stands outside of Durland and would skate through McCain, Beckom said.

"They were basically abusing our facilities," he said.

Donald Rathbone, Dean of Engineering, estimated the damages to Durland Hall to be in the hundreds of dollars.

In order to deter skating on benches, right angle slats were added to the sides of the benches, Rathbone said.

"The University campus is not a playground for skateboarders," he said.

Although this restriction is not officially in the University's rules and regulations, those who disobey will be given an oral warning. If caught again they can be cited with a $10 fine, Beckom said.

Even though the majority of the skateboarders are 16 to 19 years old, that does not mean they cannot be ticketed, he said. Criminal or civil litigation may be brought upon those caught disobeying the restriction if damage is done.

"I'm very pleased with the quick response by the administration. I understand that a place is needed for skateboarders to go, but I don't believe the University campus is that place," Rathbone said.

Beckom said the restriction will be enforced with officers walking about campus and forewarning skateboarders of the restricted areas.

Casual attitude of Bush projects wrong image

President Bush, who started off his term by borrowing from Jimmy Carter and walking in the inaugural parade, wants any comparisons to end there.

That's why he is on vacation as thousands of men and women are canceling theirs to go and face Saddam Hussein's troops in the Middle East.

Of course, presidential spokespersons assure us, Bush has his finger on the pulse of world events even as he slices on the eighth tee or complains, as he eats pork rinds on the deck of his cigarette boat, about the one that got away.

During the Iran hostage crisis, Carter took the opposite approach by virtually locking himself in the White House while his spokespersons told us of Carter's herculean efforts to secure the release of the 50-odd diplomats held by the early-'80s Middle East madman, the Ayatollah Khomeini.

Bush seems to forget that at the time, Carter faced a challenge from Sen. Ted Kennedy for the Democratic presidental nomination. Looking like a president wrestling a crisis served Carter well. He beat Kennedy. But it backfired when Ronald Reagan made him look like a micromanager trapped in the minutiae of government.

Past presidents have taken pains to look military, or at least concerned, in times of conflict. Washington led troops in the field during the Whiskey Rebellion. Lincoln braved sniper fire watching an assault on Washington. F.D.R. met Churchill on a warship in the Atlantic during the undeclared naval war against Hitler's U-Boats, and Eisenhower went to Korea.

Maybe Bush can control the American military apparatus from his estate in Maine as well as he could in Washington. However, doing so while ordering soldiers and sailors into harm's way seems to be the wrong kind of image for the commander-in-chief.

New solution needed for parking problem

Searching for elusive parking places has once again begun for thousands of students who purchased permits.

At the beginning of each fall semester, the K-State Police sell more than 10,000 parking permits. Unfortunately, many of those students with permits are forced to park on side streets or in metered lots.

Improvements in the K-State Union and West Stadium parking lots have helped the situation, but more needs to be done.

Not allowing students who live within a five-block radius to have parking permits would eliminate unnecessary cars on campus. Those students could park in the metered parking on days they are not able to walk to campus.

Although additional staff might be needed to monitor the purchase of permits, campus police would save time and money in the long run, as fewer parking violations would occur when spaces are available. The police could then spend less time on tickets and wheel locks and concentrate on more pressing matters.

The Bramlage Coliseum parking lot is vacant most days and could provide an ideal solution. The University could develop a system much like the one used by the K-State Union Express. The express operates between the Union and Bramlage during home basketball games and allows people to park in the Union parking lot and get a ride to the game.

The campus police could continue to sell surplus permits, but a shuttle would make the permits valid and not just a slip of plastic granting the right to hunt for a parking space.

Restricting access to students not needing permits could help alleviate the lack of parking spaces. A shuttle between the Union and Bramlage parking lots would be both convenient and timesaving for students and should be considered. Ignoring the problem will not make it go away.

More diplomacy needed

"War is, after all, the universal perversion. We are all tainted: if we cannot experience our perversion at first hand we spend our time reading war stories, the pornography of war; or seeing war films, the blue films of war; or titillating our senses with the imagination of great deeds, the masturbation of war." John Rae, British writer, (1931-)

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

It can be said with reasonable assurance that humanity is in a constant state of flux. Yet, despite all the changes which have occurred throughout human history, we have managed as a species to be consistent in at least one thing — war.

We do it with great frequency.

In fact you might say we are unique in our desire and ability to annihilate our own kind. Some would argue we are singularly so.

Therefore, the events of recent weeks should come as no surprise. We, as nations, are simply doing what comes natural.

We can easily trace the course of human conflict through history by identifying the technology of a specific age, for the current technology has always been employed in the "art" of killing on a mass scale. And that is essentially what war is — sanctioned mass murder.

Our wise leaders identify the "enemy" for us, and then provide the legal, moral, and instrumental means by which we can blow the brains out of other human beings — and feel good about it in the process.

The earliest evidence of technology employed for the specialized purpose of war can be found in the walls of Jericho, which date from about 8000 BC. These walls, which measure 13 feet in height with watchtowers some 28 feet tall, were intended to protect its human inhabitants from human intruders.

Some paleoanthropologists go as far as to suggest Homo sapiens may have eliminated its evolutionary rivals through a more proficient adaptation of primitive tools to the purpose of killing — a theory that, on the surface, hardly seems surprising.

That is because recorded history is replete with the glorious chronicles of nation-states at war. Nation-states are essentially designed for one purpose — the collective security (national interest?) and defense of the state. Little wonder then that nations go to war.

According to Gwynne Dyer in his book titled "War," during the entire period of modern European history from 1480 to 1940, it has been calculated that there were about 2,600 important battles. Millions of combatants died. Even without the aid of a history book and only a daily newspaper with which to gage, an alien observer might readily conclude from the numbers of soldiers sent to their heavenly reward that mankind finds war ... well ... tantalizing.

I recently had the opportunity to observe, first hand, young men going to the Middle East to, for all they knew (or still know), fight and die for their country. "Rambomania" is the only way I can describe it. Going off to "kill some rugheads," as one American warrior put it, for God and country ... and oil.

Where does this kind of thinking, or more specifically, lack thereof, originate? Is man inherently a killer? Do we have a genetic predisposition for war — like behavior?

Man, I believe, does not have a predisposition for killing. Nations do. War, or rather the desire for war, arises from the nationalism generated by the nation-state as an integral part of "collective security."

Simple statistics will tell you the overwhelming majority of us do not kill — could not kill — without an extreme application of pressure or stress of some kind. The average person must be conditioned to kill. That is the reason all nations incorporate some form of "basic military training" to instill the necessary psychological means to overcome what is a natural aversion — taking the life of another living, breathing human being.

As Dyer points out, basic training is not really about teaching military skills, but rather about teaching people to do things they would not have dreamt of doing otherwise. "The business of armies, in the end, is killing, and so a crucial part of training people to be soldiers is teaching them to ignore the limits they normally place on the actual use of violence, so that in the right circumstances, against the "enemy," they will go all the way and actually kill him. For the vast majority of people, killing has to be taught ...."

He cites a study by U.S. Army Colonel S. L. A. Marshall in 1943-45, in which individual and mass interviews were conducted with more than 400 infantry companies in Europe and in the Central Pacific. Marshall states, "The thing is simply this, that out of an average 100 men along the line of fire during the period of an encounter, only 15 men on average would take any part with the weapons. This was true whether the action was spread over a day, or two days or three ... In the most aggressive infantry companies, under the most intense local pressure, the figure rarely rose above 25 percent of total strength from the opening to the close of an action."

Even though trained to kill, each individual rifleman when unobserved in his individual foxhole, had chose not to kill, regardless of the fact it increased the possibility of his own death. Soldiers have since been trained to kill in a "collective" fashion (again, the nation-state) in which peer pressure can function to its fullest extent.

Remarkable? Not really.

Because another highly developed skill, which scientists agree allowed man to outdistance his evolutionary cousins, was verbal communication or "language" — something that, after millions of years of evolution, now comes to us quite naturally, almost instinctively — and which has been sorely lacking in a meaningful, constructive sense in all the recent news coverage concerning the so-called "crisis in the Gulf."

If the news media and politicians — and it is largely politicians who determine when and where we make war — were to talk less of war and put more effort into diplomacy, then we most certainly could avoid war. The problem is all this talk — glorification, if you will — of war.

Actually, that is not quite true.

The problem is that there is also a large disparity between those who determine if we wage war and those who do the actual warring. If those politicians who propose to wage war were made to do the warring, then we could truly avoid war.

Make that a proposal.

Saddam and George with pistols at 20 paces ... no, make that 10.

What do you say guys?

LETTERS

Label deceiving

Editor,

Did you catch the Aug. 28 article Aug. quoting Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan? Did you catch the way Hurt employed the pro-aborts' newest semantic weapon? Oh, it wasn't aimed at the Right to Lifers. No, it was aimed at you, or more accurately at your mind.

Following the Webster decision, knowing that they were losing public support for the killing of developing babies, they launched their initial attack on your mind when they labeled Right-to-Life (pro-life) people as anti-abortionists. Remember? It seems that the negative feelings they hoped to evoke from the label "anti" weren't working well enough to stop the erosion of their support. So, on to a new strategy.

They reasoned that every American believes in freedom (that's what America is all about). So, they have set out to get people to forget about the killing, to focus on "women's rights" and to think of supporters of the Right-to-Life as "anti-choice" (who could support any position that opposed choice).

Don't be deceived, those who are "anti-choice" are those who refuse to ensure the right of the unborn to choose to live.

Phelps' complaint dropped after panel review

Stephan claims exoneration from accusation of perjury

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A review panel of the state Board for Discipline of Attorneys has dismissed an ethics complaint brought by Fred Phelps Sr. alleging Attorney General Bob Stephan lied two years ago in court testimony. The complaint was dismissed due to lack of evidence.

Phelps, a Topeka minister and former attorney who ran unsuccessfully for Democratic nomination for governor in the Aug. 7 primary election, disclosed the fact the complaint had been dismissed and Stephan confirmed it.

Both issued statements, Stephan saying the dismissal exonerates him and Phelps alleging a whitewash by the disciplinary administrator.

The complaint was filed almost a year ago by Phelps, who alleged Stephan committed perjury in his testimony during the November 1988 trial of a lawsuit brought by Marcia Tomson Stingley, a former employee in the attorney general's office, charging breach of contract.

That lawsuit was filed after Stephan made public terms of a settlement in a previous suit brought by Stingley claiming sexual harassment by Stephan when she worked in his office.

A federal court jury awarded Stingley $200,000 damages, but she has never collected the money because Stephan said he couldn't pay it and took bankruptcy.

Phelps contended the alleged perjury occurred when Stephan testified that he did not know terms of the settlement until friends persuaded him to let them be disclosed at a news conference because secrecy over the settlement was damaging him politically.

Phelps has said the perjury allegation also is being investigated by the U.S. Justice Department.

In a letter to Phelps, which Stephan made public, Deputy Disciplinary Administrator Stanton A. Hazlett said a three-member review committee of the Board for Discipline of Attorneys had dismissed the complaint because it "found that there was no meritorious evidence which shows a violation of the standards of professional conduct or responsibility or the oath of office by Attorney General Stephan."

Hazlett also criticized Phelps for what he said was a "complete lack of cooperation in the investigation of this matter." He said Phelps failed to meet last March in Lawrence with Don Vasos, a Kansas City lawyer assigned to investigate the complaint, to give a statement in support of the complaint.

Hazlett also had this warning for Phelps:

"In the future, if you file complaints with this office and do not cooperate in the investigation of those complaints, I will immediately seek court permission to dismiss your complaint. I will not tolerate any further misuse of the disciplinary system on your part."

In response, Phelps wrote Chief Justice Robert H. Miller, saying, "Mr. Bruce Miller, your so-called disciplinary administrator has dismissed my complaint against Bob Stephan after stonewalling nearly a year, just as I predicted.

"Miller, Stephan's bosom buddy, sat on the complaint without investigation until a politically propitious time, no doubt with your court's corrupt blessing.

"Fortunately, I anticipated this result and filed the same complaint with Judge (Dale) Saffels (who heard the Stingley-Stephan case in federal court)."

The chief justice declined comment.

Edberg loses at Open; McEnroe wins

Top seed upset by Soviet Volkov

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Alexander Volkov examined the U.S. Open draw and considered his situation, the No. 52 player in the world against No. 1-ranked and top-seeded Stefan Edberg.

So the Soviet left-hander did the logical thing — he made plans to play in a club tournament in Berlin at the end of the week.

"I am to play there Friday," he said. "I was to leave Wednesday. Maybe I will change my plans."

He'd better after springing the first upset of the tournament Tuesday, wiping out Wimbledon champion Edberg in straight sets, 6-3, 7-6, 6-2.

Volkov came in as a longshot, with Edberg seeming to peak after beating Boris Becker at Wimbledon, a win that triggered a string of four straight tournament victories for the Swede. The 23-year-old Soviet came in with a plan, though.

"I saw him play so many times," he said. "I thought I had to play a topspin serve to the inside court. If not, I would have no chance."

So Volkov pursued his plan and soon discovered an added piece of ammunition. "I think he was much (more) tired than I was," he said.

Volkov, however, was taking nothing for granted.

"He's No. 1," he said. "So many times he's been down and came back to win. You have to keep playing if you want to beat him. I played well. He played badly."

That will do it every time.

Volkov pressed his advantage, and Edberg, who gained the No. 1 ranking two weeks ago, could not answer the challenge.

"He was slower than usual," Volkov said. "I saw it. I didn't think about it. If you do, it changes."

Volkov grew up in Kalingrad on the Baltic Sea.

"It is a small town," he said. "Four hundred thousand. For Russia, that is small."

Former champ faces uphill battle

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — He is unseeded now. An afterthought in the draw of the U.S. Open, trying to feel his way through the malaise that has gripped his game.

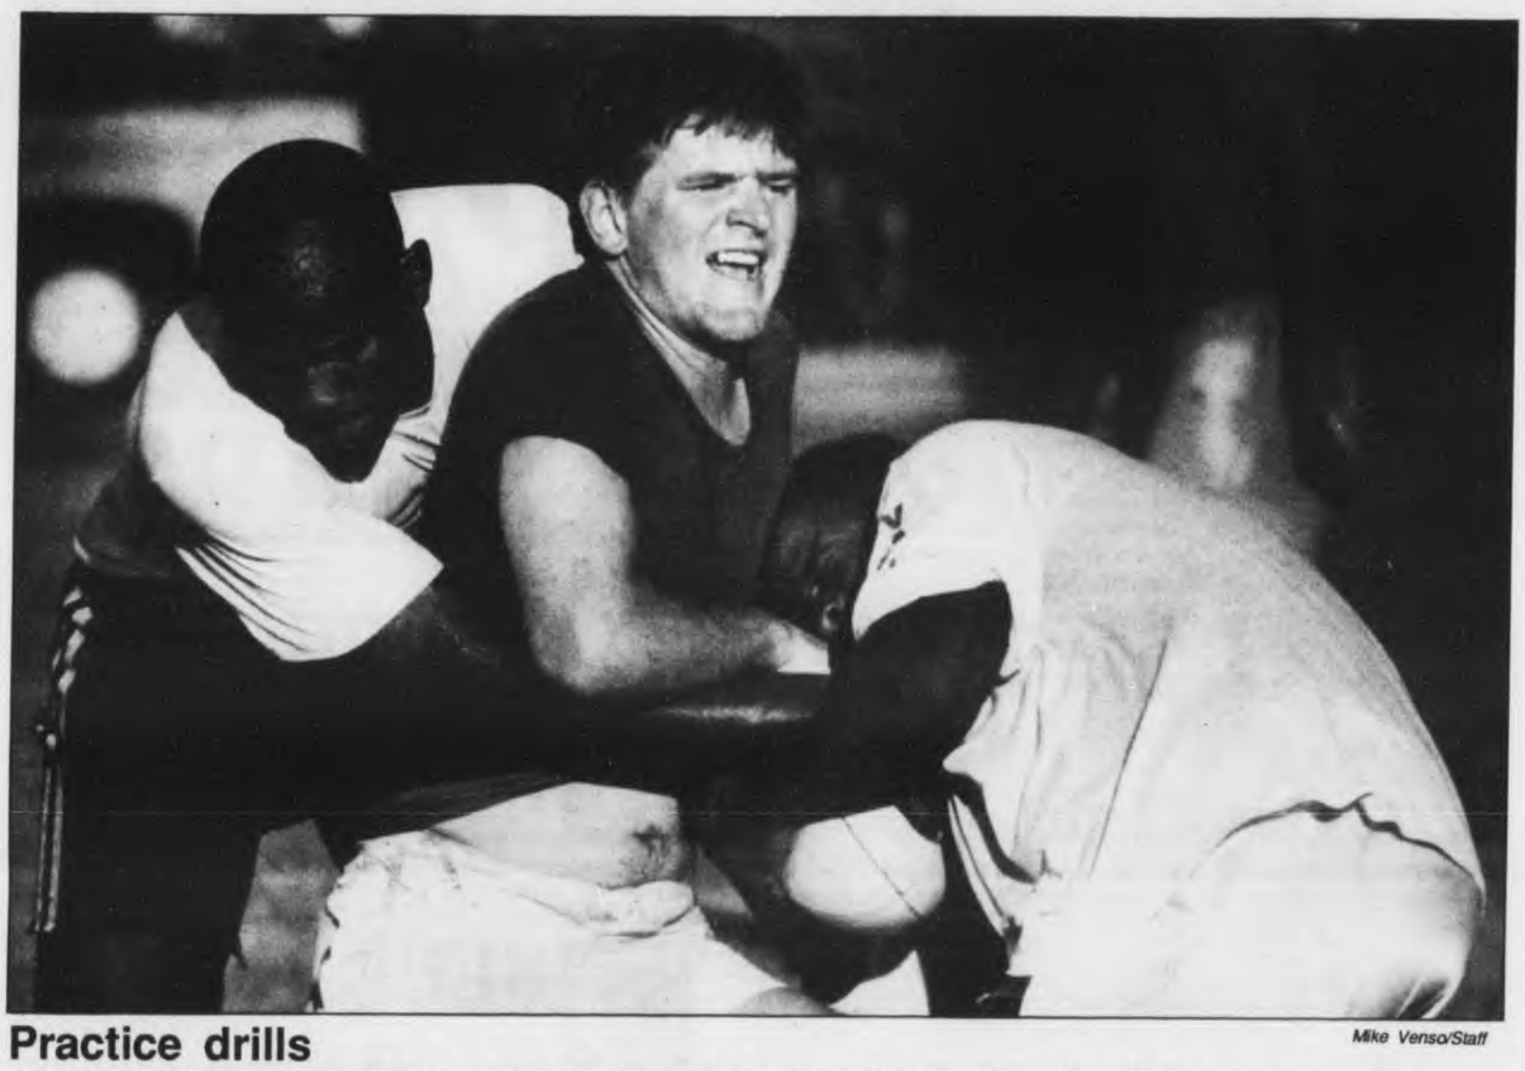
And yet, John McEnroe still lights the fires of the fans at the National Tennis Center.

They packed the stadium Tuesday to watch Johnny Mac fight a nearly three-hour battle for survival, barely beating Javier Sanchez. It was a straight-set victory, but a close one.

The first two sets went to tiebreakers, with McEnroe fighting off a set point in the first to win 7-6, 7-6. He finished Sanchez 6-4 in the third. It was hardly vintage McEnroe, but it will have to do for now.

Was he generally happy with his game?

"I'm generally happy I'm still in the tournament," the 31-year-old McEnroe said.



Hardly the kind of fire and brimstone you might have once expected from tennis' onetime enfant terrible.

"When you get older, your priorities change," he said. "You want to improve as a person. Winning at any cost isn't as important. I don't think any player wants his whole being based on whether he wins or loses a match."

This is a kinder, gentler McEnroe, his face smeared with zinc oxide to fight off the sun. The old Mac would have scorned the sun, not protected himself from it. The old Mac might not have been as blunt about his chances.

"I don't really like them," he said. "It's not like it's out there potentially. It's a question of all things coming together. I've progressed. I'd be happy to pick up another notch here. There's a lot of rust to get out. It's a long term project."

A year ago, McEnroe's first tennis recovery had carried him to No. 4 in the world. Now he has drifted back down to No. 21.

Linebacker Snipes among Chiefs' cuts

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Linebacker Angelo Snipes, who had battled back from a knee injury, was among the 18 players waived Monday as the Kansas City Chiefs trimmed their roster to 60.

In another move, Pro Bowl safety Deron Cherry was placed on the physically-unable-to-perform reserve list. Cherry, recovering from knee surgery last December, cannot be activated until the week following the sixth game, Oct. 14.

Rookie running back Ernest Thompson went on the injured reserve list with a neck strain and will not be eligible for the rest of the season.

Joining Snipes were punter Bryan Barker; defensive end Ken Hackemack; running back Kevin Harmon; safety Will Hill; linebacker Craig Hudson; wide receiver Tony Jeffery; defensive lineman Lee Johnson; tight end Rod Jones; quarterback Ken Karcher; guard Mike Kiselak; running back Bren Lowery; kicker Bjorn Nittmo; running back Michael Owens; linebacker Eric Thomas; safety Johnny Thomas; linebacker David Ward and wide receiver Tim Ware.

Coach Marty Schottenheimer said he appreciated Snipes' effort to come back from his injury and be a part of the team. Since coming to Kansas City as a free agent at the end of the 1987 season, he had appeared in 20 games and made eight starts.

"He made the decision to stay here, and we appreciated that. But once we arrived at the decision that he was not going to be on the squad, it was important that we do it right away," Schottenheimer said. "Angelo worked hard. But we've got a couple of other guys we've looked at and we've decided we want to go in that direction. Lonnie Marts has come along and done a good job, and we've got Tracy Rogers, who has played outside linebacker, also working out there. So it just made sense to go ahead and do it. Yes, it's difficult. But they're all difficult."

Choosing between Barker and incumbent punter Kelly Goodburn was particularly tough, Schottenheimer said.

Brittian brings height, experience

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

K-State fans will be watching the third-tallest men's basketball team in Wildcat history this fall.

Late-summer addition Maurice Brittian became the sixth Wildcat 6-foot-8-inches or over, joining an already impressive recruiting class that averages just under 6-6. This will be the first K-State team ever with six players over the 6-8 mark.

Brittian, a 6-9, 250-pound center, transferred to K-State in late July, after spending last year as a redshirt under Coach Dana Altman at Marshall University.

Since the Thundering Herd was placed on probation by the NCAA, Brittian will be immediately eligible to play his senior season this fall for the 'Cats.

Brittian, however, is no stranger to Kansas. The Atlanta native played two years at Hutchinson Community College, where he led the Blue Dragons to a 37-2 record and a first place finish in the 1987-88 National Junior College Athletic Association Tournament.

He was named the tournament's most valuable player and averaged 12.4 points and 7.4 rebounds a game while at Hutchinson.

In 1988-89, Brittian returned to his home state to play at Georgia Tech, where he averaged 4.5 points and 4.6 rebounds per game. As a Yellow Jacket, he shot 62 percent from the field, 74 percent from the line and started in 16 out of 32 games.

Altman said he looks to Brittian, with his past performance and size, to be able to step up and contribute to the new program.

"He's a great passer. He passes the ball very, very well," Altman said. "He's a very good rebounder and very good defensively. I think he can help us a great deal inside.

"He is a solid scorer. He's not a great scorer, but he is capable of having big games offensively," Altman said. "I'd say he would be very comfortable with 15 or 16 points a game."

Altman said he will be welcoming not only Brittian's size and statistics, but also his experience.

"Maurice is someone who has more experience than our other players, both in junior college and at the Division I levels," Altman said. "He knows what I want to do because he was with me last year at Marshall.

"Because of his familiarity with our program, with what I want to do, and because he is a little more experienced than the rest of our players, I think he has some advantages there."

As for Brittian's expectations about playing with the 'Cats in the upcoming 1990-91 season, things look very good.

"I think I'm going to do pretty well," Brittian said. "I didn't play for Coach Altman, but I practiced with his coaching staff for a year. So I pretty much know what's going to happen.

"Once we get everything going, and get everything clicking, I think we are looking foward to a really good season," he said.

After the loss of three key starters, as well as returning only three seniors from last season, Altman said he is eager to find some leadership on the court.

"He is someone we've been looking at to step up and do some things leadership-wise," Altman said.

Transfers move into starting jobs

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Offensive Line

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

The need for a better running game has caused K-State coach Bill Snyder to seek divine intervention.

"I've got to pray that we're further along than we were at this time last year," Snyder said. "I think our chances of winning are few and far between if we aren't improved in our rushing attack."

Statistics told an eerie story for the Wildcats in 1989. K-State gained just 657 yards on the ground all season. Nebraska topped that number in their 58-7 whipping of the 'Cats, with 723 yards.

Forced to rely heavily on the pass, the 'Cats also allowed 33 sacks in 11 games.

"I wasn't around for what happened last year, so I'm looking at this as a whole new chance," transfer offensive tackle Doug Grush said. "If people are expecting us to curl up and die, I think they'll be in for a big surprise."

K-State will attempt to overcome its rushing woes with several new faces in the offensive line. Grush, a 6-foot-3, 275 pound junior from American River (Calif.) Junior College, transferred to K-State in January and moved to the top of the 'Cat depth chart at the end of spring drills.

"Doug was able to go through spring drills with us. He picked up things quickly and emerged as one of our top offensive linemen," Snyder said. "We're expecting him to help us out immediately."

One of Grush's teammates at American River, Casey Blim, was moved from guard to center in spring practice. He is currently backing up redshirt freshman Quentin Neujahr.

"The newcomers have missed a lot, and their unfamiliarity with the system is something that takes time to overcome," Snyder said. "From what I've seen to this point, I would still say that we are better than we were at this stage last year."

Snyder hopes to replace departed linemen Paul Yniguez, Eric Zabelin, Chad Faulkner and Shawn Fleming with a core of experienced underclassmen. Two-year letterman Doug Warren is the veteran of the group, despite missing four games with an ankle injury a year ago. He is listed as the starting right guard, with sophomore Josh Kolb right behind.

Returning lettermen Toby Lawrence and Mike Orr are competing for starting tackle positions, but were listed behind Grush and sophomore

Intramurals often overlooked

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

Not everyone who enjoys athletics can be associated with the glory and hype that comes with playing a college sport.

This is not a well-kept secret, and I can sympathize with those former high school athletes who are now realizing it is time to start exercising again.

This is just one of the reasons why K-State offers such a comprehensive intramural program.

For some of you who have never competed or even heard of the intramural program, you are missing one of the greatest programs offered to students at the University. Not only is it fun and broad-based, I can vouch for its strong competition from active participation.

The winners of every event receive an intramural champion T-shirt that should be worn with pride. Because of the growing popularity of the program, it takes a lot more than just going out and competing to win. When you consider there are more than 20,000 students eligible to participate, the competition is bound to be at its best.

There are divisions for every type of housing, on- or off-campus. For men, the divisions include fraternity, residence hall and independent. The women's category consists of just one division, which includes all three housing groups.

The largest group of participants comes from the greek organizations. Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services, said the other groups are continuing to grow, but can always use more people.

Now that you know the basics behind the intramural program, you probably would like to know what sports you can compete in.

The first group of sports is scheduled to begin Sept. 5. To be able to compete you need to file an entry by 5 p.m. Thursday in the intramurals office on the second floor of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

I can safely say there is an event for everyone. If there is not one in the first round of events, one will definitely pop up later in the fall semester.

First-session events include three-wall handball and racquetball singles, horseshoes, tennis and badminton singles, doubles volleyball, one-on-one basketball, flag football and soccer. All of these events will count as points for team competition except one-on-one basketball and soccer.

In all the men's divisions, there will be a division champion followed by a playoff to determine an all-University champion.

Events scheduled for later this semester include a swim meet, the ever-popular wrestling meet, a single-day cross country race and the unforgettable co-rec inner-tube water polo competition.

I will cover these events and keep the campus informed in my weekly "Intramural Scene" feature every Tuesday.

For all the faculty and staff who think I left them out, there are events just for you. On Sept. 21, the faculty and staff golf tournament will get underway with men's, women's and co-rec divisions.

There will also be a co-rec faculty and staff volleyball tournament at the end of October.

The intramural program is an excellent opportunity for people who hav said they are going to get their behinds off the couch and into to shape to start taking action. It also adds fun and competition to the dreaded exercise experience.

The first meeting for all team managers is at 4 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall.

Commission favors road construction

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

The complete rebuilding of a stretch of Fort Riley Boulevard was approved by the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday.

The street will be rebuilt from the Richards Drive intersection to a point west of Westwood Road, a busy part of Fort Riley Boulevard from the Holiday Inn to the railroad trestle that passes over Wildcat Creek.

"It's not a really long stretch of road but it is very deteriorated," Mike Conduff, Manhattan city manager said.

The project originated as an overlay of new asphalt last year, but city officials decided the base layer was too deteriorated and the road should be reconstructed.

The project will begin in late September and may be done by late fall or early spring, Conduff said.

The official action was taken at a special session of the commission's regular work session. Action on an issue cannot be taken at a work session unless a special session is called.

During the work session, commissioners heard a report from Brent Bowman of Bowman and Associates Architects about the status of the Airport Improvement Project.

Bowman presented the results of a survey conducted by his firm. The study focused on the needs and expectations a new terminal building should fulfill.

The biggest concern was the frequency of service to the airport, Bowman said. Most people want more flights to and from Manhattan.

People were also concerned about air fares and the reliability of flights. Bowman said many people complain when a flight is cancelled from Manhattan, because it ruins travel plans and results in missed connecting flights in Kansas City.

People said the image of the airport and the new terminal building should reflect the present image of Manhattan and what it wants to become, Bowman said.

Space for a gift shop and a full-time travel agent at the terminal were also some new ideas generated by the survey, he said.

The commissioners agreed the design for the terminal should be modest but flexible.

Bowman suggested a marketing study to see how Manhattan might be able to attract more carriers and charter services.

Commissioner Rich Seidler said trying to attract new carriers was like the chicken and the egg paradox.

"If we can't get people to use the air service, we have to provide a reliable service," he said. "But to attract a reliable service, we have to prove we can keep the seats filled."

Minorities' progress at KSU taught

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Minority students now have a chance to learn they are not alone in the struggle for success at K-State.

A new orientation course challenges freshmen to look back in history and realize many other minority K-State students have gone on to success.

"Forewarned is forearmed," said Anne Butler, director of educational supportive services. "By knowing that other students of color were here before, students have a better chance of navigating their way through the University."

The eight-week orientation was Butler's idea and she will be teaching the course. Fourteen students are currently enrolled in the new class.

Most educators realize a student's decision to leave or remain at the University is not just related to academic ability, self-concept and financial responsibility, Butler said. Students must also realize what the University expects of them.

"We want students to look backward and forward," Butler said. "We'll look at students of color in the past at K-State."

In 1906, 426 students were enrolled at K-State; of those, 19 were minorities. In 1989, more than 20,000 students were enrolled with about 1,300 minority students.

"These figures symbolize the difficulty and slowness of change in higher education," Butler said. "We've gone from 1 percent to 5 percent in 84 years."

Many times students come to the University with high aspirations and leave disillusioned, Butler said. By familiarizing students with the mission and history of the University, they will be able to make their way through more easily.

The orientation class will acquaint students with higher education. Classes for the first four weeks will concentrate on how to use campus resources, talk about the differences in high school work and college assignments and discuss campus involvement. It will also provide students with an opportunity to act out roles as University administrators in order to better understand the decision-making process, Butler said.

The last half of the class students will conduct research on past K-State students and address the factors that cause minorities to leave the University.

"The overriding story is there is a long legacy of students who attended K-State and went on to success," Butler said. "Students must understand they are expected to do the same. I want them to know students of color have been Truman Scholars, presidents of the student body and members of Blue Key Honorary. It is important to have high expectations for students and help them understand why they should have high expectations for themselves."

Minority students can assume roles to enrich themselves and the University, Butler said.

Student-faculty advising remains personal

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

The importance of the one-on-one student/teacher advising process has not been forgotten at K-State, even in times of increasing enrollment.

Although various departments in some colleges do use group advising sessions, all provide a chance for students to have personal guidance in their academic decisions.

"We believe relationships between students and faculty are very important," said John Riley, assistant director of residential instruction in the College of Agriculture. "We want students to feel like they can come to us anytime with any type of problem."

Riley said group advising works to a limited extent for pre-enrollment formalities, but one-on-one advising can take the student and the faculty member beyond the academic setting.

> Advising really is a part of teaching, and it's not something you can separate from the teaching process.
> —John Dollar
> assistant dean of engineering

"A large number of students and faculty members develop a strong friendship, and that is important," he said.

John Dollar, assistant dean of engineering, said he prefers the one-on-one method as well. When students enter the college as freshmen, they are immediately assigned a faculty member in their department.

"I think this is really the way to go," Dollar said. "It is really what advising is all about when you can sit down and talk with an individual and get assistance."

Dollar said there is no doubt departments with a large number of students have a heavy load at times, but generally there are no problems with having too many students to advise.

"Advising really is a part of teaching, and it's not something you can separate from the teaching process," he said.

Vernon Kurtz, professor of curriculum and instruction in the College of Education, is a group adviser. He said he believes group sessions are helpful because many advising questions can be answered at one time.

"They can help each other a lot," Kurtz said. "Many times more than one student has the same question."

Most departments in the College of Arts and Sciences have one-on-one advising, although there is no set policy. Associate Dean Judith Zivanovic said the advising policy is left up to the individual departments.

"Some of our programs have a fairly straightfoward curriculum and use group advising," she said. "Others have a broader range and are more geared to individual advising."

Kay Stewart, assistant dean of instuctional services in the College of Business, is a firm believer in one-on-one advising which is the standard in the college.

"I don't like group advising," she said. "The students never feel they get enough attention and they hesitate to bring up problems in front of other people.

Stewart said any group counseling is done strictly as preliminary sessions.

The College of Human Ecology's advising policy is a combination of group and one-on-one. Karen Pence, assistant to the dean, said most departments have drop-in times when all advisers are in one room. Students come in as a group and meet as individuals.

"This really gives students a chance to talk with advisers, and they can be in and out in a very short time if they want to," Pence said.

The adviser to advisee ratio in most human ecology departments ranges anywhere from 10 to as many as 65 students in some of the larger departments. Pence said pre-enrollment time can be very stressful for advisers, but generally the departments work far enough ahead to avoid problems.

Two levels of advising make transitions smoother for education students said Emmett Wright, associate dean of the College of Education.

Wright said students entering the college are assigned professional advisers. After the student completes about 60 hours they are advised individually.

Cardiologist joins Lafene

Hiring of Chaffin fills vacated post

By Scott Berg
Science Reporter

A certified cardiologist has joined the Lafene Health Center staff.

Dr. Raines A. Chaffin was hired Aug. 6 after a year long search to replace the position vacated by Dr. Tom Ryan.

Certified in both basic and advanced cardiac life support, Chaffin is a welcome addition to the staff, said Lannie W. Zweimiller, director of Lafene. He complements a staff that already includes doctors certified in internal, family and emergency medicine. Chaffin will serve as a staff physician.

A native Kansan, Chaffin grew up in Olathe and graduated from the University of Kansas School of Medicine in 1987. He recently completed his residency with the Floyd Medical Center in Rome, Ga., a 250-bed hospital.

Chaffin is a young doctor and Lafene administrators consider this a positive factor in relating to the students, Zweimiller said. "I'm trained in family practice and can treat patients of all ages ," Chaffin said.

Chaffin's main interest is procedural work, the one-on-one aspect of working with patients. His duties include seeing patients by appointment, working in the walk-in and women's clinics and being on call during the evenings until midnight and on weekends.

Chaffin's addition to the staff was needed, Zweimiller said, as student use of Lafene has contined to rise.

"If student utilization continues to increase, it might be a cause of enlarging the staff," he said.

Zweimiller said student use increased 5 percent last year and has increased 5 to 7 percent over the last three years, averaging 66,000 visits per year or 250-400 visits per day.

Health fee increases over the past couple years have compensated for the increase in expenses created by the rise in student use, he said. The increases were approved by student referendum and implemented in the fall of 1989.

Health center's namesake dies

Director instrumental in establishing Lafene facilities

By Scott Berg
Science Reporter

Dr. Benjamin Lafene died on Aug. 6 at age 89. Students knew him best by the health center named in his honor.

Lafene earned his medical degree at Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio and set up a practice in Marysville, Kan. in the mid-1930s. During World War II, Lafene served in the army at the Presidio near San Francisco. His duties included transfering war casualities to hospitals closer to their homes.

After the war, Lafene became a staff physician at K-State. In 1948, he was appointed director of student health services by former K-State President Milton Eisenhower. He resigned from the post after 13 years because he said then-Gov. Docking had made it too difficult to locate qualified doctors for Kansas universities. He remained on staff until retiring in 1971.

While director, he and other faculty members pressured the Legislature to fund the building of a new hospital. The WWII army barracks they were using for the health facilities were run-down, drafty and they had simply outgrown the space. He oversaw the construction and used foresight in planning for the future use of the building. Upon completion of the building, President James McCain named the health center after Lafene.

"He was one of the first living people to have a building named after him at K-State," said William A. Salero, pharmacist at the Lafene Health Center.

Lafene was deeply honored to have the clinic named after him, Salero said. He was a dignified professional and a likeable person.

'Gloryline' lyrics, sound challenging yet familiar

Dreams So Real album worth it

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

It's a tempting crutch reviewers have, to categorize new bands into already existing groups. It's a simple matter of best explaining what music sounds like to those who haven't heard it before. Really.

This particular method of description is nearly impossible with the album "Gloryline" by the Athens, Ga., trio Dreams So Real. Somehow, the group manages to blend a progressive college sound with country, easy-listening and rock.

Although the sound is totally new, you can't help but feel like it was something you heard on your mom and dad's turntable when you were little. In fact, the remake of "Day by Day," written by Pete Ham, has stupified everyone in the newsroom as to who originally recorded it. Non-traditional students, instructors...anyone have the answer?

It sounds so circa-1975-familiar, but I'm afraid most of us were listening to "The People in Your Neighborhood," at the time. Regardless, the song brings about a warm, nostalgic feeling of a time when life was simple (and for traditional students, it was).

Besides a hard-to-label sound, Dreams So Real offers the listener original lyrics. At first, I suspected the group was a Christian one, but the songs make no mention of God. The words do challenge the meaning of life, the struggle between good and evil and the possibility of what will come after death.

Check out the words to "Gloryline," the title track: "In the promised land/a cracked artifact under the sand/There is meaning here/Rest easy, there's nothing to fear."

But later in the same song: "The preachers stand atop their Bibles/but they won't be held liable/They just tell the same old story/This train is bound for glory."

With song titles like "Faith," "Here Comes the Train," "We Have Danced the Night Away" and "Long Road," this is definitely not a beer-drinkin', party-all-night kind of album.

"DREAMS SO REAL"
C

If you want to challenge whatever beliefs you may have about life, death or religion, this is a good one. Best of all, the inside pages are filled with a set of complete, handy-dandy lyrics for your analytic enjoyment.

The talented tenor voice of lead singer Barry Marler, who also lays down some great acoustic guitar tracks, is worth listening to — even if you don't have the energy to examine the meaning of the words. Bassist and back-up vocalist Trent Allen and drummer Drew Worsham round out the group with similar work on each song.

On the whole, the album didn't jump out and grab me. It's the kind of thing that I probably wouldn't notice if I wasn't intentionally listening to it. Dreams So Real must have friends in "the biz," though — Cindy Wilson of the B-52s provides back-up on the track "Stand Tall."

Is "Gloryline" worth buying? If you're tired of listening to the same old Top-40 or even the KSDB-FM rotation, it's a good one to have.

But then again, I got it for free.

Database system will provide research funding information

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

K-State faculty and staff will soon have access to a database of government and non-government funds for faculty and graduate study research.

Jill Rydberg, associate director of the Research Foundation of the State University of New York, explained the capabilities of Sponsored Program Information Network to about 75 faculty and staff today at the K-State Union.

By using key word codes for specific fields of interest, research projects can be matched with grants available in that area. Other codes can give a listing of all the grants offered by a specific sponsor, said Rydberg.

"SPIN also provides a weekly reference list of announced fundings from the Federal Register — at your fingertips," said Rydberg.

"The speed of this new system will allow me to help many more people find money for research," said Rose Bissey, information specialist with the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs.

While most of the sponsors listed in the database are ongoing and long term, there is a listing of "one-shot" funding projects, Rydberg said. These are requests by federal agencies looking for experts with the time and staff to do a research project.

In addition to finding sponsors, information about application deadlines, contacts and if the sponsor accepts requests continuously or only at specific times is also given.

There is also a file of funds and grants that are no longer available called "elephant graveyard," Rydberg said. This file was created when government cuts became common during the early part of Ronald Reagan's presidency.

"One week a grant was listed and the next it was not," Rydberg said.

"We should have the system functioning by mid-September," said Bissey.

Officers use bears to comfort children

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

As sirens blast through the air, one only needs to look at the child in the middle of the confusion to realize how frightened he or she must be.

But, the Riley County Police Department has found a way to ease those fears and help both the child and the police officer.

Bears on Patrol is a new program implemented July 1, 1990, to calm children in traumatized situations. When officers deal with a child in an uncomfortable or frightening situation, they give the child a teddy bear to reduce the trauma.

"We could tell that the bears made a significant difference," said Rob Hoskins, police officer, said. "In many situations, the child can't hold onto Mommy or Daddy, so they cuddle with the bear and that gives them a sense of security."

Hoskins said: "We kicked around the idea of needing a go-between with children who were distressed or traumatized."

The officers thought that something like candy would work, Hoskins said, but Diane Hooper, Bears on Patrol program director, and Carla Swartz came up with the idea for the teddy bears.

Riley County's program was modeled after a program implemented by the Topeka Police Department in conjunction with the Kansas Bureau of Investigation. Hooper said similar programs exist in Junction City and Wichita and throughout the nation.

According to Hoskins, bears are given to children ages 12 and under in a variety of situations. Hoskins and Hooper said some of the situations include children in accidents, domestic violence such as abuse or neglect, dog bites or children who are lost.

Hoskins said last week he gave six bears to children ranging in age from eight years old to 10 months.

During an average week, Hooper said officers distribute five to 10 bears. Since the program's implementation, 38 bears have been distributed.

Before officers used bears, Hoskins said, "The officer would just hug the child until he or she calmed down. Many times the child would just cling to the officer, often when the officer needed to conduct other business."

"It helps both the officer and the child," Hooper said. "When the child is calm, the officer can get the information faster."

When the officer gives out the bear, he or she then fills out an evaluation sheet about how the bear affects the child. Hooper said all evaluations show the children respond well.

Not only do the children respond well to the program, but Hooper said, there has been overwhelming support from the community.

"We've had an outrageous number of contributions," Hooper said. "We've had donations from 12 businesses and 27 individuals."

Because the department wants this to be an on-going program, they will accept monetary donations or bears at any time. Hooper said they're trying to get fraternities and sororities to collect bears for them.

Flower bed planting faces budget woes

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

University jobs and classes weren't the only areas affected by last year's budget cuts. The cuts were felt all the way down the line — even in the flower beds on campus.

The effect may not be physically noticeable, according to the facilities' office of grounds maintenance, but changes were made in the purchasing process of the flowers to be used on campus. The number of flowers adorning campus will be less this year, said Lynn Schlegel, florist for grounds maintenance.

"We have cut back on flowers drastically," Schlegel said.

Currently there are 10,900 square feet of flowers on campus, which is 350 square feet less than last year.

Previously, the flowers were purchased on a contract basis, but now grounds maintenance selects the seeds for their flower beds from seed catalogues.

"If you order something from someone, they might be low (on flowers) and send you something else," said Joe Myers, florist for grounds maintenance.

This often creates problems for the flower beds. If the color does not match, then the arrangement may become an assortment of flowers that do not match.

This year's seeds cost about $240. This is the cheapest way to get flowers, Schlegel said.

"We have a bigger selection now," says Schlegel. "Before, we couldn't request certain types of flowers."

All campus flowers are grown in the greenhouses north of Throckmorton Hall and are attended to by both Myers and Schlegel. They take care of the flowers and watch for any diseases that might infect them.

The flowers are grown in the greenhouses during the winter when the grounds department isn't overly active.

Grounds maintenance decides in the fall which flowers to plant in the spring. The flowers are planted before graduation if possible, otherwise they are planted shortly after.

Student workers also attend the flowers for grounds maintenance. They do the planting, watering and weeding.

Schlegel said the flower beds often experience problems when people dig the flowers up, students walk through them and motorists drive over them. Damage to the flower beds has always been a problem on campus.

Last year, the flower bed located between the K-State Union and Anderson Hall was driven through by a semi, Schlegel said. It has since been turned into a brick walk.

Phi Delt falls from veranda

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

A member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity fell from a second-story veranda of the Phi-Delt house about 8:30 p.m. Aug. 24 during a back-to-school block party.

Tim Clopton, senior in public relations, was taken by ambulance to the St. Mary Hospital in Manhattan and received 18 stitches to close a head injury. He was later released.

"It was just an accident, and it just happened to happen on the night we were having a party. I just hope it doesn't come back on the house," Clopton said.

Clopton was sitting on the railing around the veranda when he lost his balance trying to remove his feet from between the railing bars, said James Glenn, junior in industrial psychology and a member of the fraternity.

Glenn said he immediately ran inside to call the ambulance, while students began to crowd around Clopton who, according to Glenn, was unconscious for several minutes.

The party resumed after the ambulance and police left. The remaining party-goers were encouraged not to go to the hospital, Glenn said.

"As soon as they left, they started the music back up, but everyone was kind of in shock for a while," he said.

Four years ago, a Phi-Delt fell to his death from the roof of the house.

"I became a Macintosh convert in business school.

"At our computer lab I'd always find lines of people waiting to use the Macintosh computers, while other computers just sat there. So I had a choice: wait for a Macintosh, or come back at 6 A.M. to grab one before they'd all be taken.

"After business school, I took a job at a large bank and used my Macintosh for producing everything from spreadsheets to a company newsletter.

"Today I use Macintosh to help me run my own management consulting firm. When I give a presentation, I can see in people's faces that they're really impressed. And that makes me feel great.

"Sometimes I take Friday off, put my Macintosh and skis in the car, and head for the mountains. I ski days and work nights. It's perfect.

Film shows addicts, depressing lifestyle

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

If you have ever been curious about drugs or considered taking them to see how they would affect you, "Drugstore Cowboy" is a film you need to see.

The film will be shown at 7 p.m. today and Thursday in Union Forum Hall and at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in Union Little Theatre.

Matt Dillon stars as Bob, a dope fiend in a much harsher version of "Stand By Me." This story also takes place in Oregon, but this time it is 1971 — and the bratty 50s kids have grown into violent and obsessed drug thieves.

The story is really a tragedy, in which the characters find themselves trapped by their own choices and desires. Relationships are worthless in this hedonistic and self-centered lifestyle — an existence devoid of any compassion.

Emotions in general are scarce in this film, which portrays not only an alternative lifestyle, but an unusual logic. The characters have their own reality, which Bob describes: "your worst enemy wasn't so bad ... everything took on a rosy hue of unlimited success. You could do no wrong. And as long as it lasted, life was beautiful."

The film partly satisfies that curiousity about drug highs, with unusual camera angles and a few strange hallucination scenes. Close-ups on ordinary objects like nail files, cigarettes, drugs, bells, boiling water and light bulbs made the movie seem artsy without achieving much more.

It was good to be able to examine the drugs closely, since I was unfamiliar with such hard substances and the strange processes by which they are altered and administered. The proximity of the camera to the entire "shooting-up" process was positively revolting, and I don't see how it would entice even a drug addict.

But, as Bob notes, "Nobody, and I mean nobody, can talk a junkie out of using. You can talk to them for years, but sooner or later they're gonna get a hold of something.

"Maybe it's not dope, maybe it's booze, maybe it's glue, maybe it's gasoline, maybe it's a gunshot in the head. But something, something to relieve the pressures of their everyday life, like having to tie their shoes."

COLLEGIAN
Report Card
"DRUGSTORE COWBOY"
B

The tone of the film is anti-drug because of its depressing portrayal of the addict lifestyle. There are only three or four characters in the movie that are actually against drugs. These figures are paltry and comical — not to mention hypocritical — as they themselves are slaves to prescriptions, cigarettes, caffeine, et cetera.

But damaged plants are quickly replaced with new flowers from the excess stock, which grounds maintenance cultivates in the greenhouses.

Damage to the flower beds is treated as criminal damage to property, said Detective Richard Herrman, K-State police.

If the damage is intentional, and the act is witnessed, the person or persons can be arrested and held, Herrman said.

The crime is considered a misdemeanor if the damage is less than $500 and is considered a felony if the damage is greater than $500.

"We're deeper in the line than I thought we'd be coming out of spring practice," Snyder said. "Because of some nit-picking injuries, we haven't been able to field the same group of kids on a consistent, daily basis. But I think we're as close as we've ever been to being on track, and it should result in an improved offensive team."

close to them die recently."

Students out there are hurting, grieving because someone close to them has died, Balk said. Some of them have no one to talk to.

Balk said he knew of a student whose sister died. When the student tried to talk with some friends about it they turned around and went the other way.

"They just literally walked away," Balk said. "We don't know how students who are bereaved can deal with it. I can imagine what it would be like being on campus thinking about all the demands of being a student and either no one else knows about the death, or if they even hint at it to anyone, they won't talk about it. They just change the subject."

Balk said this is new ground he is breaking, and it hasn't been an easy sell. This idea had to be peddled to many skeptics. Many simply didn't believe there were that many bereaved students.

"A colleague of mine had to go to bat for me and say, 'Hey, look at the data he has,'" he said. "There are students out there who are really hurting.

"No one has really dealt with it seriously. There's that old adage that time heals, but we don't know that that's true. It's not like losing a purse or a wallet — they're not going to just get over it. These people have lost a friend or a parent or a sibling. That person is gone.

"When people start talking about what's hurting them they get upset and they start to cry and maybe even get angry. And most people don't want to hear that and want to stop it."

In the experiment, Balk said he will work with bereaved persons to find how well support groups help in the healing process.

"I hope this project goes well," he said. "This will help people who are hurting, and it will help us to understand the feelings bereaved persons have.

"We know people in college know what death is," Balk said. "It's the significance of death and what it means to them is what we don't know."

Even the anti-drug commercial on the television is inherently funny to the users and unconvincing to anyone else.

This movie is full of compassionless characters who become shallow because of their all-consuming addiction. There is some great dialogue, however — and Bob narrates eloquently throughout the film.

There is also something eternally attractive about a classic tragedy in which the characters never end up in a "happily ever after" because they conflict with their own desires and their timing is off.

"Drugstore Cowboy" is a movie teetering between depressing realism and a creative documentary, worth seeing if only for the element of classic tragedy so long absent in modern film.

ANC charges police violence

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President F.W. de Klerk told church leaders Tuesday he would investigate charges that police sided against supporters of the African National Congress in recent township violence.

Black leaders have blamed police for fueling the two weeks of savage street fights in black townships around Johannesburg that killed more than 500 people.

Police said two black men were killed in unrest Tuesday, but the townships were peaceful for a fourth straight day following a government crackdown.

headquarters of South Africa's largest labor federation and arrested its secretary general, Jay Naidoo, and two others. The three were charged with kidnapping, robbery and assault. All three were later released on bail, and Naidoo denied the charges.

The raid followed a news conference at Naidoo's Congress of South African Trade Unions, where officials presented a man they said had been spying for the police, the independent South African Press Association reported.

A delegation of church leaders, including Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu and the Rev. Frank Chikane, head of the South African Council of Churches, met in Pretoria with de Klerk and Adriaan Vlok, the law and order minister.

After the two-hour meeting, Chikane told journalists the president had pledged to investigate charges that police aided Zulu-based Inkatha supporters in the fighting against Xhosas and other blacks loyal to the African National Congress.

ANC leader Nelson Mandela, Tutu and other anti-apartheid figures have said police bias toward Inkatha inflamed the situation. They accused police of disarming and scattering ANC supporters while allowing Zulus to carry crude weapons considered part of their tribal heritage and costume.

Government officials have denied the charges. De Klerk has previously said individual officers may have acted improperly, but the police force as a whole followed orders to be impartial.

The fighting erupted Aug. 12 in Johannesburg area townships and raged for two weeks until the government declared a de facto state of emergency and poured in more police and soldiers.

It was considered the worst unrest since the mid-1980s. Officials said more than 18,000 township dwellers were left homeless by the fighting.

Fire destroys student's house

Woman begins first semester with tragedy

By Erwin Seba
Special Projects Editor

Fire destroyed a K-State student's three-level, A-frame home in rural Riley County Wednesday night.

Firefighters at the scene said there was little they could do to prevent flames from reducing the house to smoldering beams standing amidst ashes and debris along Lakeland Drive about a quarter-mile from Riley County Road 402.

Heat from the fire also destroyed a small pick-up truck parked in front of the home.

Kevin Upp, a relative of the owner, left the house about an hour before the fire started, said Del Petty, chief of the Riley County Rural Fire Department. Upp had been performing renovations on the house.

Upp said Marcia Dunham, who just moved from South Dakota, owned the home and had just started her first semester at the University.

Petty said the fire was discovered when a neighbor saw smoke and followed it to the scene of the blaze.

"I asked him 'Was this part or that part burning?'" Petty said. "He said, 'The whole damn thing."

Firefigher/EMT John Hartwick with the Tattarax station said the house was engulfed in flames when fire truck units arrived at the fire about 8:30 p.m.

"It's pretty dry down here," Hartwick said.

"The biggest problem we've got is water," he said. "We have to have the truck go out and get it."

Eric Ward, chief of the Tattarax station, said it was fortunate the area has received a lot of rain over the summer.

"If it had been like last summer I believe we would have lost the whole hillside," Ward said. "There's just no way to get out here fast."

Petty said the fire started on the north side of the house and spread across the width of the structure to the south wall.

Based on his preliminary inspection of the scene, Petty said there was no reason to suspect arson as a cause for the blaze.

"Why would you buy something, work your tail off to fix it up and burn it down?" he said.

Describing the fire as a "grounder," Petty said it may be impossible to determine the exact cause of the blaze.

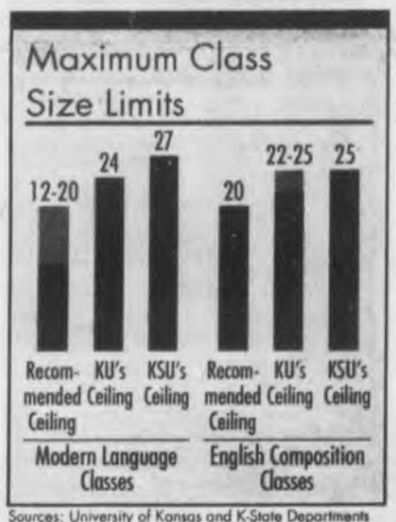
Size of classes larger than advised limits

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Some of K-State's introductory courses exceed recommeded class size limits set by national teaching organizations.

Although there are no current national standards officially limiting college course class sizes, national teaching organizations do recommend limits, and both K-State and the University of Kansas offer courses that exceed those limits.



While they have limited resources to work with, each department ultimately has control over the size of the classes in their department.

"There is no necessary policy across the University limiting the number of students in each class," said David Shulenburger, assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs at KU. "But each department sets an upper ceiling, and once that limit has been reached a student has to appeal to the department to get a closed-class slip to allow them into the class."

"We rely on the college deans, faculty staff and department heads to manage their limited resources to meet growing or shrinking enrollments and to maintain the national standard," said Pat Bosco, vice president of institutional advancement and dean of student life at K-State.

Bosco said K-State has been managing enrollment for the past four years. This means the number of students pre-enrolled is used as a percentage to project the total number of possible students and needed fall classes.

He said two goals of the program are to make sure an adequate number of classes are available to students and to limit class sizes so each student receives adequate attention.

Sources: University of Kansas and K-State Departments of Modern Language and English, The American Council Teaching of Foreign Language and The National Council Teachers of English.

"Besides efforts to be sure classes are open and available, we also are carefully planning to maintain reasonable class sizes," said K-State Provost James Coffman. "It is our intent that freshman English classes will have enrollments of no more than 24 students, college algebra recitation sections will have no more than 35 students, and modern language courses will average 27 students."

Robert Grindell, K-State's English department head, said the current ceiling for introductory English courses is 25 students.

"We'd like to see the ceiling for the writing classes — Composition I and II — at 20 students," Grindell said. "But right now 25 is the lowest we can handle."

"The national organization of English teachers recommends a ceiling of 20," he said. "But realistically that's really hard to do with the resources we have now."

Barbara Paris, administrative assistant to the director of freshman and sophomore English at KU, said the university is also having trouble meeting the recommended ceiling for the two introductory English courses, English 101 and 102.

"Our ceiling is theoretically 22 students for English 101 and 25 students in 102," Paris said. "Our problem is that we have a policy of continuous enrollment in English, which means that a student must enroll in English 102 the semester following their completion of English 101."

Paris said because of the continuous enrollment they will accomodate every student, which could mean larger classes.

"The National Council Teachers of English recommended a ceiling of 20 students," she said, "but let's get real, that's just not feasible with the resources we have now."

Bradley Shaw, modern language department head, said modern language classes at K-State have a ceiling of 27 students.

"The American Council Teaching of Foreign Language recommends a cap of 12 to 20 students, with 20 being the absolute maximum," Shaw said. "Through attrition we will come closer to the recommended limits, but we're still a long way from the national standard."

"A national survey indicated the optimum number of students in foreign language classes is 15," said Robert Spires, chairman of Spanish and Portuguese at KU. "But, that's not the world we live in."

He said Kansas theoretically limits its foreign language classes to 24, but some classes are larger when necessary.

Shaw summed up the topic with a sentiment he said his faculty feels.

"It's related to budget," he said.

Davenport pleads guilty

Ex-football player, rape victim agree on plea-bargain

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Ramon Davenport, a former K-State football player, pleaded guilty Wednesday morning to a charge of rape.

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said the guilty plea was part of negotiations for a lesser charge and the dropping of charges in an aggravated sexual battery case filed against him.

Davenport was arrested and charged after an April 28 incident in which a girl was raped on the third floor of Moore Hall where she and Davenport both lived during the 1989-90 school year.

Pre-trial hearings were to begin Wednesday following a preliminary hearing on June 13. A jury trial was scheduled to begin next month.

Kennedy said rape is a class B felony in Kansas and can carry a minimum sentence of five to 15 years in prison and maximum of 20 years to life.

Kennedy said the sexual battery case, in which charges were dropped, is a class D felony.

As part of the plea bargain, the state of Kansas is recommending a minimum sentence of five years and a maximum sentence of no more than 20 years.

The victim of the sexual battery incident agreed to the plea bargain.

Sentencing is scheduled for Oct. 3. Davenport remains free on $3,500 bond.

Kennedy said he received a great deal of cooperation from University officials and the athletic department.

"It would have been very easy for them (athletic department) to wash their hands of Mr. Davenport," Kennedy said. "They did not do that, and I think they acted in very professional manner."

Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life, said she was aware of Davenport's conviction, but she did not wish to discuss the case.

"It's really something that should remain confidential," she said. "Because there are two students involved there is nothing I can say."

Athletic department officials were unavailable for comment.

Davenport is from Merced, Calif., and was a sophomore in sociology.

Anderson will be open by weekend

By Paul Noel

Anderson Avenue will be open to traffic by the end of this week.

Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said the $1.6 million project is almost done and has been severely delayed due to the heavy summer rainfall.

"Many times an entire workweek was lost due to the foul weather conditions," McCallum said.

Sandy Tommer, area engineer with the Kansas Department of Tranportation, said Smokey Hill Inc. of Salina was contracted to do the work. The company will be charged $600 in liquidated damages each day they are past the finish time specified in their contract.

"Damages will not be accessd until the work is completed," Tommer said.

The fine of $600 a day is a preset rate set up for contracts from $1 to $2 million, she said.

Smokey Hill Inc. was hired through a joint contract by the City of Manhattan and the Kansas Department of Transportation, McCallum said. Manhattan will pay 25 percent of the costs of construction, and the rest will come from federal funds.

"Smokey Hill was paid all but 5 percent of their contract when work began on the Anderson project," Tommer said. "The fine will be deducted from that amount."

Dick Brown, president of Smokey Hill Inc., said the original plan was to do the work in front of Village Plaza last fall.

Morgan alleges Slattery aide spoke in wrong capacity

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

An ethics complaint filed against U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery is turning the 2nd District congressional race into a fierce battle.

Matt Tills, campaign manager for Republican congressional candidate Scott Morgan, filed the formal complaint Tuesday with the U.S. House of Representatives' Standards of Official Conduct Committee.

Morgan claims Slattery is misusing his official staff for campaign purposes, while Slattery sees the complaint as an attempt by Morgan to gain media attention.

Morgan

"Our response to this complaint is that it is entirely frivolous and uncalled for," said Pam Murry, Slattery's press secretary. "We see it as just another attempt by the challenger to get some free press."

The complaint, released Wednesday, accuses Slattery of allowing the use of a taxpayer-financed congressional staff to operate his re-election effort.

Nancy Malir, a member of Slattery's official staff, is named in the complaint. She is accused of answering questions about controversy surrounding efforts to schedule debates between Morgan and Slattery. Tills specifically pointed out a recent quote from Malir in the Hiawatha Daily World when she apparently referred to Morgan and his staff as "lying to the media regarding the scheduling of debates."

Armenia blocks capital roads

MOSCOW (AP) — Armenia's parliament put the republic under emergency rule, banned a nationalist paramilitary group and blocked roads around the capital Wednesday after a string of attacks left an Armenian legislator dead.

The central Soviet government was not involved in the decision. A curfew from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. was imposed throughout the republic, and an Interior Ministry officer said troops with armored vehicles were guarding all roads to Yerevan, the capital, allowing passage only by special permit.

Armenian President Levon Ter-Petrosyan appealed in a radio broadcast for calm. "I assure you that we, the Armenian authorities, are in a position to eliminate the danger posed by this armed organization," Ter-Petrosyan said. "There should be no panicking."

Alexander Arzumanyan, a spokesman for the Armenian National Movement, and Raffi Hovannisian, a Yerevan representative of the Armenian Assembly of America, said in telephone interviews that the attacks began early Wednesday.

Rather interviews Hussein

PARIS (AP) — Saddam Hussein said in an interview Wednesday that he is constantly moving so he won't provide an easy target for a possible U.S. air attack.

Saddam spoke in separate interviews with French television and CBS, his first to Western reporters since the Iraqi president sent his forces to invade Kuwait on Aug. 2.

In an hourlong interview with CBS anchor Dan Rather taped in Baghdad on Wednesday, the Iraqi leader declared flatly, "Kuwait is part of Iraq.

"We have said this, and the legislative bodies in Iraq have issued a clear decree saying that Kuwait is an Iraqi province," he said.

Saddam also denied making any secret proposals to pull out of Kuwait.

A White House official confirmed Wednesday that the Bush administration received a secret Iraqi offer to free all captives and withdraw from Kuwait if certain conditions were met.

The conditions were that the international trade embargo against Iraq be lifted and Baghdad be granted access to the Persian Gulf and sole control of an oil field that dips into Kuwait, according to the New York area newspaper Newsday.

The White House official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the offer was rejected.

Quayle's wife takes plunge

GRAND CANYON, Ariz. (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle's wife, Marilyn, fell into the Colorado River during during a whitewater rafting expedition through the Grand Canyon over the weekend, a park spokesman said Wednesday.

She fell from the raft when it hit Lava Falls rapids, one of the roughest stretches in the river, said Chuck Lundy, spokesman for Grand Canyon National Park.

John Reed, assistant superintendent for the park, pulled Mrs. Quayle back into the raft, Lundy said, adding that she was uninjured and wearing a life jacket at the time.

The couple was accompanying a U.S. Park Service patrol on a rafting expedition of several days, said Lundy.

Annie's dog dead at 16

HADDAM, Conn. (AP) — Sandy, the stray mutt that was rescued from the pound and went on to star in the Broadway smash "Annie," died Wednesday in his sleep. He was 16, or 112 in dog years.

Sandy, a mix of Airedale and Irish setter, originated the role of Annie's faithful dog in the Goodspeed Opera House's 1976 production in Connecticut. He then played the entire Broadway run, from 1977 to 1983, said William Berloni, Sandy's owner and trainer.

It was Berloni, then an 18-year-old apprentice at the Goodspeed with no experience as an animal trainer, who rescued Sandy from the Connecticut Humane Society the day before the animal was to be put to sleep.

Nancy Reagan has surgery

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Former first lady Nancy Reagan underwent surgery Wednesday at the Mayo Clinic to remove a cancerous tumor near her nose, a family spokesman said. She left for home later in the day.

The basal cell carcinoma was discovered just beneath Nancy Reagan's left nostril during a routine dermatological examination at the Mayo Clinic, said Mark Weinberg, spokesman for Nancy Reagan and former President Reagan.

A plastic surgeon removed the small tumor at St. Marys Hospital, Weinberg said. The Reagans left a short time later for their home in the Bel-Air section of Los Angeles.

Nancy Reagan, 69, and her 79-year-old husband had been at the clinic since Monday for routine annual checkups.

Weinberg said in a statement that doctors found the Reagans in otherwise excellent health. He did not return a phone call seeking further information.

In 1987, doctors at Bethesda Naval Hospital removed Nancy Reagan's left breast and lymph glands after a cancerous tumor was found.

Jurors view puppy mill tape

TOPEKA (AP) — On Wednesday's second day of the trial of two men charged under the so-called puppy mill law, jurors spent much of the day watching a video tape of dogs found in a Topeka kennel during a June raid.

The video showed both the conditions of the kennel and individual dogs. It was shot by Bruce Stout, a special agent with the attorney general's office. Stout accompanied Topeka police officers and state Department of Animal Health inspectors when they raided the SSLC Kennel.

Steven Scheureman and Leonard Conger, both of Topeka, face two misdemeanor counts in Shawnee County District Court in connection with the way they operated the kennel in southeast Topeka.

Topeka veterinarian Dr. Debra Anderson is expected to testify Thursday for the prosecution before the defense presents its case. The six-person jury could begin deliberations late Thursday.

This is one of the first criminal trials stemming from the state's new regulation of commercial breeding kennels. If found guilty, the two could be sentenced to up to one year in jail and fined up to $2,500.

The video showed one dead dog lying among empty dog food sacks. Defense attorney Thomas Lietz said the dead dog was found by one of the defendants in the street and was not part of the kennel.

KCC to assist in gas probe

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Mike Hayden asked the Kansas Corporation Commission on Wednesday to provide data collection assistance to Attorney General Bob Stephan for his investigation into high gas prices in Kansas.

A spokeswoman for the KCC said the agency, which regulates utilities in the state, can provide the needed information and stands ready to help Stephan all it can.

The attorney general, meanwhile, cautioned Kansas citizens to be wary of salesmen offering them gas- and energy-saving devices, saying there are scams and ripoffs aimed at taking advantage of consumers' concerns about the high price of gas and oil in the wake of Iraq's takeover of Kuwait.

"I've asked the commission to assist Attorney General Bob Stephan in looking into this matter," Hayden said in a statement. "The commission has excellent industry sources which should help us determine what caused the price of gas to rise so significantly and if that increase is justified. The commission also is in a position to be able to monitor prices and availability."

Emily Wellman, energy program manager for the KCC, said her office already was compiling data that Stephan might use.

"As a matter of practice, we have sources regarding information on production, consumption, capacity and wholesale cost of gasoline which may be helpful in the investigation," she said. "We're willing to do anything we can to help in the attorney general's investigation."

Hayden said he wants the KCC to look into why the prices of gas have varied so greatly from city to city in Kansas.

Konza Prairie receives grant to study tallgrass

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, a long-term ecological study conducted by K-State, has recently received a funding supplement of $49,776 from the National Science Foundation.

Tim Seastedt, Long-Term Ecological Research ecosystem biologist, said the prairie is the most intensively-studied grassland in the world. LTER is a national network which studies 17 natural and agricultural ecosystem sites, including Konza, he said.

"We find out what makes the tallgrass prairie tick," Seastedt said.

The original funding, renewed last December for 1990, was $377,300. The National Science Foundation announced the supplement July 3.

The foundation has funded the project for 10 years, providing two five-year funding programs. Researchers are asking for $3.3 million for the next six years. The answer to this request will be given in December, Seastedt said.

Studies run in five-year phases, said Barbara Hetrick, mycorrhizal fungi investigator for the project. The project has just completed its second phase this year.

"They are pleased with the progress that's been made in the second phase these past five years. The next phase is going to be grazing and burning and how other forms of disturbances interact," Hetrick said.

Research of the Konza Prairie has primarily centered on studying the effect of burning the grassland on bison grazing.

Usually, burning the grass attracts bison to graze in that area. In drought years, though, bison are just as attracted to burned grass as non-burned grass, Seastedt said.

One recent finding announced that birds seem to prefer areas burned at least two years ago to those fields recently burned or not burned at all, he said.

Hetrick said the project has involved professors from a number of departments at the University. This enables the directors to capi-

State AIDS plan outlined

Response needed to check epidemic

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA— State health officials Wednesday outlined a plan to continue their battle against AIDS, one that keeps public education as its cornerstone.

The new plan comes as officials say as many as 3,500 people in Kansas have the HIV infection that leads to the fatal acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"Education and information remain the most effective ways to stop the spread of HIV and AIDS," Stanley Grant, secretary of health and environment, told a news conference.

He said nearly 400 people in Kansas have been diagnosed as having AIDS, with 263 or 67 percent of them, dying from the disease.

Several hundred other Kansans have AIDS, but were diagnosed in other states, so they were not reported to the state Department of Health of Environment.

AIDS is usually contracted through sexual activity or through sharing contaminated hypodermic needles. In some cases, a pregnant woman can pass the disease on to her child.

State efforts to track the disease and provide treatment will be of little value unless people change the behavior that can cause AIDS, Grant said.

In the past, when the number of AIDS cases in Kansas was relatively small compared to other states, this state did not need a comprehensive plan for fighting the disease, Grant told reporters.

"Now, as indications are clear that perhaps several thousand Kansans are infected with HIV and will ultimately develop AIDS, the need for a planned response is evident," he said.

The Legislature passed earlier this year a bill that requires doctors to report cases of human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, to the Department of Health of Environment without identifying the patients.

Dr. Charles Konigsberg, KDHE director of health, said the new law will allow the state to track the growth of the disease in the future.

The plan calls for an increase in public education efforts, as well as additional training for counselors who deal with AIDS patients. Education efforts will continue to emphasize that AIDS can be prevented if people take the proper precautions, Konigsberg said.

The department also received $20,000 from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to develop a "care coordination program" in Topeka. The pilot program will provide medical evaluation and therapy for people who have HIV infections.

State officials hope the program can be expanded to Wichita and Kansas City, Kan., in 1991, and the following year to any county reporting 25 or more HIV cases.

Riley expansion issue resurfaces during crisis

Fort Riley expansion.

Say those words aloud and you will surely elicit some emotionally-charged responses from a wide cross-section of people. It makes them all a little edgy and a little nervous.

Now that America has invaded Saudi Arabia to discourage the invasion of Saudi Arabia by Iraq, many of those same people who live here in the economic-impact zone of Fort Riley are getting nervous and edgy.

Nervous because of the possibility of our standing mission in Saudi Arabia becoming a new cold war. Edgy because that's certainly reason enough for a larger Fort Riley.

Those who are carrying their brains in their back pocket right next to their Visa card will surely cite the same example.

"We are at war," they'll cry, pounding their fist on the table. "We need to train for desert warfare here on the Kansas plains."

This summer a meeting of Manhattan's Blank Page Economic Task Force met to discuss and prioritize goals for the next 20 years. And when the voting began, people shouted in a frenzied panic, "Keep KSU's research money!" and "Keep Fort Riley!"

No one said, "Keep the students."

No one said, "Keep the farmers."

Fort Riley has a great role in this region — there's no doubting that — and it should stay. The farmers and the small towns and the people and the land also have great roles in this region. They made the community what it is today.

This land is home. Too many of those holding seats in the upper echelons in city governments don't realize that.

The higher-ups should speak with their hearts and think with their brains. They shouldn't talk money. They shouldn't think economic growth. Because those who make up the land won't listen.

Those who make up the land are people who believe in a simpler life. They don't like to be awakened at 4 a.m. by the sound of cannon fire. They are people who believe in peace, people who believe in freedom, people who vote. We are them, and they are us.

And this land is our land.

K-State administrators set good precedent

It's obvious K-State officials haven't been doing a lot of fishing and golfing in Kennebunkport, Maine, lately. They've been doing their job.

K-State officials have set precedent for other universities by offering student reservists and guardsmen called to active duty the option of receiving a full refund of their tuition and fees for the fall semester or an incomplete. This would allow them to finish courses when they return. Not long after K-State made this decision, the Board of Regents requested that all regent institutions make the same offer.

Perhaps George Bush could take a lesson from K-State officials about giving problems the priority they deserve. Bush is asking thousands of reservists to forget all other commitments and serve their country while he keeps his vacation plans.

K-State administrators should be commended for their initiative in providing student reservists and guardsmen options in the event of their military mobilization.

As for Bush, he should be criticized for his poorly timed vacation plans. While he may contend that he was perfectly capable of fully exercising his duties as commander in chief, the message he sent to American citizens and, more importantly, to the troops in the Middle East was confusing. As any military person knows, the cardinal rule of any commander is not to ask your troops to do anything you wouldn't do yourself.

It would seem Bush devoted too much time to the wrong sand trap.

Summer definitely over

Karin Dell'Antonia
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

We're heading into the first weekend of a whole new glorious school year, and we've had five whole days of school before the powers that be decided that we need a holiday.

That's always seemed weird to me. Is it supposed to make us realize fully what we've lost by leaving summer behind us? Or teach us to truly appreciate those lazy summer days now that they're gone? Or is it just to torture us?

But the whole back-to-school season always fascinates me. It's like people think that if they make a big festival out of the whole thing, with sales and poster decorations and tents and free presents, we'll mix it up with Christmas and think it's fun.

I can't deny that the tent business was at least distracting. In fact, I was late for one of my first classes because I got caught up in watching someone try out for The Young and the Restless. To me, it looked like something to be avoided. Spending even five minutes of your life being called "Cricket" is too much. I also made a basket and got a candy bar and signed up for a zillion drawings that I didn't win. Personally, I'm always careful to make my address as illegible as humanly possible so that after I lose, the salesmen won't be able to find me. Then I headed for Calvin Hall by way of the K-State Union and got distracted again by all the fabulous computer innovations that I couldn't possibly afford. I guess I'm just easily distracted. By the time I got to class, I was pretty late. I don't think anybody would have believed that I got lost. Excuses that work for freshmen just don't go over well for seniors. Oh, well, it was only the first day.

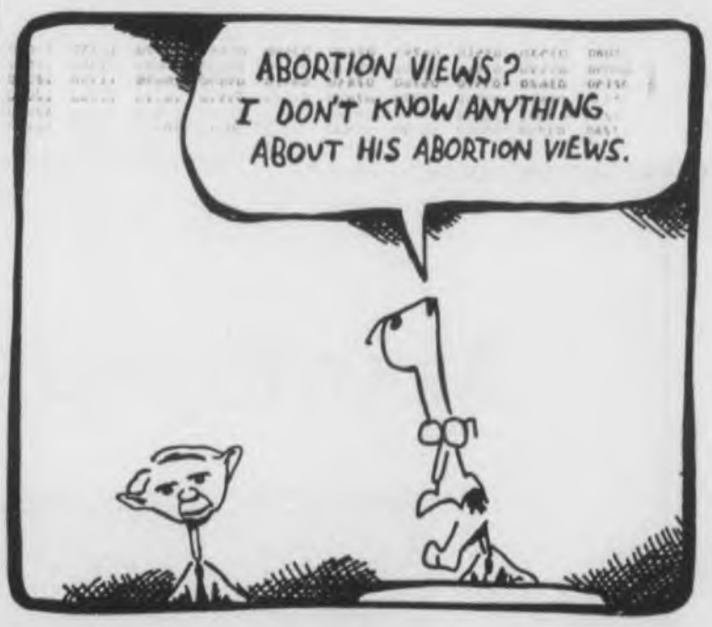
I also like to go to Wal-Mart and check out what the Manhattan public school system is requiring to start class this year. I miss going out and buying a new school box, crayons and safety scissors that only cut for about the first week until you use them to try to carve your name into your desk. I even miss those desks. An apartment just isn't the same. We used to color the metal inside with magic marker and then pour Elmer's all over it so it would dry and soak up the color. Then we'd peel the glue off. We thought that was neat. I can't find anyone else that ever did that. I guess that in Texas we did weird things.

I think they should have a supplies list for K-State. Not just a list of generic stuff like notebooks and pens and number-two pencils, but stuff we could really use. Like wet wipes to clean the Collegian ink off our fingers and a Willie mug for that all-important caffeine fix. Stuff like No-doz and Alka Seltzer and a whole lot of quarters for the laundromat and plastic crates. Everybody knows that you can't be a real college student without lots of plastic crates and a bookcase made of cinderblocks borrowed from discount store parking lots. You also need shelf liner. I've known people who've used shelf liner for wallpaper. It also covers bathroom buckets, old desks, bulletin boards and probably even shelves. You know Wal-Mart just loves college students. They don't trust us, though. It's one of the only places I've ever been where they carefully compare the signature on the back of my credit card with the paper I've just signed. They also always scrutinize the picture on my driver's license when I write a check. I don't really look much like the picture on it anymore, thank God. I don't weigh that little anymore either.

Wal-Mart at this time of year does remind me of Christmas. Screaming children, stuffed carts, harried parents and worn-out clerks all over the place, and you can't move without crashing into one of those carts they put in strategic places and fill with things that Wal-Mart thinks you need for school. Like Oreos, carpets, batteries and those big, fat data-binder things. Myself, I found the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles lunch box and matching squeeze bottle hard to resist.

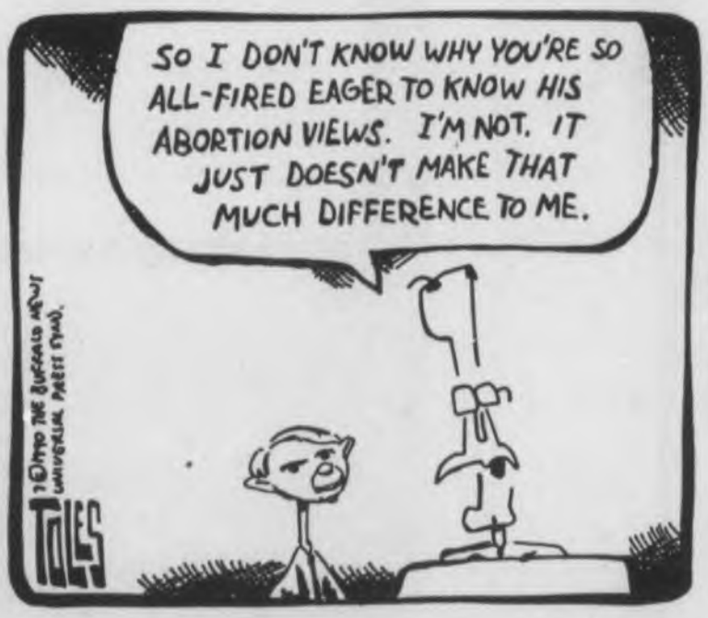
Lunch boxes are another thing that I miss from elementary school. I saw one just like my old one in the pop culture exhibit at the Smithsonian last summer. I felt old.

I don't know about you, but my first few school days were filled with fun and excitement. Every single professor promised that his class would not be just boring lecture, but an exciting discussion and exchange of ideas.



One of them, who was new to Kansas and to K-State, promised he would always use examples about farms so we could relate to microeconomics. He was serious. I'm worried about him — I don't think he's going to make it here.

A few miracles have also occurred for me this week. For starters, I actually found all the stuff I put away in May. You know, the things you put in a special place so that you'd know where to find them when you needed them? I usually find them three months after I've replaced them. I guess I'm getting wiser in my old age.



The biggest surprise came when I went to the Union to buy books. I bought every single book that I needed at the same store on the same night for the first time in all of the eight semesters that I've had to buy books. It's a shame that it cost me more than $300.

So now we're all back to school, whether we like it or not. It's going to be an interesting year filled with issues to tackle and opinions to air. I've got some good stuff planned — like women's issues, toys, our generation — and I may even borrow Brad Seabourn's pet topic and talk about a little politics. But I thought I'd skip that this week. I've been busy trying to convince my professors that the glazed look in my eyes is from the new contact solution they gave me free outside the Union. It has nothing to do with celebrating the beginning of my last year at K-State.

Clinic collects blood plasma

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Donor Center provides a new opportunity for students to make extra money during the school year.

The center, 1130 Gardenway, pays blood plasma donors $15 per visit.

Plasma is quickly replaced by the body, allowing donors to give plasma twice a week if they wait 48 hours between donations.

The process, known as plasmapheresis, is the donation of whole blood, the separation and removal of the plasma and the return of the red blood cells to the donor.

Any healthy person between 18 and 60 years of age may donate plasma if they weigh at least 110 pounds and have never had a serious blood disease such as hepatitis, hemophilia or AIDS.

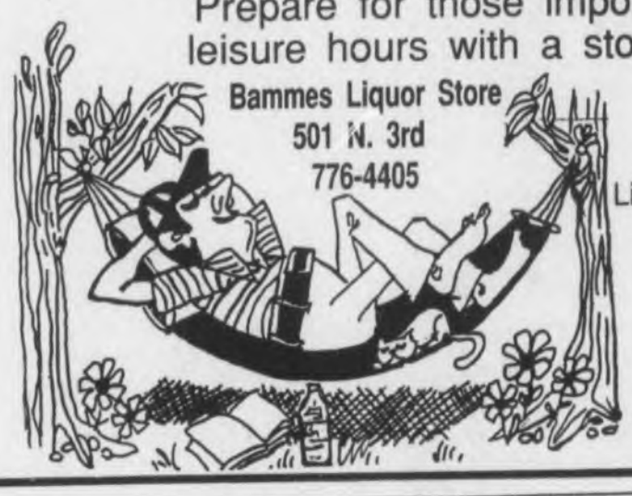
With 24 machines and space for six additional units, the center can handle about 1,000 donations a week.

Kurt Mortensen, center manager, said about 5 percent of the donors are college students.

"Since we opened our doors on July 23, K-State students haven't had much opportunity to become aware of our center and the services we offer," he said. "We expect the student percentage of donors to rise once the school year is fully underway."

Mortensen said the center will move to an appointment system in the near future, but is operating on a walk-in basis until the company settles into a routine schedule.

Mortensen said donating normally takes 45 minutes, but, because the staff is new, some first-time donors have taken up to two hours.



The process begins with a question-and-answer session of the patient's medical history. Their vital signs are checked, such as blood pressure, temperature and pulse. A small blood sample is taken to measure protein and to determine blood type. A physician gives a mini-physical to decide whether or not the donor may give plasma.

After the donor is connected to the plasma machine, small amounts of blood are drawn from an arm, and the plasma is separated by a centrifuge. The plasma is collected while the red blood cells are returned to the donor's bloodstream. The process is repeated until the correct amount of plasma, determined by the donor's body weight, has been collected.

Mortensen said the center, whose parent company is North American Biologicals Inc. of Miami, Fla., sells the frozen plasma to major pharmaceutical companies such as Abbott Laboratories, Du Pont Laboratories and Genetic Systems.

"These pharmaceutical companies buy raw plasma and use the material in manufacturing and testing of a variety of medical products used in your local hospital or doctor's office," Mortensen said.

Smith, Hernandez lead talented group

All-Big Eight performer Michael Smith leads a deep and talented K-State receiving corps, which includes fellow wideout Frank Hernandez. Smith's goal for 1990 is to be a first-team All-American.

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Receivers

A bright spot for the Wildcats in 1989 may be even brighter in 1990.

The receiving corps that proved itself as one of the best in the Big Eight last season hopes to push its performance to an even higher level this season.

Junior wideouts Michael Smith and Frank Hernandez provided most of the highlights last season.

Smith emerged as one of best receivers in the nation, leading the Big Eight with a school-record 70 receptions. When defenses adjusted to contain Smith, Hernandez proved a reliable target, catching 36 passes and tying for second in the Big Eight with four touchdown receptions, including the game-winner against North Texas.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, the heroics of Smith and Hernandez were not enough. Their impressive statistics were compiled mostly out of desperation.

While the offense passed for 208.1 yards per game, good enough for fourth in the Big Eight, it rushed 59.7 yards per game, easily the lowest in the league.

Both Smith and Hernandez agree that a better running game is necessary for the team to succeed. They feel the improvements made in the running attack during the off-season will make for a more balanced offense and could free them to do greater damage to opposing defenses in 1990.

Smith and Hernandez established themselves as premier receivers in the league last season. Neither player, however, has set his sights on a repeat performance this year. Both are eyeing bigger prizes for the team, the receiving corps and themselves.

Smith, first-team all-Big Eight and honorable mention All-American last season, makes no bones about his goals for this year.

"I made honorable mention All-American last season. This year, I want to be first-team All-American," Smith said. "I wasn't surprised by the numbers I put up last year. It was my goal to lead the Big Eight in receiving, and I did it."

Smith realizes that with defenses keying on him, he will have to earn each of his receptions.

"They will come out focusing on stopping me, and that will be challenging," Smith said. "But if they're making an extra effort to stop me, I must be doing something right.

"I'm not going to put any extra pressure on myself," he said. "I'm not going to say 'I want this many receptions.' You have to look at it from a team concept."

Hernandez has set more intangible goals for the season, goals which may be more difficult than All-American status. His goals are to play with intensity and concentration on every down and to be devoted entirely to doing what is best for the team as a whole.

"We need to not focus on individual performance but on the team," Hernandez said. "When a play is drawn up, it's designed so that if every player accomplishes his job, the play will succeed. If everybody goes hard and with a team concept, there's no reason why we can't be winning some ball games."

Hernandez said he and Smith played a big role in the passing game last season, but they are by no means the only weapons in K-State's passing arsenal.

"It's tough to compare players from one team to another, but, statistically, I think are as good as anyone," Hernandez said of the team's receivers. "We get along well as a unit, and that really helps our performance. If changes are made in who's playing where, we can make changes and not skip a beat. I have a lot of confidence in the receiving corps and in the offense as a unit."

With the graduation of starter Alan Friedrich, juniors Al Jones and Russ Campbell look to share duties at tight end. Jones filled in last year when Friedrich went down with injuries in mid-season and caught 20 passes for 201 yards. Campbell came on at the end of last season and registered eight receptions.

"We should be a factor in the passing game," Campbell said of the team's emphasis on using all receivers. "It's an objective to throw to a lot of different receivers, but it's also an objective to get the ball to Michael Smith as often as possible because he's just a great receiver."

The Wildcats used running backs frequently as receivers last season, throwing 27 times to Eric Gallon and 26 times to Pat Jackson, who began last season as a wide receiver.

Tennis team faces challenges with graduation of top players

By Todd Fertig

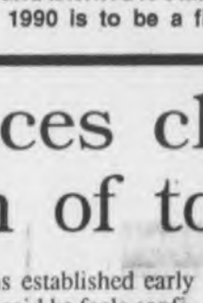
Tennis Coach Steve Bietau faces many questions as he helps the team prepare for the upcoming season.

Over the past few years, Bietau has seen the program advance to a level competitive with the top teams nationally.

With a rugged schedule looming ahead, however, many things remain up in the air for the team this fall. Only two varsity players return, and Bietau will have to rely on contributions from several untested team members.

Bietau said he believes the team has more potential than any other he has coached at K-State, including last year's squad, which Bietau called one of the most talented in the Big Eight.

None of the team's singles or doubles positions have been determined, however, and two foreign players Bietau will be counting on heavily in the spring will not arrive at K-State until January.



Because the school year in their home countries differs from K-State's, Rosemary Hunter of Australia and Rentia Pienaar of South Africa will join the squad in the spring. Bietau said both players have valuable experience in international competition and should make an immediate impact.

"It's going to be tricky, and we may end up doing some juggling in the spring to get everyone playing where they should," Bietau said. "We'll have some challenges for finding the right doubles combos, and we'll be a little under the gun starting the spring semester because our spring season starts soon after we get back and then doesn't let up much all semester."

Bietau said it is always a priority to get doubles teams established early in the fall, but he said he feels confident that each member of the squad is a quality doubles player.

The seven members currently with the team are training for their first tournament Sept. 28 and 29 at Nebraska.

The fall schedule also includes a dual meet with Kansas and an All-American tournament, in which the top player from K-State will compete with the best singles players in the country. The fall concludes with a regional tournament in Salt Lake City Nov. 1-3.

Bietau

On Sept. 8, the team will raise funds to supplement its budget with a tournament at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex courts.

Bietau said there is a tendency to emphasize the results of the spring season than the fall, but he stressed the importance of starting the year successfully and said the matches played in the fall are just as important to league and national rankings.

"The fall is the time for conditioning and for making changes and working on mechanics," Bietau said. "Spring is more of a competitive season. But our tourneys in the fall are important to our development and training, and of course a dual with KU is going to be very competitive."

This season's schedule elevates the program to its highest level of competition ever, Bietau said. The spring schedule features meets with six of the top 25 tennis teams, a boost in competitiveness which Bietau said his team needs to prepare for nationals.

"We really want to give our players a chance to play the best to give them the competition and the exposure they lacked before," Bietau said. "One drawback of this schedule is that we don't play at home much. When you start playing some top-ranked schools, they don't come to you, and consequently we have to sort of meet them on their terms."

The team's only senior is Thresa Burcham, who played No. 5 singles and No. 3 doubles last year. Bietau said the team will look to Burcham for leadership as it goes through a change in personnel.

Sophomore Suzanne Sim returns with varsity experience as the team's No. 6 singles player and Burcham's doubles partner last year.

Also returning are sophomores Tracy Parker, who saw limited varsity action last year, and Claudia Patron. Coming back from an injury-plagued spring is sophomore Angie Gover.

Bietau expects two new players to make big contributions in the fall season.

Freshman Michelle Riniker follows Helen Schildknecht, who last season took first in the Big Eight in No. 2 singles, to K-State from Switzerland. Riniker brings valuable international experience to the squad.

Junior Neili Wilcox helped Tyler (Texas) Community College win the junior-college national championships as a freshman and take third as a sophomore. Bietau said Wilcox was one of the top 12 junior-college players in the nation last season.

"We're getting to know the new players a little bit and are putting a strong emphasis on conditioning in preparing for our first tournament," Bietau said.

Cross country and track All-American Janet Haskin has assumed a leadership role for the Wildcats this season. Haskin had an injury-free summer of training for the first time since coming to K-State.

Haskin moves into new role

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Cross country All-American Janet Haskin will add a new addition to her agenda this season.

She will remain in the top position on the team and in the national limelight, but she will step into a big leadership role.

Haskin, a junior from Onaga, and teammates Janet Treiber and Renee Russell will have to fill the void left by the graduation of three Topeka products — Angie Barry, Marge Eddy and Becky Ives.

Although the loss was a shock at the first practice, it is a challenge Haskin and her teammates hope to accept and to conquer with their combined college running experience.

"It was sure a different feeling the first day we came back for practice. We had always looked up to them for leadership," Haskin said. "We have a lot of freshmen that will kind of look up to us.

"I do not know how good of a leader I will be, but I am going to try my best," she said. "It is nice having the experience of running in national meets to know what is go-

Extreme loses focus in cliches, rip-offs

By Rod Gillespie
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Is there a way to sue a band for false advertising? For an outfit that calls itself Extreme, this heavy-metal foursome hardly stretches the envelope of rock expression. While their second album, "Extreme II — Pornograffitti," has its moments, it's hardly close to metal's cutting edge.

Extreme exploded onto the rock scene last year with a solid debut album and a successful single, "Kid Ego." The song "Do You Want To Play" was featured on the "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure" soundtrack, defining a niche for these funky fusion-rockers. Unfortunately, "Pornograffitti" doesn't build on the band's previous successes.

Headbangers will probably like this album. Unfortunately, that makes for a relatively small audience. Extreme, while talented, will have to extricate itself from the well-worn rut of heavy-metal cliches in order to live up to its potential.

Extreme could blaze a trail to crossover appeal along the lines of Jane's Addiction or Metallica, but instead takes the standard approach. Take guitarist Nuno Bettencourt, for example. This fret-blazing phenom has all the talent in the world — but he uses it recycling Yngwie Malmsteen riffs, Eddie Van Halen right-hand tapping and the other standard squeaks-n-squawks of the genre.

Vocalist Gary Cherone does a solid job until "When I First Kissed You," his crooning tribute to Frank Sinatra. The only thing worse than his vocal on this moronic ballad is the songwriting: "New York City/Can be so pretty/From a bird's eye view/Because up there/yeah, that's where/I first kissed you."

The tune even features an orchestral arrangement courtesy of Bettencourt. One has to wonder what on earth it's doing here. I'm all for eclectic tastes — but Extreme should stick to rock'n'roll and leave crooning to geezers like Sinatra.

Cherone's vocals may be solid elsewhere on the album, but his songwriting desperately needs an infusion of creativity. Lyrically, Extreme is extremely offensive. Note the song titles: "Decadence Dance," "Li'l Jack Horny," "Suzi (wants her all day what?)," and "He-man Woman Hater."

Let's take a peek into the adolescent male's mind, shall we? Here's a lyric sample from "Suzi (wants her all day what?)": "Sexy Suzi, losing all her sleep/Feeling very hungry/She's got her tongue in cheek/Sweet and sour, a bitter tasting treat/It's the only flavor I think she likes to eat." Makes you glad they included a lyric sheet with the album, huh?

What a shameful waste of talent. Even guest appearances by Dweezil Zappa and Pat Travers can't salvage this one. If you're a fan of gratuitous guitar solos, you might enjoy this album — but only if you haven't heard these ripped-off riffs before.

New poets, songwriters compete

Originality, sincerity criteria for judging contest entrants

By Heather Anderson
Staff Reporter

Amateur poets and songwriters from K-State have the opportunity to cash in on their work.

The American Poetry Association will award a $1,000 grand prize for best original poem. This is the third in a series of four contests the APA has sponsored this year.

Jennifer Manes, APA publicity manager, said the APA has been sponsoring the competition since 1981.

"We like to encourage promising poets," Manes said. "People like winning, and even those who aren't winners get published if their work is of high enough caliber."

The poems of winners and many entrants are compiled into the American Poetry Anthology, sponsored by APA. Sales from the book help sponsor the group.

Manes said much of the best work received is by college students but any adult is eligible to enter.

Poems will be judged on originality, sincerity, feeling and the poet's talent and potential, Manes said.

Entries must consist of one original poem, no more than 20 lines long and include the poet's name and address.

Entries must be sent no later than Sept. 30 to the American Poetry Association, Dept. CO-81, 250-A Potrero St., Santa Cruz, Calif., 95061.

Closer to K-State, the Kaw Valley Songwriters Association (KWSA) in Lawrence is sponsoring a songwriters' contest.

"We have received everything from country, blues, rap, pop, to folk — we don't have any specific categories, we're just looking for new and interesting songs," said KWSA board member Milo Ransopher.

Ransopher said entries have averaged around 80 to 90 tapes in the past, and a preliminary judging session narrows the field down to 20.

The top 20 perform their songs live for the final judges on Sept. 30 in South Park in Lawrence and the public is invited to attend the free performance.

The first-prize winner receives a $100 cash prize, five hours of free recording time at a Lawrence recording studio and two paid performances at the 1991 Lawrence Independence Days.

Cash prizes are also awarded for second and third place, with free recording time for second place also.

Ransopher encouraged large groups to enter and not to worry about the quality of the recording as true talent will still come through.

Entries must be a cassette tape of two original songs not to exceed 10 minutes. Entries must be sent no later than Sept. 7 to the Kaw Valley Songwriters Association, c/o Rick Frydman, 823 Missouri, Lawrence, Kan., 66044.

Dole endures mob scenes while visiting Yugoslavia

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thousands of ethnic Albanians in Pristina, Yugoslavia, tried Wednesday to voice their human rights complaints to a visiting U.S. delegation led by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Riot police swinging batons and firing tear gas dispersed the crowds, and drivers of the motorcade carrying the senators whisked them through town without stopping.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press in Washington, Dole described the human rights abuses suffered by the Albanians as "probably the worst in Europe."

"The Serbian minority runs the place," Dole said. "The Serbians thought we were a hostile group."

Ethnic Albanians, who make up 90 percent of Kosovo's 1.9 million people, are protesting last month's decision by the Communist authorities of Serbia to reduce Kosovo's autonomy. Kosovo is an administrative district of Serbia, Yugoslavia's largest republic.

Dole said unity is going to be difficult to achieve in Yugoslavia because of longtime ethnic divisions.

"But we believe in democracy and individual rights. It's going to come, just like everywhere else," he said.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., who was with Dole, said if the country wants more aid from the United States, it will have to correct human rights abuses.

Dole said that before the senators went to Pristina, they had a testy exchange with the prime minister, who wanted them to be accompanied by his foreign minister.

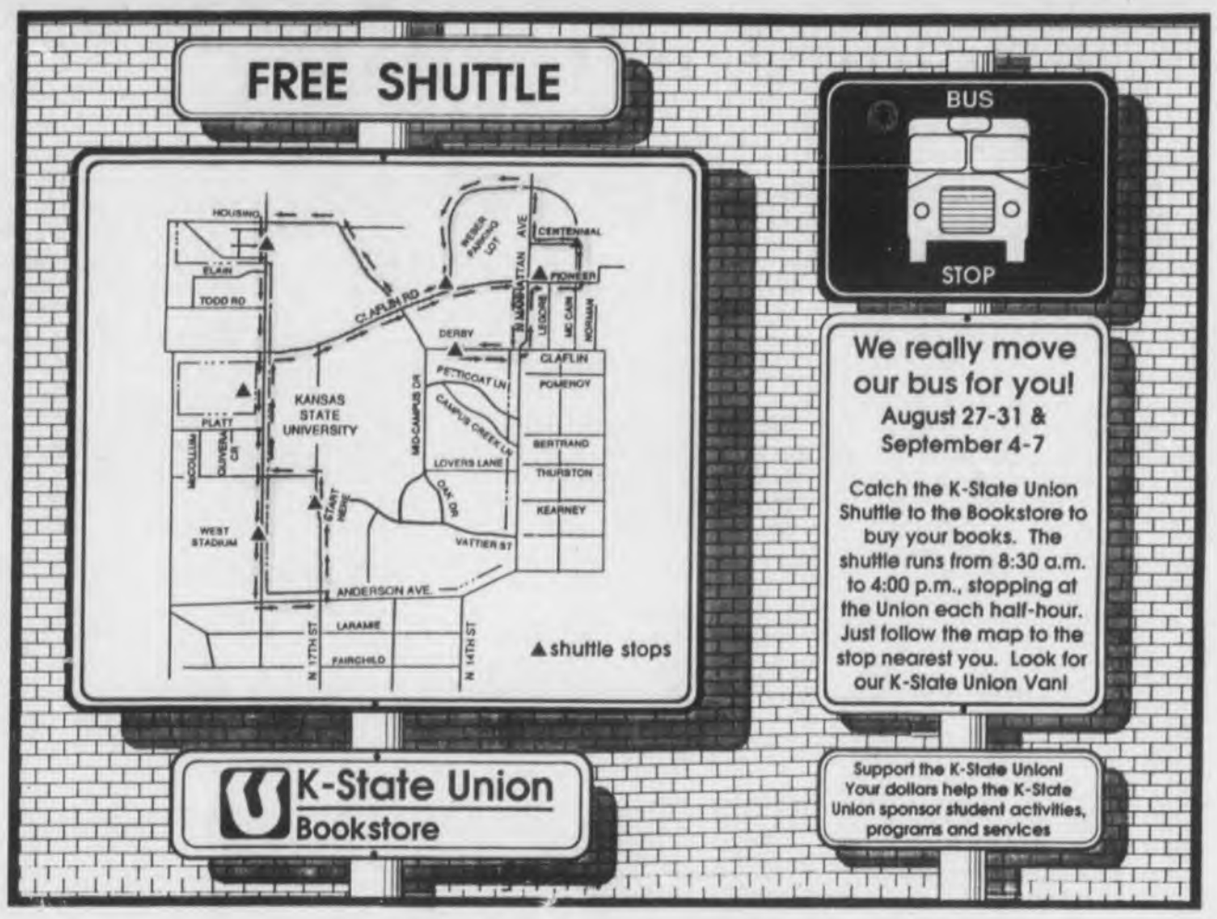
"I said we would not go with a chaperone," Dole said.

Finally, the prime minister agreed to let the senators go without the foreign minister but required them to stay with government escorts while in Pristina.

Dole

The delegation's motorcade was whisked into Pristina where the senators said thousands of townspeople were waiting for them.

"When they saw that American flag they started running toward the road," Dole said.



They held up their hands, spreading their fingers in a "V" sign, said Walt Riker, Dole's press secretary.

The government drivers in the senators' motorcade drove at breakneck speed to get past the waiting citizens, Riker said.

"When we got close to town, we realized the people were being kept away," he said. "When they realized we were being detoured, they started running. That's when they were hit with tear gas."

When the senators arrived at the Grand Hotel for meetings with groups of Albanians and Serbians, the streets had been cleared and only soldiers remained, Riker said. But the Albanians showed them photographs of the crowds that had been waiting and one of a man who was being beaten by soldiers, he said.

Dole said the private meeting with the Albanians was orderly, but the Serbians insisted on meeting in the hotel lobby where local media surrounded the group, shouting at the senators.

All peoples attend multicultural picnic

By Shannon Meyers
Collegian Reporter

Twenty-seven years ago, Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I have a dream" speech urged people of all races to come together and celebrate cultural differences. Wednesday that dream continued at a Multicultural Community Picnic in the Manhattan City Park.

Residents of Manhattan, K-State, Junction City and Fort Riley celebrated King's international dream of racial harmony at the 6:30 p.m. gathering.

The event, co-sponsored by the Manhattan Community Diversity Planning Committee and the K-State Racial/Ethnic Harmony Planning Committee, was a tribute to the diverse cultures in the four communities. The celebration featured cultural entertainment by Willie and the Truth Sextet of Faith Tabernacle in Junction City, a skit by the Manhattan Civic Theatre, African dancers, poets, musicians and a film about King.

Manhattan Mayor Richard Hayter cited his city's diverse population as one of its strengths.

"Manhattan's diversity makes it what it is," he said.

Kent Glasscock, Manhattan city commissioner, urged those present to continue the struggle for racial and ethnic harmony. "The dream is not dead," he said.

The event served as a kickoff and fundraiser for K-State's Racial Ethnic Harmony Week, scheduled for Oct. 8-12. That week is dedicated to providing community and student multicultural understanding and harmony.

"The event gave people an opportunity to celebrate King's speech and, at the same time, reach out and form cultural alliances. It promotes positive awareness of the multicultural communities," said Barbara Baker, celebration coordinator.

By increasing their awareness, the residents of the communities can be more sensitive to the needs of minority cultures, thus promoting racial and ethnic harmony, she said.

Nancy Anderson attended the picnic.

"The need for people of all races to come together is very basic, and I want to support any event that raises people's consciousness and appreciation of others," she said.

Instructors develop policies

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

K-State instructors have unrestricted authority to set academic and conduct policies in their classes, said Wayne Nafziger, faculty senate president and professor of economics.

Although many instructors do not require class attendance, they can base grades on it.

"A faculty member can base a grade on class attendance," Nafziger said. "I don't require class attendance. I require students to be in class for exams unless the student has a bona fide excuse. I would think many instructors would follow that."

Other classroom policies such as reading papers, chewing gum, eating or talking to others are up to the professor to set. Nafziger said problems that arise from these policies should try to be settled between the student and the instructor.

"In college, these things are much more easily resolved than in high school," Nafziger, who has taught at both levels, said. "If an instructor kicks a student out of class or gives an F for drinking pop in class, that student could file a grievance."

A grievance should be filed to the undergraduate grievance board if a conflict between a student and faculty member cannot be resolved by one of the following three methods: student and instructor negotiations, an appeal to the department head or an appeal to the dean of the college.

The grievance board includes three faculty and two student members. The board receives fewer than one complaint per semester, said Gwen Owens-Wilson, chair of the grievance board, and a six-year board member.

"In my six years I have seen the committee side with both sides," Owens-Wilson said.

In cases of instructors' classroom behavior rules, Owens-Wilson said the board will usually not try to disrupt teachers' policies.

"The instructor's policy is policy. The board will side for the str-

Chemist says zinc plays role in AIDS

By The Associated Press

CATONSVILLE, Md. — A chemist says he has determined that zinc plays a key role in the spread of the AIDS virus, which could lead to a vaccine or drugs to combat the disease.

Michael Summers, a chemistry professor at the University of Maryland Baltimore County, said Tuesday he had found that zinc is the glue that binds one protein critical to the virus' duplication to the genetic material that makes the virus infectious.

Zinc is present in the body. If researchers can develop a drug that alters, eliminates or masks the zinc, the infectious material won't exist when new virus cells are formed, Summers told reporters.

"This research has important implications for the development of an AIDS vaccine," Summers said. He said healthy people could be injected with non-infectious virus to make them develop an immunity to the infectious form.

He emphasized that a vaccine was still a long way off, but said the research provides another avenue for pharmaceutical companies developing drugs against AIDS.

Summers' findings were published Tuesday in Biochemistry, a weekly journal of the American Chemical Society.

He said the results are similar to those that led to the development of the AIDS-fighting drug AZT. AIDS attacks the body's immune system, rendering it helpless to fight disease.

A biochemist at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine agreed that the findings are an important, albeit small, step.

"It really does present a new avenue of research which had been at least underappreciated if not completely unrecognized," said Jeremy Berg, who suggested zinc as a molecular glue in certain viruses four years ago.

Summers said scientists at the National Cancer Institute in Frederick have begun work on a drug based on his research, but cautioned that there's no known way to alter the zinc.

Berg said that even if Summers' research leads to a vaccine, it may not be effective in all cases.

ing on."

Coach John Capriotti knows the loss of three seniors will hurt, but also has faith that the junior class will help build the confidence and lead the new pack of youth.

"Even though they are only juniors, they have had a lot of experience and are both real talented," Capriotti said. "Treiber is the Big Eight champion in the 3,000 meters, and Janet (Haskin) is the NCAA champion in the 10,000. They are two pretty good runners for us, and I expect them to give us some pretty good leadership."

Haskin could be looking at her most productive year since coming to K-State two years ago. For the first time, she has been able to train continously for the past year without an injury.

With the extra training, she now runs 60 miles per week — more than she has ever done — in an effort to build a strong base for the season.

"I had a pretty good summer and a pretty good mileage base to prepare me for the cross country season. I stayed injury-free, which was the main thing for me," Haskin said. "It was the most mileage I have ever done before. I was a little tired, but now I'm adjusted to it."

Capriotti echoes Haskin's thoughts on her productive summer.

"I think it was her best summer ever as far as her training goes. She got up to 60 miles per week, so that has gradually improved," Capriotti said.

Haskin gained all-American recognition last year in both cross country and track. One of her main goals is to retain and improve her national status. Haskin said she hopes for another All-American season and to help the team qualify for the NCAA championships.

"She is much better on the track because she is not as strong as she could be yet," Capriotti said. "I'm hoping that she is in the top 10 in cross country or maybe even in the top five."

moved, which did not safely allow us to get started on time," he said.

When the utilities were moved, work was delayed due to the unusual amounts of rain late spring and early summer, Brown said.

"On this particular project, there have been an unusally high number of rain days," he said. "We plan to make a strenuous protest of the fines because of these special circumstances."

Commissioner Gene Klingler said he was upset about how long the project is taking.

"The City has caught a lot of flack because progress on the street has just been limping along," he said. "We're as frustrated as the public about the delay, and I think the public has had all they can handle."

Klingler said he was concerned there will also be a delay when work starts on Seth Childs Road. He said he thinks a lot of the problem is caused by state inspectors not doing their job properly.

"There were many instances when the state inspectors did not show up on time," he said. "The same construction company did the work on Fort Riley Boulevard in '87 and did a good job — that project was locally inspected."

Grievances are kept confidential, and cases are judged on their individual characteristics, not on precedence, she said.

"The board has looked for equitable solutions to cases in the past," Owens-Wilson said. "I am always amazed, although I probably shouldn't be, at the quality of students we have on the board."

Morgan said that since Malir is a member of Slattery's official staff, she has no authority to answer questions or to comment on campaign-oriented material. Morgan said the questions should have been directed to Slattery's campaign staff.

"They don't understand that the law dictates a congressman cannot use taxpayer-paid staff for campaign purposes," Morgan said, referring to the debate comments.

Murray said Malir was simply doing her job, and it is entirely appropriate for any member of Slattery's staff, congressional or official, to comment.

"Nancy received calls from the press, and she answered them, which is her job," Murray said.

The Slattery campaign headquarters had not been officially notified of the complaint Wednesday. Tills instructed the congressional committee to pursue the matter with diligence.

"The congressman has lost any reasonable sense of what part of his re-election should be paid for by taxpayers and which should be paid by the special-interest groups contributing to his campaign," Tills said.

Fire burns rural home

By Erwin Seba
Special Projects Editor

A University employee and her two children were left homeless Thursday night after fire destroyed their rural Riley County home.

Patricia Keener, office assistant in the Department of Housing, said her 12-year-old son Jamie smelled smoke early Thursday night. After looking outside, Patricia Keener went to check the second story of the house.

"I looked up the stairway, and there was smoke coming down," she said.

Jamie Keener said, "It (the smoke) looked sort of like metal after it's been burned."

Patricia Keener called the 911 emergency service and then went with her son and daughter Toni, 6,

A team of firefighters sprays the remains of a two story house east of Leonardville Thursday evening. Fire crews from Riley, Randolph, Leonardville and Tattarax were called in to contain the fire. Patricia Keener, an employee of K-State, was renting the house and reported the blaze. There were no injuries.

Conflict brings to light military's policies

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Draft deferment for students abolished by Nixon in 1971

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

With the crisis in the Middle East, students may be wondering if they are exempt from a draft if it is implemented.

"That exemption was abolished in 1971," said Barbie Richardson, public affairs specialist for Selective Service Systems Agency. "Before then you got deferment after deferment as long as you were enrolled in college."

College students can receive a postponement of orders.

"They can receive a postponement until the end of the current semester," she said. "and seniors would be allowed to complete their senior years."

Exemptions still exist for conscientious objectors and those whose induction would cause a hardship for their dependents. If a parent or sibling was killed in military duty then that person is also exempt. These three are the primary exemptions that will effect college students, Richardson said.

The Selective Service System has not drafted anyone since 1973, but could swing into action quickly if a desperate situation arises.

"First, it would take an act of Congress and a presidential approval," Richardson said.

The length of time for this process is uncertain.

"It all depends on what kind of situation we're in," said Lt. Col. William J. Cook, professor of military science. "If we were in the midst of a war I would suspect it would be a relatively fast process."

Without a war, the selective service would probably not be considered, Cook said.

The system works much as it did previously. The numbers are hand—picked in Washington, D.C.. The results are then tabulated on a data base located in Illinois.

"Within 13 days the first inductees would receive their orders and be stationed at their assigned military entrance processing station," Richardson said. "We could provide 100,000 within 30 days."

Currently, the selective service is for males aged 18-25 with 20 year-olds being the most vulnerable.

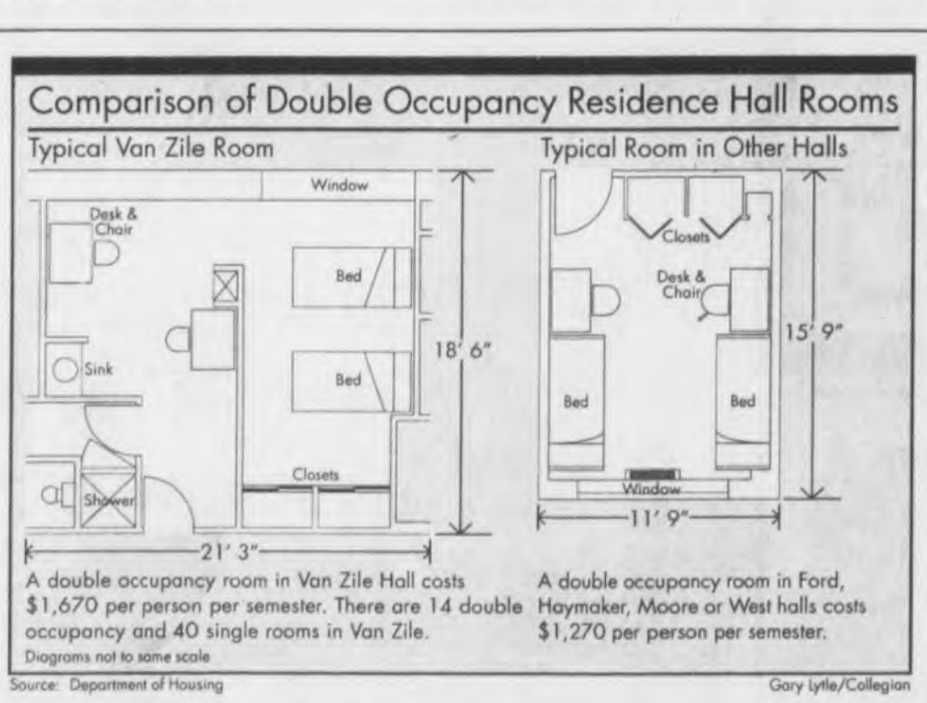
"That was just the age that was decided upon," Richardson said.

According to the University Registrar, there are approximately 8,000 males in the 18 to 25 age group at K-State. Of these, about 1,500 are 20-year-olds.

ROTC students to be activated if crisis worsens

By The Collegian Staff

Rapid changes in the Middle East have led to an exception in policy that no longer protects K-State ROTC students from being deployed should the ROTC be mobilized.



The new regulation involves SMP cadets, ROTC cadets who are in the Army Reserve or National Guard. The cadets who are in the National Guard or reserves will be deployed with their units.

Directions to mobilize the ROTC comes from the Pentagon, and the entire K-State ROTC program would be involved if the order is given. In that event, active duty cadre, retired Army personnel, ROTC cadets and student reservists would be deployed.

"I personally don't see this conflict as something that could escalate like Vietnam because the world is essentially backing us," said Lt. Col. William Cook, professor of military science.

Cook was in the ROTC from 1965-69 at the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville during the height of the Vietnam War. He said no ROTC battalions were called to active duty during the worst years of the Vietnam War. During Vietnam, a 2S deferment was given to students not in the draft system. This deferment was stopped at the height of the Students welcoming end of Van Zile construction

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Van Zile Hall, a part of the Strong Complex, is nearing the end of its renovation with visible results, both in the structure's appearance and students' reactions.

Van Zile features air-conditioning, carpeting, private bathrooms, extra space, and new furniture.

Van Zile residents say there are more advantages to living there than physical features. The hall is like a home rather than just a place to sleep, said Julie Bostater, senior in mechanical engineering and Van Zile resident.

Melinda Poppie, sophomore in theater and history, agreed.

"Everybody's real friendly. If you need something, you knock on someone's door and ask for some pliers or get some psychology help. It's no big deal."

Hall members tend to fraternize and attend social events together, Poppie said. Saturday night about 25 of the residents saw "Pretty Woman" together.

"We went door-knocking that time," she said.

Besides the friendships, Poppie said it is nice having all the extra space. For instance, about 15 people can fit in her room and watch movies on her VCR, which they have done several times this semester.

Shaun Evans, junior in economics and political science who has his own room, agreed.

"This is nice. It's smaller than my room last year (at Haymaker Hall), but, since I don't have a roommate, it seems bigger," he said.

Chief of staff resigns position; Johnson seeks successor for post

Wingert announces plans to sit out term, aid father's campaign

By Chris Koger
News Editor

The student body president's chief of staff resigned at Thursday night's Student Senate meeting.

Fred Wingert, who was chosen by Student Body President Todd Johnson last fall, plans to help his father, George Wingert, campaign for the 5th District congressional seat.

His replacement will have to be approved by the Senate Cabinet Nominee Review Committee, and may be in office by next week's Senate meeting. Senate passed a resolution during the meeting naming five senators to the committee to speed up the replacement process.

Mike Steinle, graduate senator in business administration, is most likely to succeed Wingert, said Johnson in earlier interviews. Steinle has helped with lobbying efforts for the University and heads the lobby team appointed by Johnson.

During the open period, Provost James Coffman addressed Senate on the University's process of reorganization due to lack of state funding. Coffman said the administration has been looking at several key factors in allocating resources, including economic devolopment and environmental concerns, strengthening of international programs and enhancement of the diversity of groups on campus.

He cited enormous cuts in the K-State and state budgets, which caused the University to function with 20 percent less funding than its peers. These shortfalls in the budget include the loss of the funds from the third year of the Margin of Excellence; shrinkage funds, which were lost due to unfilled positions within the University; and the enrollment adjustment.

In the wake of the budget crunch, University administrators have been working with departments and deans to reallocate funds and trim programs. Coffman said 25 percent of faculty raises have gone towards easing the cuts, along with $1 million that was originally set for the computer equipment budget.

Three men arrested on campus face misdemeanor theft charges

By Steve Franzen
Campus Editor

Three men were arrested in Lot B-2 and charged with misdemeamors of theft early Thursday morning.

One of the men was also charged with possesion of a controlled substance.

K-State Police officers apprehended the three area men at 3:29 a.m. in the northeast campus parking lot and transported them to the Riley County Jail.

"They were caught in the act of stealing the wheels and tires off a car in Lot B-2," said Investigator Richard Herrman of the campus police.

A red, 1990 Chevrolet Geo was up on a jack with one tire already off when a patrolling officer noticed the activity, Herrman said. The officer called for back-up when he noticed two persons hiding under nearby cars and a third person in another car in the lot.

The men arrested are James Douglas Price, 19, of Fort Riley; Raymond M. Custer, 24, of Manhattan; and James Van Rude, 20, junior in biology. All were charged with misdemeanors of theft, and Custer was also charged with possesion of a controlled substance.

Rude and Price were released after each posted $300 bond. Custer remained in custody Thursday evening. Custer was unable to post the $300 bond for the theft charge nor the $500 bond for the charge of possesion of a controlled substance, said Capt. Wayne Anderson, county jailer.

The three men were apprehended near their car, Herrman said. Upon searching the suspects' vehicle, police officers found what they believed to be a controlled substance in the floorboards.

"We found a white, crystal-type substance, which our field tests show to be amphetamine in nature," Herrman said.

The substance has been sent to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation in Topeka for an accurate analysis.

Herrman said he spent Thursday afternoon putting together available information about the arrest at the request of the county attorney. He said the county attorney needs the case information in order to arraign Custer today. The other two men will be arraigned Sept. 5.

U.N. tries to mediate crisis

Hope strengthened Thursday that foreign women and children may soon get their promised safe passage from Iraq.

On the diplomatic front, the U.N. secretary-general arrived in Jordan to try to mediate the Persian Gulf crisis.

The crisis entered its fifth week Friday, with the United States pushing hard for a strong hand in its confrontation with Iraq's Saddam Hussein.

The U.N. chief, Javier Perez de Cuellar, expressed optimism for a peaceful settlement following Iraq's Aug. 2 takeover of Kuwait, its small, oil-rich neighbor, but he warned that the situation in the region was explosive.

President Bush said he was soliciting funds from other nations to help defray the cost of America's $1 billion-a-month military buildup in the gulf, and singled out Japan, West Germany, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and South Korea.

Bush said a new world order could emerge from the crisis, and "anyone with a stake in international order has an interest in ensuring that all of us succeed."

He told a news conference he was concerned about the thousands of hostages in Iraq, but said their fate could not be allowed to shape U.S. foreign policy.

More than 200 women and children gathered at Baghdad's Menia Hotel Thursday in preparation for leaving Iraq. Some had been held at strategic Iraqi sites, to head off attack from the U.S.-led multinational force in Saudi Arabia. No exit visas were expected before Saturday because Friday is the Moslem sabbath.

Iraq denied reports it sought food and medicine in exchange for hostages to ease effects from the punitive U.N. embargo of Iraq.

Florida police track lust killer

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Authorities struggled to keep up with the rumor mill Thursday in this college town panicked by five murders, while police searched for a "lust killer" who reportedly stole body parts of some victims.

University of Florida President John Lombardi said the school was operating normally and would not be held hostage to lunacy. But flags on campus flew at half-staff, and the city was being combed by an army of 600 local police, state investigators and FBI agents.

"We're trying to put a security blanket over this city," said Police Chief Wayland Clifton.

Despite efforts by police and school officials to provide a safe and sane environment during the opening week of classes, the discovery of five murdered students on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday released a virus of fear.

The fear was fed by published reports that the killer stole flesh from some of the mutilated victims and left the head of a decapitated victim sitting on a shelf.

Police have given few details about the mutilations. But the St. Petersburg Times reported that pieces of flesh from the first three victims were missing. The Orlando Sentinel reported that the nipples of the first two victims had been removed and had not been found.

Clifton said it was the work of a "lust killer."

Fear affected at least one school assignment. Anne G. Jones, an English professor, said a class chose to put off reading "Paris Trout," a novel by Pete Dexter about a psychotic murderer stalking a small town.

"They decided they didn't want to be reading this novel in the middle of the night," she said.

NASA cancels shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA on Thursday canceled the launch of space shuttle Columbia scheduled for Saturday because of a failed electronics part on one of the four telescopes in the shuttle's cargo bay.

The launch will take place "no earlier than next Wednesday," said Bruce Buckingham, a NASA spokesman.

The delay will give NASA a chance to put the shuttle Discovery on another pad and stay on schedule for a launch in early October.

Engineers had been struggling most of the day Thursday trying to establish a telemetry link with an X-ray observatory, one of the four telescopes carried in the cargo bay of the Columbia. At first they could not determine whether the fault lay in a ground link or with the circuits inside the shuttle.

They eventually traced the problem to an avionics box on the X-ray telescope.

KU council asks for answer

LAWRENCE (AP) — A governing body at the University of Kansas asked the chancellor Thursday to explain his opposition to moving ROTC ceremonies off campus because the military refuses to commission homosexuals.

The University Council of students, faculty and staff voted in a special meeting to ask Chancellor Gene Budig to appear before the University Senate next week.

The council, which makes policy recommendations to administrators, passed a resolution this spring saying Reserved Officer Training Corps programs violate KU's anti-discrimination policies.

The resolution would force the ROTC to move its commissioning ceremonies off campus. The ceremonies normally were held on the lawn of Allen Field House.

Budig has refused to sign the resolution. He said ROTC programs provide scholarship and employment opportunities.

Del Shankel, interim executive vice chancellor, served as Budig's representative at the meeting Thursday. He said that although the Department of Defense ban on homosexuals is clearly discriminatory, it does not mean KU should eliminate ROTC or move its ceremonies from campus.

Council members, however, complained that KU is sending a signal that discrimination is acceptable.

Golden Key chapter awarded

K-State's chapter of the Golden Key National Honor Society won its sixth consecutive Key Chapter Award at the national convention in Scottsdale, Ariz., Aug. 9-12.

The award is the honor society's highest honor and is based on chapter participation, accomplishments and activities.

"I think we have excellent student leadership. The students have the desire to get involved and follow through," said Willard Nelson, Blue Key adviser and associate director of the Center for Student Services.

Golden Key sponsors a scholarship information day, an Outstanding Graduate Teaching Assistant Award and various other activities on campus.

College juniors and seniors in the upper 15 percent of their class are invited to join the 161 chapters throughout the United States. K-State has about 200 new members each year, Nelson said.

The official presentation of the award will be at the reception for new members Oct. 21.

Morgan supports expansion issue

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Republican congressional candidate Scott Morgan realizes he may not be popular with farmers in the 2nd District, but nonetheless he supports the expansion of Fort Riley.

Preparing for the final campaign drive to the November elections, Morgan said the Fort Riley issue could be the deciding factor in the election.

Morgan, a native Kansan, received both his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Kansas.

CAMPAIGN 1990
Scott Morgan (R)
2nd Congressional District

He has held political positions including staff attorney for the U.S. Customs Service, staff counsel for the Subcommittee on Courts and director of federal affairs and chief counsel for Gov. Mike Hayden.

Morgan said it is essential to support Fort Riley at its current status and push for any expansion that might be necessary.

He said he sees the ability to take a stand as one of the main differences between himself and U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery. Morgan has accused Slattery several times of not letting his constituents know where he stands on the Fort Riley issue.

Morgan said because Fort Riley is important to the people of the 2nd District, Slattery should support its expansion or at least take a hard-nosed stand against it.

"The Congressman has not worked to form a coalition to support Fort Riley," Morgan said. "If Slattery does not support Fort Riley, that's fine. I disagree with him. As soon as a choice becomes difficult, he dances around it. The only thing I ask is that he take a stand on it one way or the other."

In times of possible military cutbacks, which Morgan also supports, he said it may be a bit difficult for some people to understand why he would want money going into expansion.

"In a small defense budget there will be money cutbacks elsewhere," he said referring to other military bases that might be slated for closing or reduction. "I do not believe Fort Riley would ever close altogether. The question is whether they keep the entire division stationed there or just a few thousand."

Morgan said he plans to address the major issues on which he and Slattery disagree in a press conference scheduled for Sept. 5 in Manhattan.

"There are a number of things I believe he has never been challenged on and some areas in which I believe I have more experience then he does," Morgan said. "People always say they want an issue—oriented campaign and they are going to get one."

Morgan said he realizes there is a compelling argument against the Fort Riley expansion — mainly from farmers who feel their land may be threatened. On the other hand, there are 20,000 jobs at Fort Riley.

When asked about support for his position on Fort Riley, he said he believes he has the necessary backing despite dissenting views from the area's farm community.

"I am in no way saying farmers are not important, but we have to take a wider view and consider the consequences of a possible reduction at Fort Riley," he said, adding that any re-adjustment by farmers would not be enough to damage the Kansas farm economy.

Morgan remains on a busy schedule which includes a series of press conferences and appearances in 2nd district communites including Junction City.

Lynn McVay, Morgan's campaign coordinator, said things are going well and the congressional challenger is well received everywhere.

"Right now, we just need to make sure Scott stays out on the road and continues to meet people," McVay said.

Turkish trade team visits K-State

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

Six flour mill executives from Turkey visited the Department of Grain Science and Industry Thursday.

Roger Johnson, assistant director of the International Grain Program, said groups of international executives, called trade teams, visit a number of facilities in the United States. This enables the states to promote the marketing of grains and soybeans in overseas markets.

"Many of these visitors are sponsored by cooperative organizations such as the U.S. Wheat Associates, the U.S. Feed Grain Council or the American Soybean Association," Johnson said.

Hassan Abdel Ghaffar from Cairo, Egypt, is a senior marketing specialist in and representative of the U.S. Wheat Associates in Middle East.

Ghaffar said both sides benefit by exchanging important and useful information.

Fatih Cakmakoglu, a member of the trade team, said the group was composed of millers from all over Turkey. Cakmakoglu said the University has a strong grain science department

"I found it very interesting," he said. "The department has a lot of important facilities for milling and baking."

He said he hopes to see more Turkish trade teams visit the University in the future.

"We plan to have every year, or every other year, a trade team coming to K-State," he said.

Cakmakoglu said his trade team also talked about the possiblitity of hosting people from the grain science department in Turkey.

Johnson said the team visited only one other university in the United States, North Dakota State University.

"We have unique training facilities, and many foreign visitors come to see them," Johnson said.

He said the Department of Grain Science and Industry is one of the strongest departments and is often visited by persons from the milling and baking industry.

"We also have individuals, not only teams, who visit us," Johnson said. "For example, we had a man who comes from the largest black—owned bakery in South Africa."

The international program, Johnson said, was established in 1978 and since then many international groups from all over the world have visited the department.

"People have come from China, Japan, Spain, Africa, Greece, India and many other countries," he said.

Johnson also said a group from Japan will be visiting the department.

"The Department of Grain Science and Industry stands to benefit nationally by its exposure to these teams," Johnson said.

Our actions make significant difference

Jana Leep

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I quit biting my nails this summer. I quit a lot of things this summer. And yet upon arriving in Manhattan, I have be gun thinking about future deadlines, complications, pressure and expectations, and of course, have begun chomping on my bit.

And yet my concerns seem insignificant in comparison to the mess of New York City, of its people, of its environment — a mess I waded in a week before school began. But before I tear off all my nails, tear off all the serenity that summer brought me, this time I have a reality check to prevent me from doing so. A reality check, which emerged from my visit to New York.

Everything we do matters.

I am young, healthy, busy. But what am I doing? Since I know the clock will wind down eventually, I seem to help it along in its unraveling. It doesn't seem to matter that I have to have coffee to function, or inadequate sleep to feel I have accomplished something or a couple of beers to relax or smile or be honest. We all have our own crutches that don't seem to matter, or at least don't seem to hinder.

I have ignored the obvious too long, for it was forced into my attention when I walked the streets of New York, lacking the defense mechanisms New Yorkers have perfected. We are a culture of self-inflicted ignorance about our bodies, our limits, our spirit, our significance, our effect upon ourselves, others and the earth. Why is it that we take for granted the most significant aspects of our lives? Our bodies. Food. Sleep. Family. Pleasure. Nature. Each other. These matter — they are there behind us, embracing us, almost unnoticeable. But later, when they are gone and shriveled with neglect, we find we were attached and nurtured by their presence.

New York was a shriveled city. New York was full of beautiful, busy, efficient, watch-watching, yet shriveled people. New York was full of malnourished, victimized, victimizing, hopeless, and shriveled people. I didn't experience the mythic romance of New York. One could be overwhelmed with the possibilities for entertainment, with the "Goliath-like" buildings, with this city of mourners, dressed in black, wallowing in soot.

But the soot seemed to provide the tangible evidence that something important had to be going on there, or no one would be there in the first place. Our culture insists on this tangible evidence for proof of meaning and purpose. Money. Beauty. Career. Grades. Car. House. Clothing. And New York has all these qualities of significance. Yet these are peripheral and insubstantial.

Looking and listening to the New Yorkers — the business men and women, the intellectuals, the activists, the hotel attendants, the street workers — they all expressed a lack of connection, except the one commonality of surviving this city. While I don't want to suggest that content is lacking in New York, for the city is a mecca of minds and ideas, I do want to suggest that the intangible connections to others seem to have been dismissed as unimportant, even bothersome.

I want to matter, be of substance, be of meaning through my connection with others. I can no longer accept that I will feel fulfilled once I have mastered knowledge or a career or a skill. One is never free from that game and the college environment can foster this sacrifice for the sake of accomplishment. The motto seems to be "pay now, play later." I am wondering now if such an equation is imbalanced and untruthful.

So I just bit off another nail. I am worrying. I am still not able to completely accept that I am worthy whether or not I am accomplished, that I am worthy even without having survived the rigors of a life in New York.

But worth is something internal and eternal. And with another year, another semester beginning, perhaps we would feel better about what we do accomplish if we accepted that we have work to be done, that of taking time for ourselves and for others, for finding balance and interdependence between work and play.

Because everything we do matters. We are a powerful bunch, influential and responsible. We, as insignificant strangers to each other, can become quite significant in a moment, with a word.

Like the homeless human beings that walk New York, that I encountered next to me, begging from me, asking me to look into their eyes. It wasn't easy to swallow. My friends and I could barely finish our lunches. We meant to drag it back to the hotel for a midnight snack, but as we passed hungry people, I sensed deep in my gut that I didn't deserve this food, that they did. Instead of ignoring them, instead of ignoring each other, we handed two men our doggie bags. I felt relief, guilt, discomfort — a swarm of emotions.

Suddenly, we, as strangers, had become somewhat significant within the lives of these men. I sensed my effect on people, on my environment. I sensed that cyclical nature of cause/effect. I sensed that by approaching others and ourselves with responsibility, with respect, perhaps we could prevent becoming significant because of the pain we create, and, instead, become meaningful through empathy and compassion. And yet, when we gave the food to the homeless men, I acted out of guilt and shame, which led me to see with more empathetic eyes.

We all are strangers to each other, especially in a city like New York — but we all want to be treated with respect and we all need to be treated with respect. But it seems we must start with ourselves and others. Respect will cycle around when we accept that everything we do does matter.

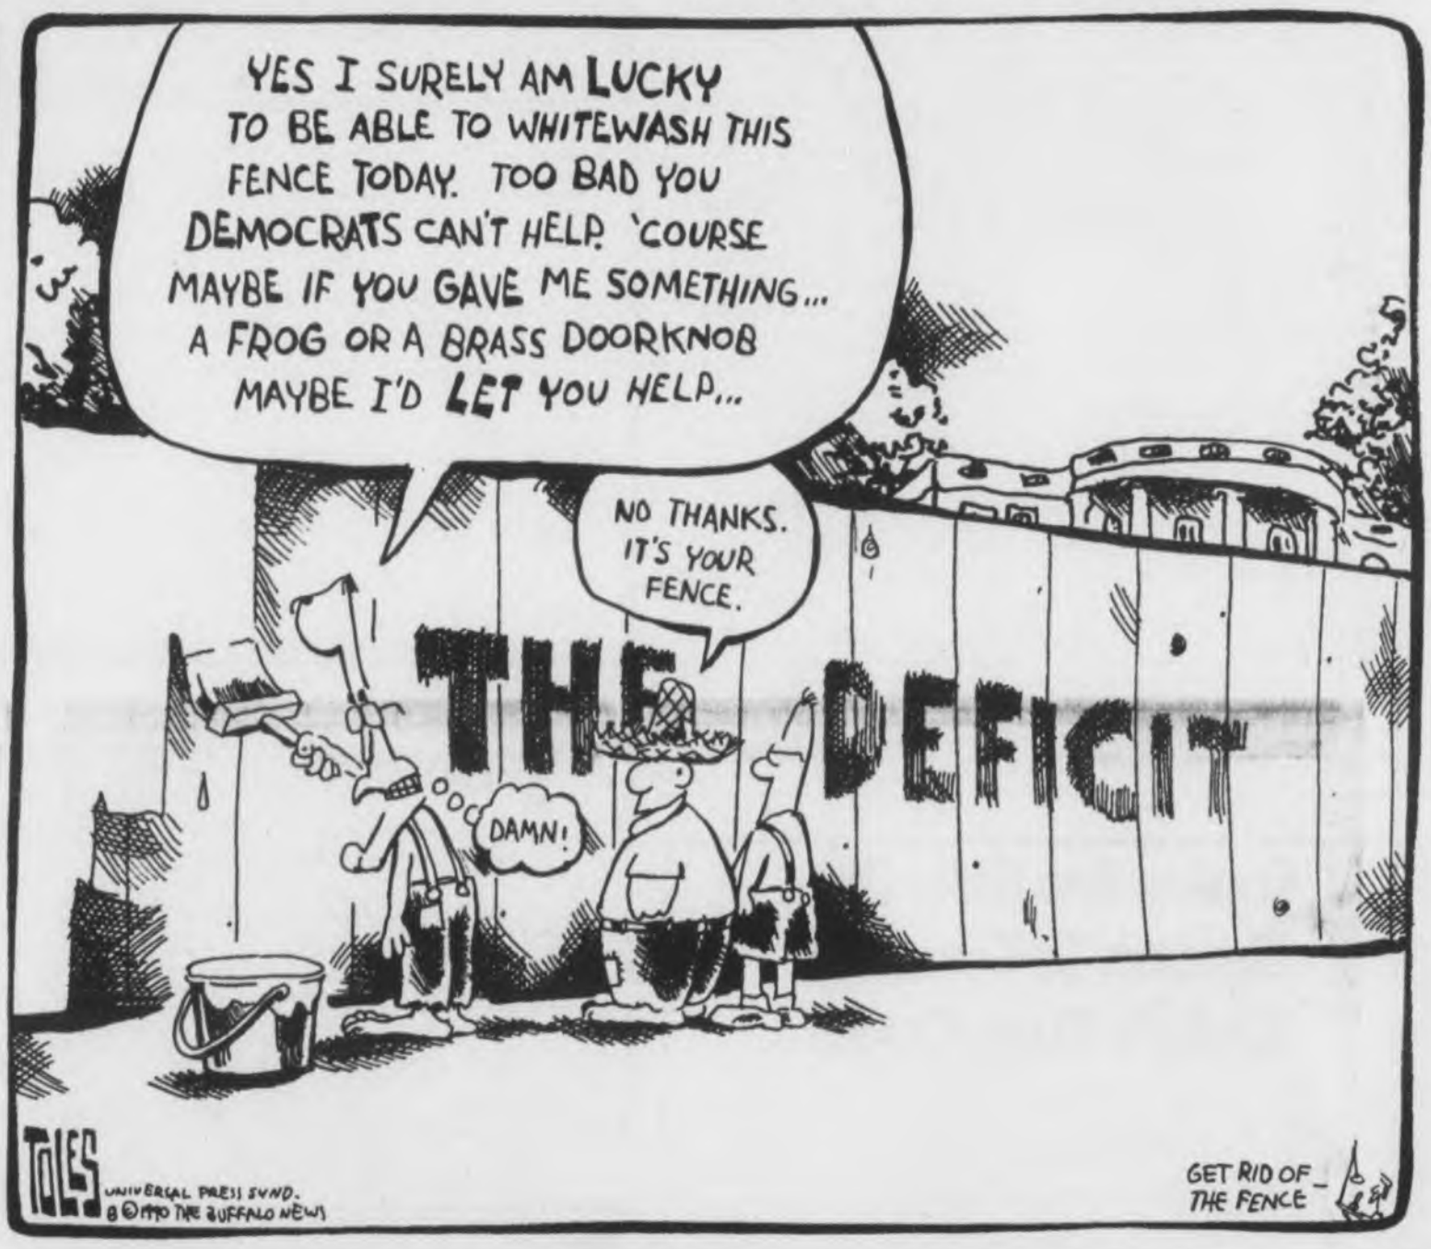
First commitments should take priority

Last fall, a controversy arose within the ranks of Student Senate when newly-elected Student Body President Todd Johnson appointed a freshman with no experience in student government as his chief of staff.

Choosing Fred Wingert for that position came back to haunt Johnson. Wingert resigned at Thursday night's Senate meeting because he plans to help his father campaign for the 5th district congressional seat.

Wingert said he made the decision because it was a commitment to his family. He is sure he can have the most impact on higher education if he helps his father get elected.



It should go without saying that Wingert made the same commitment to K-State students when he took the position as Johnson's second-in-command. He has once again brought up questions of Johnson's ability to make sound personnel decisions, which could affect the way he is perceived by the student body.

The Senate Cabinet Nominee Review Committee showed foresight when it unanimously rejected Wingert's nomination last fall. Senate later approved the position, disregarding the committee's vote.

Fortunately for Senate and all University students, Wingert's most likely replacement, Mike Steinle, has been active in Senate activities and supervised last semester's lobbying efforts at the Statehouse. The strain and anxiety of a staff transition will be eased because of Steinle's experience.

Johnson has spoken highly of Wingert's performance for the semester he held the chief-of-staff position. This may be true, but leaving a job half done is not fulfilling expectations.

Hopefully this will be a lesson to future student body presidents who choose staffs who have proven themselves in student government and who will be loyal to their first commitment.

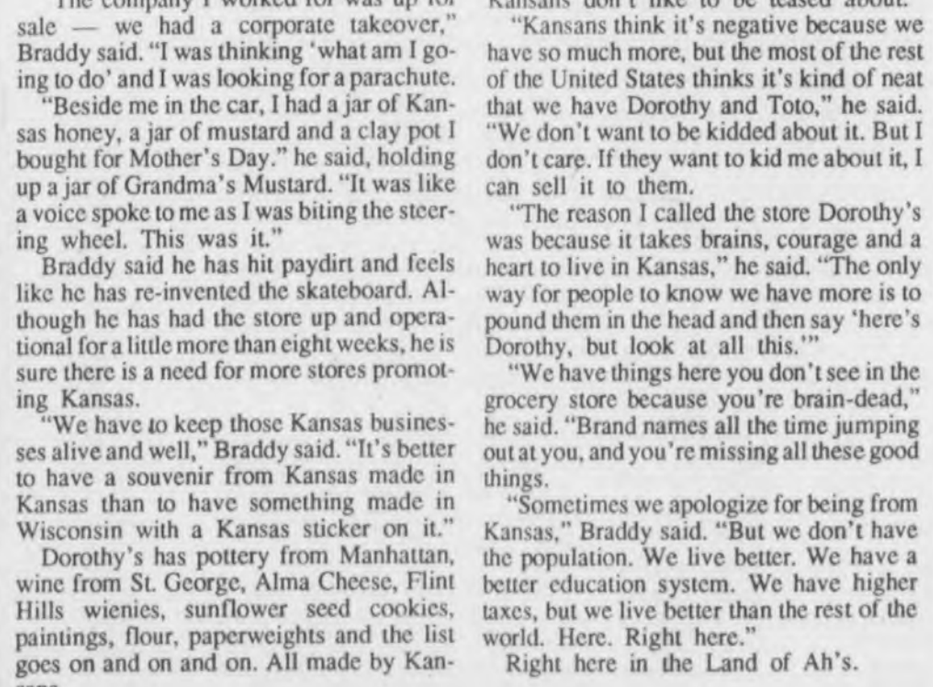
There's no place like Dorothy's



While traveling across Kansas, Tom Braddy has found a variety of goods produced within the state. He opened Dorothy's Land of Ah's in Paxico to sell Kansas-made products.

Braddy shows visitors from Topeka the machinery that Fields of Fair will use next week to make its wine.

Tom Braddy recently opened a unique souvenir shop. His shop sells gifts, arts and foods made only in Kansas.

Tom Braddy has done his fair share of traveling as a casket salesman.

But he's dead set on the thought that there's no place like home.

Braddy is the wizard of Dorothy's Land of Ah's, a souvenir store that stands on the plains next to I-70, near Paxico. The store shares a huge barn-like building with the Fields of Fair Winery and deals exclusively in gifts, art and foods from Kansas.

In his travels around the state selling caskets, Braddy brought home many Kansas-made products. When his company's future began to look bleak, Braddy turned to his home state for inspiration.

"The company I worked for was up for sale — we had a corporate takeover," Braddy said. "I was thinking 'what am I going to do' and I was looking for a parachute.

"Beside me in the car, I had a jar of Kansas honey, a jar of mustard and a clay pot I bought for Mother's Day." he said, holding up a jar of Grandma's Mustard. "It was like a voice spoke to me as I was biting the steering wheel. This was it."

Braddy said he has hit paydirt and feels like he has re-invented the skateboard. Although he has had the store up and operational for a little more than eight weeks, he is sure there is a need for more stores promoting Kansas.

"We have to keep those Kansas businesses alive and well," Braddy said. "It's better to have a souvenir from Kansas made in Kansas than to have something made in Wisconsin with a Kansas sticker on it."

Dorothy's has pottery from Manhattan, wine from St. George, Alma Cheese, Flint Hills wienies, sunflower seed cookies, paintings, flour, paperweights and the list goes on and on and on. All made by Kansans.

"It's nice to see people come from — I don't know — New Jersey, for instance, and spend a lot of money," he said. "Kansas is way behind in tourism. Way behind. It's little shops like this that people stop in and say 'well, gosh, I didn't know this was here.'

"You might find a little shelf at Hyper-Mart about yay-big of stuff from Kansas that they do for their own promotion. But nothing like this."

The name "Dorothy's Land of Ah's" can be seen as negative to Kansans, and Braddy said Kansans would like to be known for more than the "Wizard-of-Oz thing." The image of Dorothy and Toto is something Kansans don't like to be teased about.

"Kansans think it's negative because we have so much more, but the most of the rest of the United States thinks it's kind of neat that we have Dorothy and Toto," he said. "We don't want to be kidded about it. But I don't care. If they want to kid me about it, I can sell it to them.

"The reason I called the store Dorothy's was because it takes brains, courage and a heart to live in Kansas," he said. "The only way for people to know we have more is to pound them in the head and then say 'here's Dorothy, but look at all this.'"

"We have things here you don't see in the grocery store because you're brain-dead," he said. "Brand names all the time jumping out at you, and you're missing all these good things.

"Sometimes we apologize for being from Kansas," Braddy said. "But we don't have the population. We live better. We have a better education system. We have higher taxes, but we live better than the rest of the world. Here. Right here."

Right here in the Land of Ah's.

Laing now leader after successful spring campaign

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Sophomore golfer Richard Laing carries more than 14 clubs and a bag around the Manhattan Country Club course each day in practice.

He also hauls a desire to bring the K-State program out of the doldrums. And a personal accomplishment last season may provide the spark.

Laing, who transferred from California State-Fullerton in 1989, became the first Wildcat golfer in 17 years to qualify for NCAA Regional competition. The Bonner Springs native's season stroke average of 75.8 placed him among individual representatives from District V (K-State, Kansas, Missouri Nebraska and Oklahoma) at the tournament in Columbus, Ohio.

"Individually, it was awesome for me to do that as a freshman," Laing said. "That really gave me something to look forward to for the future, but the year was still disappointing from a team standpoint."

The 'Cats stumbled to an eighth-place finish in the Big Eight Conference Tournament at Oak Tree Golf Club in Edmond, Okla. in May. Laing, Brett Vuillemin and Jeff Sedorcek put K-State in the middle of the pack through the first two days of competition. But soaring scores on the final day from the fourth and fifth men kept K-State in the cellar.

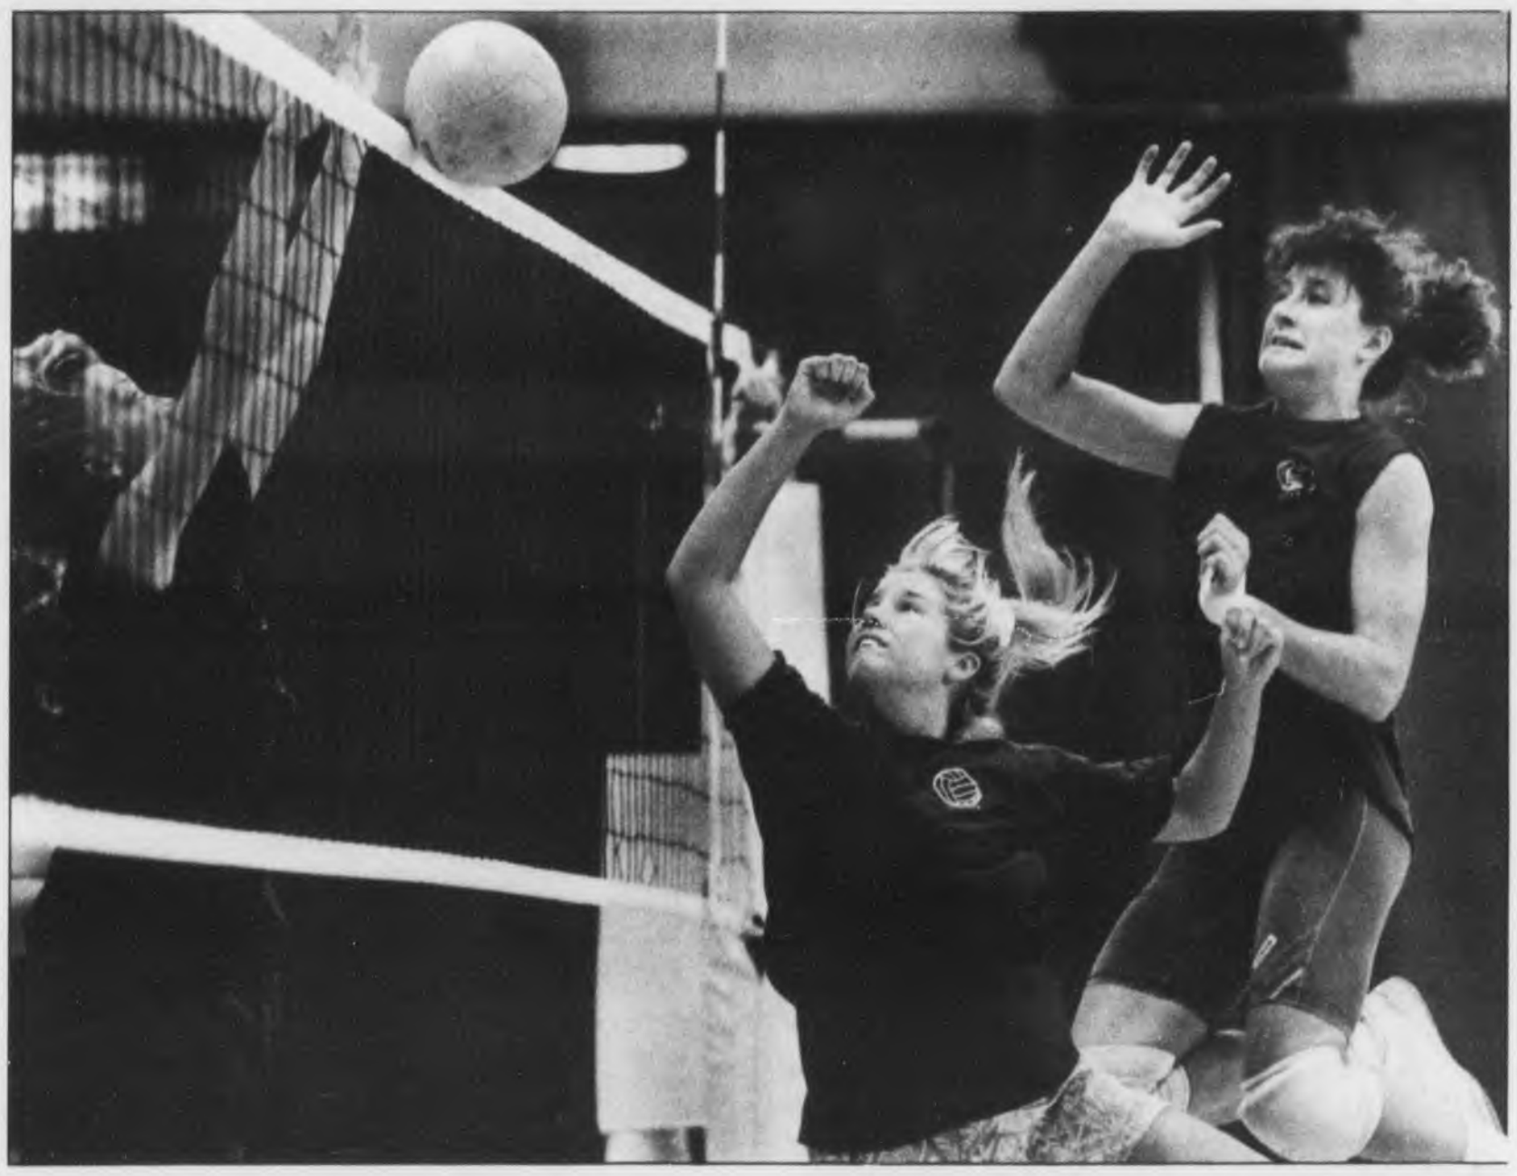
"It was disappointing because we weren't the only ones out there with talent," Laing said. "We had a lot of guys who were capable. We just didn't get the job done."

The brunt of the blame did not lie with Laing's performance. After struggling at the opening tournament in Colorado, Laing blistered courses the remainder of the season with a 73.5 average.

"Richard shot 83s the first two days of that tournament in Colorado," K-State golf coach Russ Bunker said. "He was so disappointed with himself that he asked me if I wanted him to get on the plane and fly home."

Laing stayed around for the final day and posted the tournament's best round. He spent the remainder of the season battling with Vuillemin and Sedorcek for K-State's No. 1 spot.

"NCAA bids are based on seasonal performance, and it could have been either one of those three who got it," Bunker said. "They were all really close."



Sedorcek has since departed, leaving Laing and Vuillemin with leadership roles heading into the 1990 fall season.

"I didn't come here wanting to be looked upon as a leader," Laing said. "There were seniors here for that, and I just wanted to help in other ways.

"This year, Brett's back with us, and those duties will fall into his hands. If the guys on the team want me to accept and help in that role, I'll try and do it with how I perform on the course."

Bunker said Laing's accomplishment should have direct effects on the 1990 team.

"I think what Richard basically did is open the eyes of some of the other guys," he said. "With many of them, maybe they have the talent, but they just haven't worked hard enough. If anything, Richard has shown them how to suck it up and concentrate better."

Spikers to open season

Nelson attempts to blend youth, experience on floor

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

With only one senior and two juniors returning, the K-State volleyball squad will start its 1990 season this weekend with plenty of youthful enthusiasm.

Head coach Scott Nelson starts his 11th season at K-State with matches against Tulsa, at 11 a.m. Saturday, and Drake, at 2 p.m. Sunday, in Ahearn Field House. There is no admission charge for either match.

"We'll be fairly young, but we want to use that to our advantage this year," Nelson said. "We want to have high-spirited practices throughout the year, and take advantage of our youth and enthusiasm because we are going to lack on volleyball team knowledge."

Despite the low quantity of upperclassmen, the spikers will return with quality. Both juniors, middle hitter Betsy Berkley and outside hitter Rhonda Hughes, were named honorable mention all-Big Eight selections a year ago.

Berkley led K-State in solo blocks with 28, block assists with 71, and had an attack percentage of .296, the fourth best single-season percentage in K-State history.

Hughes topped the Big Eight Conference with a 3.54 digs-per-game average, as well as leading the spikers with 261 kills, 722 attacks and 333 digs last year. The three will be asked to provide the needed leadership this season, along with senior middle hitter Valery Roberts.

"We really look to them, not so much to carry our load offensively or defensively, but to provide good leadership throughout practices, matches and throughout the year," Nelson said. "That's going to be a tough thing, because they're needing to learn that role also.

"That's a transition they're picking up and doing a good job of, as well as our sophomore class," Nelson said. "That's a real key for this team, for them to continue to develop and also provide leadership in their play and practices."

Even with five sophomores and four freshmen, the squad isn't as inexperienced as it appears.

"Our sophomore class is really experienced because we ran into some unforeseen injuries last year, and our freshmen had an opportunity to step on the court and play a good deal of the season," Nelson said. "So they're a little ahead of a typical freshman class."

After the loss of Leslie Kull and Kristin Martin from last season, Nelson must once again groom two freshmen, Alison Murphy and Amy Carlson, into the setter position.

"We graduated two senior setters, and both had set for our team since their freshman year," Nelson said. "Although our team system over the past four years has primarily been a two-setter system, this year we have two freshman setters, but our offensive system is going to be a 5-1 system, with five hitters and one setter. That's an area where we lost some experience."

J. Kyle Wyatt/Collegian

Head Volleyball coach Scott Nelson instructs his players during practice Thursday afternoon in preparation for the team's weekend matchups with Tulsa and Drake.

Part of the squad's development, according to Nelson, will be the increased road schedule. With only 10 home matches, the team will be challenged to come together.

"We need to learn to win on the road. This is still kind of a transition year for us," Nelson said. "So we don't know if we really look at it as a disadvantage not being at home as much, or a challenge to upgrade our program.

K-State will try to keep its record against Tulsa perfect, having already compiled a 17-0 mark against the Golden Hurricane. Also, after splitting last season's games with Drake, the Wildcats will work to better their 11-7 record with the Bulldogs.

Nelson is hopeful that his squad will concentrate on their game plan, and less on the game plan of their opponents.

"(Since) no one has really played, we can look at the films from last year and imagine what the new players and the lineup are doing, but it's pretty open-ended as far as concrete knowledge of the team," Nelson said. "With this being the first match of the year, they don't know us either, so probably whoever stays within their system the best is going to come out on top.

"I think we are going to try to keep our focus on ourselves in the early part of the season, make sure

Cobb top punter; kicker still tossup

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Special Teams

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Chris Cobb first came to K-State as a quarterback and has since become one of the Big Eight's finest punters.

In the past two seasons, Cobb has remained in the backup quarterback position, behind Carl Straw and Paul Watson. This season he will remain in the backup quarterback slot, but will be the fourth player in line, behind redshirt freshman Jason Smargiasso as well as Straw and Watson.

Cobb will return to his position as the starting punter and now he's attempting to develop his kicking leg in hopes of being drafted by a team in the National Football League in that role.

Cobb punting abilities have not gone unrecognized by the press. The Sporting News has selected him as second-team All-Big Eight, and Football Action '90 picked Cobb as first-team All-Big Eight.

At the Big Eight Skywriters conference, Coach Bill Snyder said Cobb has improved as a punter and believes he could be headed for greatness with his leg.

"He's got a very live leg," Snyder said. "I believe he can eventually make a dollar or two with his leg."

Cobb said he expects he will see action in both the punter and quarterback slots this season, but has put a reasonable goal on what he wants to accomplish. Last year, Cobb averaged 40.2 yards per punt.

"Hopefully, I'll just do better than last season," he said. "(An average of) 43.7 is like the longest average in about 40 years, so I'm just going to try to get a 43.7 average as one of my main goals."

On the other side of the special teams assignments is the place kicker position. Snyder said that position is still open, and there is going to be a lot of competition for the starting slot.

In the running are two incoming freshmen and a couple of returnees, Snyder said. Leading the way are freshman Tracy Piepho and senior Jason Vajner.

"Right now, we have two incoming freshmen, who have been very competitive, with two youngsters we obtained from last year, which makes it very positive," Snyder said.

A's reload for stretch drive, beat K.C., 6-5

Rally in 9th spoils Royal comeback effort

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Mike Gallego singled home the winning run with one out in the ninth inning Thursday, and the Oakland Athletics, overcoming a rare blown save by Dennis Eckersley, beat the Kansas City Royals 6-5.

Bo Jackson hit a solo home run, his 22nd, in the eighth off Eckersley that tied it at 5. Eckersley (3-2) got the victory despite his second blown save in 41 chances.

Willie Randolph singled for his fourth hit of the game with one out in the ninth against Steve Crawford (5-3). Randolph stole second and scored easily on Gallego's single.

Jim Eisenreich's two-run homer in the seventh off Dave Stewart pulled Kansas City within 5-4. Jackson homered into the second deck in left field, giving him six home runs and 15 RBIs in five games.

Jackson also saved a run in the bottom of the seventh with a brilliant play when he threw out Terry Steinbach trying to score from third on a single by Randolph. Jackson bluffed Steinbach into thinking he would catch Randolph's line drive, then threw a strike to catcher Bob Boone.

Steve Crawford, the Royals' third pitcher, got out of an eighth-inning jam by striking out Jose Canseco with runners on second and third and getting Mark McGwire to fly out with the bases loaded.

Rickey Henderson, who had three hits, including his 45th career home run leading off a game, snapped a 2-all tie in the sixth with a bases-loaded single on a 3-2 pitch from Steve Farr. Carney Lansford followed with an RBI single that gave Oakland a 5-2 lead.

Oakland scored twice in the first inning off Andy McGaffigan. Henderson hit McGaffigan's first pitch of the game over the left-field fence for his 23rd homer of the season and, McGwire drove in an unearned run with a two-out single.

The Royals tied it at 2 in the fourth on Danny Tartabull's third home run in three games and Kurt Stillwell's sacrifice fly.

Baines, McGee come to Oakland in trades

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — It doesn't seem fair.

The Oakland Athletics already had Jose Canseco, Rickey Henderson, that pitching staff, and a 6½ -game lead in the American League West. And now they have to go and add Harold Baines and Willie McGee.

"What these two moves suggest is that we feel very strongly and are focused on the rest of the 1990 season," said Sandy Alderson, Oakland's vice president in charge of baseball operations.

It's getting to look like an All Star reunion in the Oakland lockerroom. The A's can field a lineup consisting of eight former All Stars — Mark McGwire at first, Willie Randolph at second, Carney Lansford at third, Henderson, Canseco and McGee in the outfield, Terry Steinbach catching with Harold Baines as the designated hitter.

The group has a total of 33 All Star selections between them.

Walt Weiss, only the 1988 AL Rookie of the Year, would play shortstop.

The two trades enable the A's, who have been nagged by injuries for the past two months, to ensure themselves the depth they feel they will need the final month of the season.

"What do we have, a six-game lead? Maybe if we didn't make these deals we could have hung in there and won this thing," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said. "But we had a chance to make these deals. You want no regrets."

Henderson, Canseco, Lansford and Steinbach have already spent time on the disabled list this season. Henderson is still nagged by hamstrings, and Canseco's back is not 100 percent.

For the rest of this season at least, McGee will fill the void in center field, brought on by an injury to Dave Henderson last week, and Baines will step into the left-handed designated hitter's role, a spot vacant since Dave Parker signed with Milwaukee during the off-season.

Rappers will shake up Labor Day in city park

Yo! Manhattan raps!

The Manhattan City Park Pavilion will be shaking to the tremendous rhythm of hip-hop from 3 to 5:30 p.m. Monday — making it the Collegian pick for the upcoming Labor Day weekend.

The free rap concert, titled "M.C.s of the Future," will serve as a showcase for local rappers, singers and dancers. Manhattan residents Jr. Suggs and disc jockey Bob Mathes created the forum with other area rappers to provide some Labor Day excitement.

"We decided that since we didn't have anything else to do on Labor Day," Suggs said, "we'd try to get together and showcase our talents."

The concert will provide a unique break from the routine Manhattan entertainment scene of movies and video rentals.

"It's something they can go to and see live, because I don't think you'll see M.C. Hammer here," he said.

While "M.C.s of the Future" will provide a unique opportunity for music fans to check out the homegrown talent, it will also be an opportunity for local rhyme stylers to hone their skills.

"This is our first time in front of the public," Suggs said.

The program includes appearances by area rappers "Mellow Melvin" Guye, "M.C. High Life," "M.C. Eclipse," "Willie B" and "Ronald K."

Two dance groups from Manhattan High School, Finesse & Effect and Slo-Flo, will perform routines. Grade school-aged dancers MCMC will also make an appearance.

The concert should feature a broad spectrum of rap styles — with one exception. Parents won't have to worry about a Manhattan version of "2 Live Crew."

"We're going to stay away from explicit lyrics," Suggs said. "It's almost going to be like street rap,

Higgins chosen to replace Milliken as statistics department head

By The Collegian Staff

James Higgins has replaced George Milliken as head of the Department of Statistics.

Milliken, who has headed the department for five years, said he elected to step down to work more with students and to devote more time to research.

"I haven't been able to work with graduate students as much as I'd like to. Hopefully now I'll be able to," he said.

Milliken said he will continue to teach in the Department of Statistics and also plans to continue working on a textbook.

Higgins, who has been at K-State for 10 years, said he has many new ideas for the statistics department.

"I like the direction the department is going. We're going to bring in prominent people from other universities to give seminars and programs," he said. "We would also like to offer courses at the regents center in Kansas City."

Shie-Shien Yang, professor of statistics, said the department is confident about Higgins' new position.

"I believe it was close to a unanimous decision. He is very academic and gets along well with everyone in the department," Yang said. "He is a good administrator and very organized."

Higgins said he plans to strengthen the graduate program and enlarge the number of undergraduate students in the statistics program. He would also like to add new faculty to the department and work more with the business and engineering departments' consulting services.

"We would like to get our students more involved in consulting," he said. The statistics department offers consulting services free of charge to the entire campus and we'd like to get that message out."

Chris Rosson, sophomore in criminal justice, left, and roommate Kent Leslie, sophomore in computer science, study in the front room of their living quarters in Van Zile Hall Thursday evening. Van Zile opened this fall as a completely renovated dorm with suites each containing baths and carpet.

Van Zile

Evans said he enjoys the aspect of having an apartment on campus.

"I'm still close, and I don't have to worry about the parking mess, but I still have the privacy of my own apartment. Having them cook is an advantage for me because I don't particularly cook well for myself, and this way I don't have to do the dishes," Evans said.

Although living in Van Zile is more expensive than other residence halls, Evans said it is worth it.

For an extra $500 per semester, students can have their own room and sink, and share a bathroom with their suite-mates next door. Or for an extra $400 per semester, they can share a room twice as big with a roommate.

Residents, however, have had to endure construction which was scheduled to be completed before the semester began. The food service on the first floor, which will also serve Boyd Hall and Putnam Hall, is not completed. Laundry and storage facilities are also unfinished.

Students of the Strong Complex eat at Derby Food Center for now.

Most students said they are merely annoyed and are looking forward to the end of the construction.

"When the food service opens next week hopefully, it will be really, really nice," says Poppie.

Evans says Derby isn't that much more crowded than last year.

"I'm very glad they got my room done. That was my main concern," says Evans. "Not having the basement done is kind of annoying, but it's not a serious problem.

Poppie says, "I thought about moving out next year into an apartment, but now, there's no way. I'm staying. As far as I'm concerned, you can't find a place as nice as this, this close to campus."

He said the reorganization and program reallocations will not directly affect students enrolled in classes for the fall.

"If a student is in a program today, nothing will be done to keep them from finishing that program," Coffman said.

Coffman expressed an interest in student input from Senate and said he hopes senators will help design a way for the administration to benefit from their experiences as students.

Although there is no set plan for the reorganization yet, he said he anticipates a proposal will be ready for discussion in 90 days.

Portrait hung in Statehouse

Former state official first black honored with capital picture

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

A portrait of the first black elected to a statewide office in Kansas will be hung at a celebration at the Statehouse tentatively Oct. 10.

The portrait is of Edward P. McCabe, state auditor from 1883-87, who played a large role in the effort to bring blacks west.

Frank Ybarra, a member of the governor's staff, said Gov. Mike Hayden felt McCabe needed to be recognized as a prominent black official and a black role model for school children.

Sonny Scroggins, a black activist in Topeka, said he suggested the idea to Hayden and is helping plan the celebration.

Only one other statewide elected office in Kansas has been held by a black person since McCabe was elected. Sherman Parks Sr. served on the state Court of Appeals from January 1977 to July 1987.

"We need to see more blacks in government — period," Scroggins said. "This will provide an incentive for blacks, and especially young people, to become involved."

"I'm struggling with joy. I feel like Linda Brown in the Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case," Scroggins said.

Horace Peterson III, executive director of Black Archives of Mid-America, will speak at the event, and Ola Drake, honorary chairwoman for the Kansas Committee to Free South Africa, will be the mistress of ceremonies.

After serving as Kansas's auditor, McCabe settled in Guthrie, Okla., and served as deputy territorial auditor until statehood in 1907. During those years, he led a movement to persuade blacks to move to the area.

Homer Socolofsky, professor of history, said McCabe attempted to make Oklahoma a black state after he moved there.

Blacks have lived in Kansas since the early days of its statehood.

John Brown had a hand in bringing blacks west to Kansas. They saw

He said the reorganization and program reallocations will not directly affect students enrolled in classes for the fall.

"If a student is in a program today, nothing will be done to keep them from finishing that program," Coffman said.

Coffman expressed an interest in student input from Senate and said he hopes senators will help design a way for the administration to benefit from their experiences as students.

Although there is no set plan for the reorganization yet, he said he anticipates a proposal will be ready for discussion in 90 days.

Portrait hung in Statehouse

Former state official first black honored with capital picture

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

A portrait of the first black elected to a statewide office in Kansas will be hung at a celebration at the Statehouse tentatively Oct. 10.

The portrait is of Edward P. McCabe, state auditor from 1883-87, who played a large role in the effort to bring blacks west.

Frank Ybarra, a member of the governor's staff, said Gov. Mike Hayden felt McCabe needed to be recognized as a prominent black official and a black role model for school children.

Sonny Scroggins, a black activist in Topeka, said he suggested the idea to Hayden and is helping plan the celebration.

Only one other statewide elected office in Kansas has been held by a black person since McCabe was elected. Sherman Parks Sr. served on the state Court of Appeals from January 1977 to July 1987.

"We need to see more blacks in government — period," Scroggins said. "This will provide an incentive for blacks, and especially young people, to become involved."

"I'm struggling with joy. I feel like Linda Brown in the Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case," Scroggins said.

Horace Peterson III, executive director of Black Archives of Mid-America, will speak at the event, and Ola Drake, honorary chairwoman for the Kansas Committee to Free South Africa, will be the mistress of ceremonies.

After serving as Kansas's auditor, McCabe settled in Guthrie, Okla., and served as deputy territorial auditor until statehood in 1907. During those years, he led a movement to persuade blacks to move to the area.

Homer Socolofsky, professor of history, said McCabe attempted to make Oklahoma a black state after he moved there.

Blacks have lived in Kansas since the early days of its statehood.

John Brown had a hand in bringing blacks west to Kansas. They saw to a neighbor's house to call the fire department because she was afraid the emergency operator had not understood her.

"When we came back, the fire department was already here. The whole top half was on fire," Patricia Keener said.

A Riley County Police officer, who asked not to be identified, said when he arrived at the scene of the fire on Walnut Creek Road about two miles east of Leonardville, the entire second story was on fire.

Firefighter Bruce Zimmer with the Randolph station of the Riley County Rural Fire Department said when he arrived at about 6:30 p.m. almost the entire structure was engulfed.

"The only thing that wasn't totally engulfed was the southeast corner," Zimmer said. "By the time we got the truck set up, there wasn't nothing we could do."

Pointing to blackened areas of grass in the front yard, Zimmer said, "Just the heat of the fire did that. No flame. Just the heat."

Firefighters were cleared from the area shortly after their arrival when the safety valve on a propane gas tank popped.

Bill Neilson, manager of the Five Way Hog Co., Inc., said the company has owned the house and farm it is located on since 1969.

Patricia Keener said she has leased the house for three and a half years. Both Patricia Keener and Neilson said there were no apparent electrical problems in the house.

Fire department officials at the scene said they could not speculate about the cause of the fire.

Thursday evening, as she talked to friends about 300 yards from smoldering ruins of her home, Patricia Keener said she would stay with relatives in Leonardville for the night and go to work today.

"I probably just about have to (go to work)," she said. "I have to hand out paychecks tomorrow, and I need mine."

Yeltsin ready to receive control

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin, president of the Russian republic, seized the initiative for radical reform Monday with a plan that would give the republics control of their economies and drastically reduce the power of the national government.

According to a copy of the 250-page plan obtained by the Associated Press, most decisions regarding the economy would be made by the 15 sovereign republics.

If approved by the Russian republic's legislature, the proposal would dramatically constrict the power of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Yeltsin's rival. Gorbachev's national government would control only a fraction of the planned transition from communism to a market economy.

Russia, the largest of the republics, would legalize private ownership of land and give away huge numbers of state-owned apartments and residential lots to try to solve critical shortages of food and housing.

In the long run, the Soviet government would be limited to such matters as defense, strengthening the nearly worthless ruble and providing disaster relief. It would lose the power to tax and would have to rely on dues from the republics.

Since Russia contains half of the Soviet Union's people and three-quarters of its land mass, the national legislature would be unable to ignore a decision by Russia to embark on a more radical reform than favored by Gorbachev.

Many Soviet citizens consider the country an empire well on its way to disintegration. Thirteen of the 15 republics have declared themselves independent or "sovereign," with the right to veto national laws.

Gorbachev is discussing a new union treaty that would loosen the bonds of the Soviet Union into a confederation of sovereign states, but he has not offered a specific proposal for public discussion.

Gorbachev and Yeltsin have clashed repeatedly over Yeltsin's demands for faster reform and control of the Russian republic's plentiful resources. Recently, however, they have been trying to find common ground.

"The people are ready for change," Yeltsin told Russian legislators Monday, shortly before sending them home to read the two-inch thick proposal, accompanied by an equally weighty package of draft legislation to implement the reform. "Poverty and misery are widespread," he said.

The Soviet economy is plagued with severe shortages of nearly everything, from gas to paper and cigarettes. In the last several days, the problem has affected the supply of bread, the usually plentiful staple for Soviets.

Yeltsin set an ambitious schedule calling for five days of debate in the Russian legislature and a vote on the fundamental reform Sept. 11. That agenda would leave the national legislature in the dust because it does not open its session until Sept. 10.

"Russia gives the impulse for change to the entire country," Yeltsin told his legislature. "The center can no longer ignore this, and discard everything done by us."

Computing snag slows enrollment

By The Collegian Staff

A software problem in the University's computing system shut down the final regular day of the enrolling process for three hours on Friday.

"It locked out the enrollment transactions, so students could not enroll," said Don Foster, University Registrar.

But students who were turned away shouldn't worry, Foster said.

"We will allow students who were not able to pay or add a class an opportunity to do so without a penalty," he said.

John Streeter, associate director of University Computing Activities, said a technical problem with a printing command caused the shutdown of the system from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m.

He said the enrollment and scheduling staff was sending information to a printer that is not linked to the system. In turn, that information caused a bottleneck of data while waiting to print, he said.

"Fortunately, it happened on a down day that didn't have as much traffic as earlier in the week," Foster said. "It wasn't as devastating as it could have been."

The shutdown caused the rescheduling of three deadlines, Foster said.

The first deadline change moves the last day a student may add a class without the teacher's permission from Friday to today.

Also changed was the deadline that staff, faculty or teachers have to enroll without being charged a late fee. The limit moved from this morning to Wednesday morning.

The final rescheduling move changes the Friday-night deadline of canceling the classes of unregistered students to tonight.

Foster said students who are still waiting on grants or student loans that have a deferrment need not worry about the deadlines.

Student dies in accident north of Manhattan; another critically injured in head-on car wreck

By Scott Levendofsky
Collegian Reporter

A double-fatality accident at midnight on Sept. 2 left a K-State student dead and another in critical condition.

Shannon Benyshek, 21-year-old junior from Belleville, died instantly when the southbound vehicle he was riding in was struck head-on by a vehicle driven by Billie Holmes, 47, of rural Manhattan. Bruce Fate, a 21-year-old junior in business administration of Concordia, was driving the vehicle Benyshek was in.

Holmes was killed instantly when his 1984 Oldsmobile drifted across the center line and struck Fate's 1985 Oldsmobile. The accident occurred five miles north of Manhattan on U.S. Highway 24.

Both vehicles were totaled, said Ray Curtis, communications operator for the Kansas Highway Patrol in Salina.

Benyshek was beginning his junior year at K-State after graduating with an associate of arts degree from a two-year program at Hutchinson Community College.

He was a 1988 graduate of Belleville High School where he played varsity football and track. His hobbies included hunting, fishing and golf. He was active in Future Farmers of America and won a state award in forestry management, said Calvin Benyshek, Shannon's father.

Fate also was a 1988 graduate of Belleville High School. He remains in an intensive care unit at St. Francis Hospital in Topeka with multiple fractures and trauma injuries, said a nursing supervisor at St. Francis. He is listed in critical condition.

Statewide, three people died in traffic accidents on Kansas roads this Labor Day weekend. Nine deaths were recorded during the holiday last year, the state Highway Patrol said.

The record number of deaths for the three-day weekend in Kansas was 16, set in 1967 and tied in 1976, according to state Department of Transportation records.

House repairs expensive

Local police agencies continue ongoing fire investigations

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

The recent renovation of a house that burned down last week may be far more costly than the new owner planned.

Julie Icham, clerk in the Riley County Public Works Department, said damage has been placed at $60,000 for an A-frame destroyed by fire Wednesday. The residence was owned by Marcia Dunham of Hot Springs, S.D., and was occupied by her daughter Lisa Dunham, freshman in interior design.

Riley County Rural Fire Chief Del Petty said the fire started from the spontaneous combustion of paint thinner, paint stripper, varnish and rags used to refurbish the house.

"Given the time frame, that is the only thing it could have been," he said. "We have narrowed the time the occupants left the house to the time smoke was observed to 20 to 30 minutes."

Petty said the time period was too short for an electrical or other smoldering fire to have reached the stage first observed.

He said the materials being used in the house should have been used in well-ventilated areas. The occupants reported they had the air conditioning on and the house closed up, he said.

Petty said high temperatures are not a condition to start a combustion fire.

American in Baghdad escapes after donning Filipino disguise

By The Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Dick Clay, a burly German-Irish Hoosier with mustache and beer belly, doesn't look much like a Filipino. But he made a daring escape from Kuwait disguised as one, using fake Philippine documents forged by a loyal friend.

Clay, 46, managed to slip across the Iraqi-Jordanian frontier last week with 34 Filipino employees by pretending he was one of them. His week-long flight took all the ingenuity of World War II prisoners' flight from Stalag 17.

He had to hide for three days in the Iraqi capital — swarming with Saddam Hussein's secret police and their army of informers — and tough out a heart-stopping encounter with Iraqi border guards.

His one-page travel document was a masterpiece of fakery. A Filipino instrument technician spent 10 laborious days duplicating the Philippines Embassy seal and a creating a long inscription in tiny English characters.

The stamp was fashioned from a rubber shower sandal; the black ink was made royal purple by diluting it with milk.

On paper, the American construction manager Richard Eugene Clay became Ricardo Erazo. His hometown of Bloomington, Ind., where his wife Claudia and three children were waiting, became Batangas City in the Philippines.

"I was hiding in Kuwait until the Iraqis said they'd hang anyone who helped shelter foreigners," Clay said in an interview. "Then I figured it was time to go."

That was Aug. 20, almost three weeks after Iraq overran Kuwait. By then, he was ready.

Even with his false papers prepared, Clay's appearance posed problems.

Filipinos tend to be small and slender, dark-eyed and dark-haired. But Clay's face is a great red expanse of rugged terrain, with a prominent sunburned nose and distinctly European eyes. And he has a large U.S. Navy tattoo on his right hand.

He pulled a baseball cap down low over his brown hair, wore large sunglasses and disappeared into a roomy long-sleeved shirt.

In Kuwait, Clay had supervised 500 Filipino and Indian workers at R.W. Kellogg, a U.S. contractor that maintained two oil refineries in the emirate. He accounted for all but four and then prepared to escape himself.

Food and water were gathered and stashed away. Exit documents were sought. A route was planned.

"When everything else was ready, I told them to go out and steal two buses," Clay said. By then, the Filipinos were desperate to leave the gulf state where some had worked for a decade.

"I know of one case where 12 Iraqi soldiers raped a Filipino lady," Clay said. "They killed her brother when he tried to help her. That's a fact. She was still in the hospital when I left."

Clay left behind $85,000 in the bank and an apartment full of belongings which he doesn't expect to see again.

Prices actually lower

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

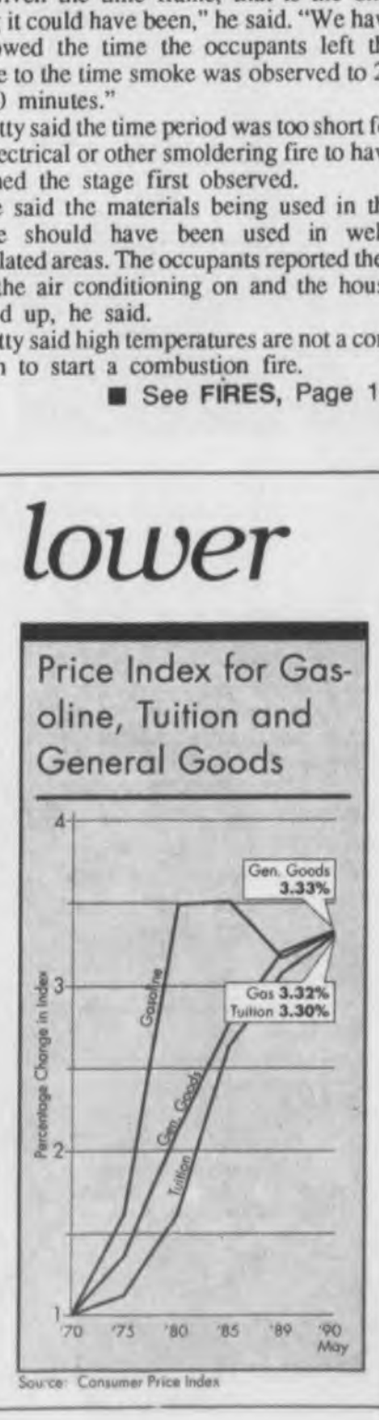
Although Manhattan has seen a substantial increase in the price of gas this summer due to the crisis in the Middle East, it is still slightly lower than the price of other goods, said James Ragan, head of the Department of Economics.

The price of general goods, gas and tuition are now all about equal in terms of an overall average price index, he said.

According to the Consumer Price Index, which measures the average change in prices over time of basic consumer goods and services, the price of general goods is 3.33 times as much as it was in 1970. The price of gas is 3.32 times higher than in 1970.

"The average person has a short memory and forgets that the price of gas was higher 10 years ago and is just making the comparison to what it was one or two years ago," Ragan said.

"Clearly the price of gas is much higher than what it was recently, but if you go back far enough and compare prices on the index, the price of gas has not really increased in terms of real dollars," he said. "People are actually spending a smaller portion of their budget on gas than what they were in the past."



According to the CPI, the largest increase in gas prices took place between 1973 and 1980. Since then, gas prices have not dramatically increased, whereas tuition and prices in general tend to increase steadily each year.

Gas prices were at their highest in 1981 and are actually lower today, Ragan said.

Ragan said he thinks the current price hikes on gas will lead to a greater use and exploration of substitute fuels.

"If the situation in the Middle East is not resolved, there will be an increased use of natural gas, coal, nuclear power and other alternative sources, both in terms of production and of transportation,"

Koreas hope to end hostilities

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — North Korean Prime Minister Yon Hyong Muk and 90 of his countrymen crossed the heavily armed Korean border into South Korea on Tuesday for a historic visit aimed at easing four decades of hostilities.

Yon and the six official North Korean delegates to the premiers' talks were welcomed by their South Korean counterparts at the truce village of Panmunjom inside the Demilitarized Zone separating the rival Koreas.

"A Korean proverb says a thousand miles start with a first step," said South Korean Unification Minister Hong Sung-chul, who was among those to greet the visitors.

The North Koreans were given bouquets of flowers, a traditional Korean gift of friendship, and tea, before being escorted to South Korean-made sedans for a 35-mile trip south to Seoul.

A military helicopter hovered overhead as the motorcade of 12 cars and three buses prepared to move south toward Seoul.

The group is the first to cross the border since 1985 and only the third delegation to travel to the South since the end of World War II in 1945.

South Korean Prime Minister Kang Young-hoon was to meet the North Koreans at a luxury hotel near Olympic Park, official headquarters for the talks.

Japan asked to lift sanctions

TOKYO — The government asked the country's private industry Monday to help support the multinational force in the Persian Gulf by providing jeeps, car-carrying ships and other products and services.

Also, the Kyodo News Service reported from Baghdad that Iraq was urging Japan to partly lift sanctions in return for the release of Japanese men being held at strategic installations in Iraq.

The Kyodo report said Iraq's cultural and information minister, Latif Nasif Al-Jasim, declared in an interview that Iraq would release the Japanese hostages if Japan resumed buying Iraqi oil and allowed Iraq to buy food and medicine.

International Trade and Industry Minister Kabun Muto sought cooperation in a meeting with leaders of six major industries — automobiles, steel, electronics, construction, machinery and plastic — said a ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Tension easing in Gainesville

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Campus life was returning to normal Monday for many college students frightened by a string of mutilation murders, but police warned that the killer could still be on the loose.

Students returning to the University of Florida for the second week of classes said they were less worried than they were last week by the deaths of five students who were found slain in their apartments.

"All you can do is be very careful. I'm usually in my room before dark," said Ava, a sophomore from Fort Lauderdale who refused to give her last name.

"Everyone I know is calming down," said Aaron Sotala, 20, a sophomore from Copper Harbor, Mich. "It has been almost a week, but there is still tension on the campus."

Police said they have eight suspects, but warned residents against dropping their guard.

"Students should know that the killer has not been apprehended — the killer is not in custody — and assume that person or persons is still in the area," Lt. Sadie Darnell, a police spokeswoman, said Monday.

Pigeon shooters attacked

HEGINS, Pa. (AP) — Three state troopers were injured and 25 people were arrested during an annual live pigeon shoot Monday after protesters rushed onto a field and tried to free the caged birds.

Several fistfights broke out, a skunk was thrown at demonstrators and one protester kicked out the windshield of a car before state police stopped the protest at the 57th Fred Coleman Memorial Shoot in Hegins.

Participants pay to shoot birds released from cages, and the proceeds are used to maintain a park in this small east-central Pennsylvania town.

Fourteen people with fake blood dripping from their mouths ran onto the field at different times to free the animals. Spectators chanted "shoot" as state police tried to handcuff the demonstrators.

About 150 people from Pennsylvania, California, Maryland, Kansas, Illinois, New Jersey, West Virginia, Virginia, Texas and Florida picketed the Labor Day event, billed as the largest live pigeon shoot in the world.

Competitors using shotguns stood about 20 yards from the birds, which were released one at a time from metal cages. After a group of birds was shot, a group of trapper boys ran onto the field to retrieve them.

The children would wring the birds' necks or pull their heads off if they were fluttering on the ground wounded. Dead birds were put in a barrel to be used in fertilizer, shooters said.

An estimated 4,800 birds were killed Monday, organizers said.

Columbia still awaiting liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA's third countdown for the space shuttle Columbia and its astronomy mission proceeded uninterrupted Monday as its astronauts waited patiently a planned Thursday liftoff.

"We want the shuttle Columbia and the science payload to be right when we launch," said Vance Brand, commander of the seven-man crew. "We are enthusiastic about the mission and ready to fly it."

Liftoff is scheduled for 1:20 a.m. EDT Thursday. The countdown clock started ticking early Monday.

The first countdown for Columbia's flight with the $150 million Astro observatory was halted in May by leaking hydrogen fuel for its main rocket engines.

Last week, communications problems with Astro's X-ray telescope prompted NASA to call off a launch that had been scheduled for Saturday.

Home-built plane crashes

BELLEVILLE — A home-built airplane flipped, crashed and burned as it taxied down the runway at the Belleville Municipal Airport, killing a Mankato dentist and his 10-year-old son, officials said.

Steve Coil, 39, and his son, Brendon, died in the Sunday evening crash.

Coil and his son apparently were testing an airplane Coil had rebuilt, said his mother-in-law, Joyce Larson of Scandia. Coil had been working on the plane at the airport for about a year, she said.

Brendon, a fifth-grader, often helped his father tinker with his aircraft and had spent Sunday afternoon at the airport working on the plane, Larson said.

"Brendon was very interested in working on airplanes," she said.

Officials from the National Transportation Safety Board and Federal Aviation Administration were investigating the accident, said Sandra Campbell, an FAA spokeswoman in Kansas City.

K-State Players to open season

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

The K-State Players will open the 1990-91 season at 8 p.m. Thursday in Nichols Theatre with the production of "The Voice of the Prairie." The Players will perform additional shows on Friday and Saturday.

The John Olive comedy-drama was performed during the summer. The Players have many reasons for presenting it besides its having the best attendance of the three summer productions.

"One of the reasons we decided to do this production was because it had the smallest cast, and we could free up others to work on the new productions," said Director Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech.

The cast is the same as summer, featuring Kevin Kelly, sophomore in theatre; Ayne Steinkuhler, junior in theatre and James Smith, senior in theatre.

Steinkuhler and Smith performed in last year's "Medea," and Kelly played Teen Angel last season in "Grease."

In "Voice of the Prairie," Kelly plays David Quinn, a man searching for a blind girl named Frankie who he met when he was young. David meets Frankie after the death of his father. Frankie, played by Steinkuhler, has just experienced the death of her mother. David helps Frankie run away from her father, but the two conspirators are separated.

The story takes place in rural Nebraska and Kansas City between 1895 and 1923. According to Shelton, the play is well-suited for a Kansas audience.

"There's just something about it that appeals to the people in this part of the country. It is set in this area, and the characters have a sensibility about them much in the way of the people around here," he said. "The play has a nice quality of making you feel good about the people in the play and about yourself."

Shelton said the script even refers to local history, mentioning "Doc Brinkley," a colorful man from Milford who used to implant goat glands in impotent men. Brinkley ran for governor in the 1920s.

The play challenges the actors because each plays at least two roles, Shelton said.

"It's all a matter of concentration," he said.

"James has to use a couple of different accents, playing a man from New York and a man from the South, so it requires a lot of concentration on his part."

Shelton said the structure of the play is appealing.

"It's very theatrical — it doesn't try to be realistic at all," he said.

Forensic team faces fall with high goals

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

The fall season for the forensic team is one of high expectations.

The end of last season found the team, in combination with the K-State debators, ranked second in the nation. This season 27 of the 35-member squad are returning — only two of them seniors.

Craig Brown, forensics coach, believes he has reason to have high expectations and to set high goals for the team.

"Competitively, we should be just as good as we were last year, if not better," Brown said.

The coaches spend time planning strategies for the upcoming season. Brown said at the beginning of the season they try to anticipate who will be returning to the team. This enables them to know where the team's strengths are and where they need to pick up from there.

"Our goal for the first semester is to get a lot of people qualified for nationals, and then go to some much tougher tournaments during second semester," he said. "So by the time nationals roll around we'll have a lot of people going and they'll be in shape to compete well."

He said his ultimate goal is to have 18 team members qualify for nationals which will be in Tacoma, Wash. this year.

Talk of goals for the season is also abundant among team members. Laura Pelletier, senior in speech and political science, serves as president for the team.

"I'm really excited because we have so many returning people and some good freshmen, too," she said.

Not only has Pelletier set personal goals for herself but would also like to see the team win a Sweepstakes Trophy, which is awarded to the top 20 teams at nationals.

Brown said he believes earning this trophy is a definite possibility. K-State forensics has built a reputation among strong programs.

"We've always been at least a regional power, even in the down years," he said. "This means a lot especially when you don't think of K-State as 'the' liberal arts college in the state."

This solid program hasn't been built on extensive recruiting efforts, he said, because the budget doesn't allow it. Forensic team members generally get involved on their own initiative.

"In Kansas, high school forensics is very popular. So people who have done it in high school, and then come to K-State, pretty much seek us out," Pelletier said.

Brown said team members who have been most successful are those who weren't outstanding in high school and came to college willing to improve.

"We are proud because we've had a strong, active squad due to the fact that people want to do the activity," he said.

Brown said he sees the forensics team as the "academic equivalent" to university athletic teams.

"How often do you get an opportunity to test yourself against the best and know where you stand? That's what forensics does," he said.

Professor's remark evokes women's fears

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I have a professor who is a wonderful man and no doubt dedicated to the advancement of minorities and oppressed peoples everywhere, but last week he said something that really made me think. In the context of a discussion about women in Islamic countries, he made a quick joke about how the men in our class should decide whether or not our society has made a mistake in changing the role of women. He was joking, and I knew that, but I was still offended. After a few minutes I realized why.

This same man had spoken at length about the ACLU and racism and had gotten extremely heated while telling us about the exclusion of blacks from membership in several country clubs on the PGA circuit. He was truly angry about it. Would he, I wondered, make a joke about whether or not America should have freed black slaves? I don't think so.

Doesn't it amount to the same thing? There are different kinds of slavery. Women in America used to be forbidden to own property, to vote, to attend institutions of higher learning, and were obliged to obey their husbands or fathers in all things. Their selling price was called a dowry. The working conditions were usually better than those of the slaves, and obviously the situation is different, but isn't oppression oppression no matter what it's disguised as? Why does it seem less offensive to my professor and to many others, including, for example, Andrew Dice Clay, to joke about sending women back into the dark ages than it would to suggest reinstating slavery for people of color?

Women in most Islamic countries face an even bleaker situation that American women ever did. A woman in Saudi Arabia who puts on western clothes, leaves her home and goes and spends the night with a man (in the biblical sense) can be legally executed. Women traditionally do not leave their homes without veils, they marry into arranged marriages and they tend to spend their lives in the home sphere. Even women who are educated in western countries often return home to be married as their families desire. What seems unendurable to an American woman is customary in many countries.

Women in Japan are also not as liberated as their western counterparts. Not only are they second to men in the home, but they also take a backseat in the workplace. They may work as young women and again when their children are grown, but in between their lives belong to their families. Japanese women in executive positions are extremely rare.

Women in the Soviet Union, though they may work in equal positions, have no real recourse if their husband is unfaithful. They must accept it and go on. Divorce is not really an accepted alternative in the U.S.S.R. There is usually nowhere for a divorced woman to go except back to her family — who may already be living five to a room and probably won't be glad to see her. On the other hand, if a woman is unfaithful, you can probably guess who gets thrown out of the apartment. Life, as my mother always told me (and being a woman, she should know) is not fair.

Women all over the world receive less pay for equal work. Professions that are traditionally predominantly female, like teaching and nursing, are also traditionally positions with little respect and even less pay. Women in blue-collar jobs are still fighting to gain salaries equal to those of men in the same jobs. Even now, companies in the United States are barring women from jobs that could endanger a woman's fertility or unborn children, regardless of whether or not the woman plans to have a family, while ignoring the fact that often, these jobs endanger men's fertility as well.

I don't know how to feel. I think I'm outraged. Replace the words woman or women in any of the previous sentences with blacks, Jews, or Indians, and see if you're outraged. I think you will be. It's hard not to be.

So what should I do? What should we do? Sit around and talk about how outraged we are? Frankly, I don't know. But I can't help but ask myself why there aren't more people sitting around being outraged. Why doesn't the idea of women in the position that they are in many Islamic countries make people as angry as the idea of blacks being discriminated against in South Africa? Because it's a cultural thing, an accepted part of a religion? Even up until the 1950s, men in power in southern states such as Louisiana were quoting the Bible to justify white supremacy. No matter how you justify oppression, it is still wrong. I wish I could put that in capitals. WRONG.

I'm not suggesting that while we're at it in the Middle East, we should force them to give their women equal status. What I am suggesting is that we stop worrying about the behavior of women in our Middle Eastern forces. If Saudi Arabian men are worried that their wives and daughters will see what women can do and get ideas, tough. The only way to get real freedom from slavery is to earn it, and I for one would love to see Islamic women start now.

I do have a suggestion for what we can do in our own country. All of us, and most especially women, have got to continue to be outraged whenever we hear any kind of sexist remark, no matter how harmless it seems. We have got to object to everything that might take us a step backward. Listening quietly and even smiling a little is a leftover from when women were taught to be submissive. There is no reason for it and there is no excuse for it. We may have "come a long way" (great, we can get lung cancer in public now) but we haven't come far enough. All members of all formerly oppressed peoples and minorities have got to work together and be equally protective of each other. Together we constitute a majority.

Getting back to my professor, whom I know meant no harm by his comment, I don't know how to convince him and others like him that he could do harm. Every remark like his is a step backwards for us, another piece of ammunition for the mind of anyone who thinks women are inferior. Ridiculous though it may sound, sexist jokes can encourage crimes against women such as rape and battery. But my professor, empathetic though he may try to be, is a man and a white man at that, and there are moments when I don't think that any man will ever fully understand.

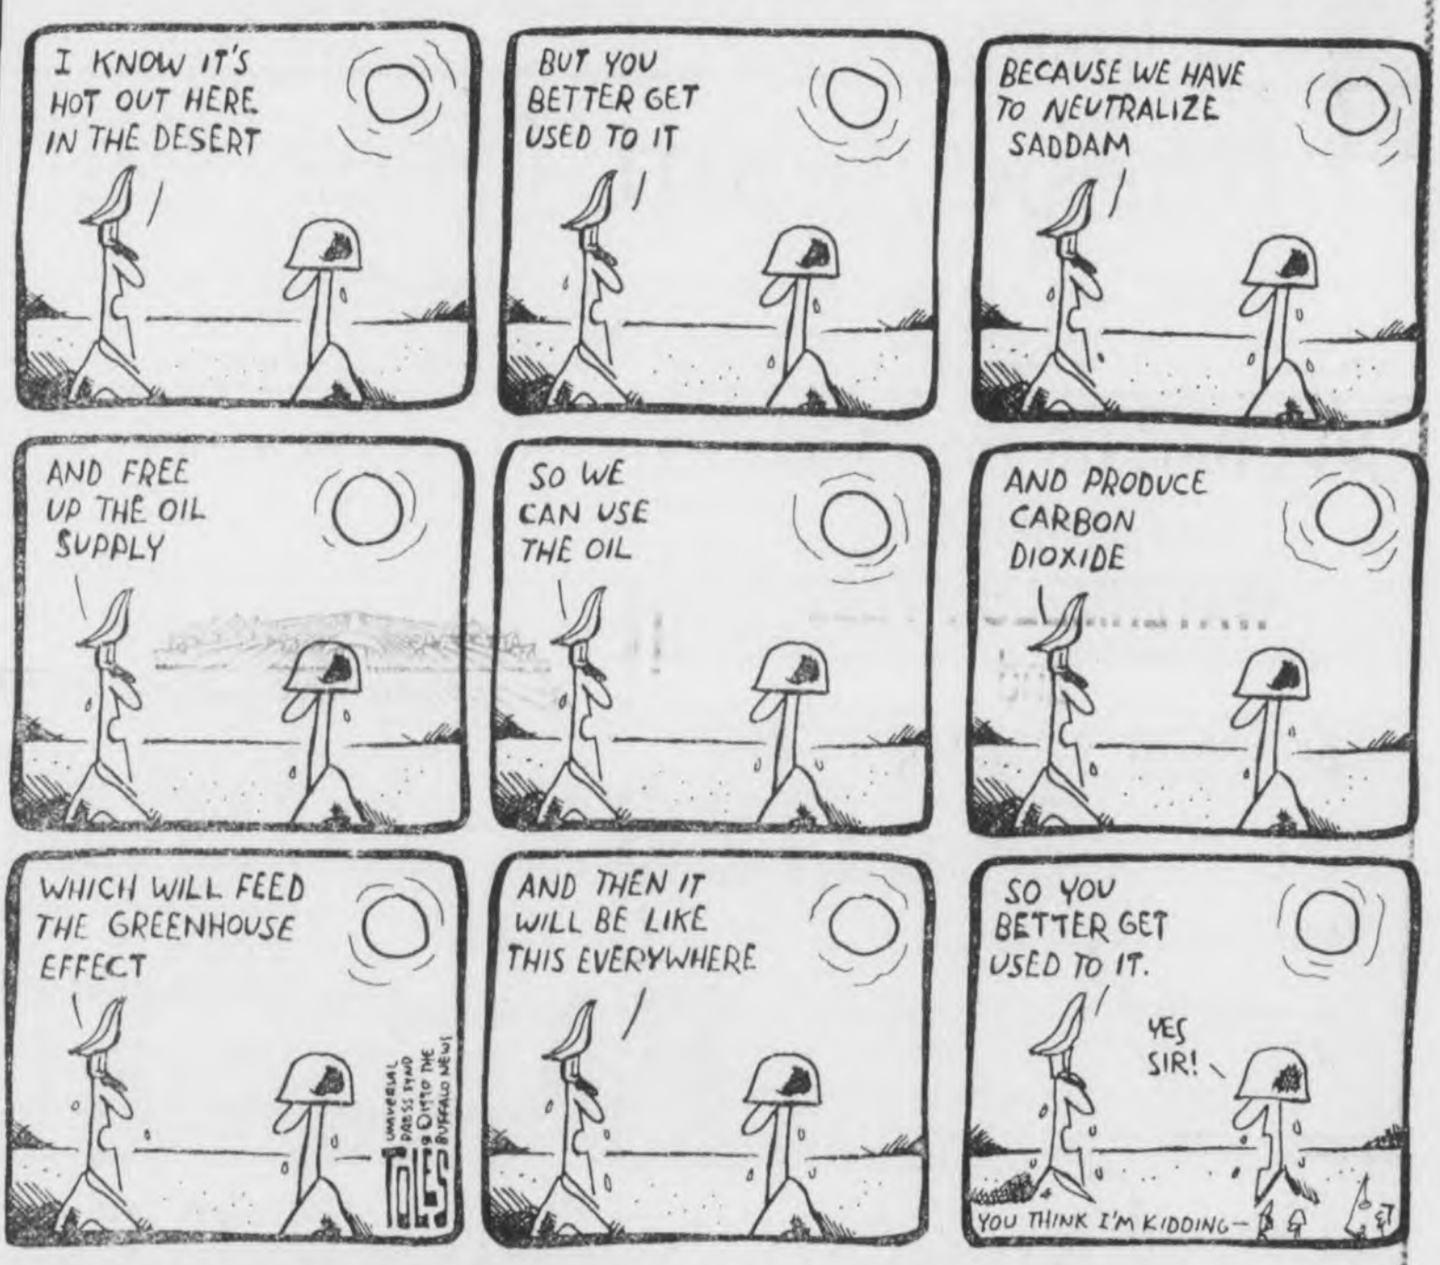
Cyclists should also obey bike-path rules

University officials decided last week to restrict skateboarders to bike paths on campus. It's a good plan because so few cyclists use the paths.

The policy was set to curtail skateboard damage to buildings and benches, but more attention should be paid to the risk of pedestrian injury from cyclists.

The administration and K-State Police maintain that the University is a walking campus — that vehicle owners should park their cars and not complain about the walk to the heart of the campus. Cyclists should abide by the same philosophy.



Leave bikes in the K-State Union racks or Durland Hall's or wherever it is most convenient. Riding a bike to campus saves gas money and time spent looking for a parking place, but can become a headache for walkers when rules are ignored.

Many cyclists continue to plow their way through crowded sidewalks in an effort to reach their destination two or three minutes sooner than if they had walked. Meanwhile, dozens of students are left to collect themselves in the wake of cyclists' mad dashes through large groups of people.

Following the rash of cyclist/pedestrian accidents last year, policies should be made and enforced to protect the student majority. Pedestrians and cyclists just don't mix.

Bike paths are on campus for a reason, and it is unfortunate that few cyclists stick to those paths. Perhaps when the campus police begin patroling the grounds — as promised — to shoo away errant skateboarders, they will decide to do something about other campus safety concerns.

While doing so, the police better watch their backsides, or they're liable to land on them trying to dodge cyclists.

LETTERS

Hurt supported

Editor,

I feel that someone must attempt to correct any misconception created by the recent letter to the editor from Kent Hampton that cast, in my opinion, a false shadow over the majority of people in the Department of Entomology and maligned the opinion expressed by our honorable and trusted (woman) Representative in the Kansas House of Representatives, Katha Hurt.

Entomologists and other scientists (for the most part) can divorce themselves from the bigoted and naive sentiments expressed by Hampton and his outdated belief that over half of the human species (women) should be enslaved, dehumanized and forced to be subservient baby-making machines rather than asssume their rightful place which is, at the least, equal to that of males. They are certainly capable of controlling their bodies and making decisions concerning childbirth.

Hampton's pro-life group periodically (and appropriately, under the cover of darkness) trashes our neighborhoods with literature in the belief that we are going to be protected from overpopulation and the abuse and starvation of unwanted children by some invisible force. This has never happened during the history of humankind and will not happen in the future; we can only hope to protect the rights of all living humans, including a woman's right to decide whether or not she gives birth to a child. I am convinced that the naive misconceptions of well-meaning persons such as Hampton are responsible for more human suffering and starvation than all other forces combined. Let's prove that the majority of our society wants to eliminate bigotry and support pro-choice.

Bicycles needed

Editor,

This letter is about the parking problem at K-State discussed in an Aug. 29 Collegian editorial.

The only real solution must involve a substantial reduction in the number of cars on campus and used to travel to campus. Not allowing individuals who live nearby to use their cars or encouraging car-pooling will only provide relatively short-term solutions.

Why not give a free bicycle to anybody who is willing to forego their entitlement to a parking place? Who could resist such a bargain? No doubt a sudden increase of bicycles on campus would congest the main routes, making travel by car even less appealing. This would provide a bigger incentive for dispensing with motor vehicles and parking spaces. Just think of the benefits, not only to the environment, but also to the cholesterol levels and overall fitness of all those cyclists.

And where would the money come from to fund all of this? From the new parking lots, tively near future. How could you tell such a radical idea to the committees which will be making planning decisions? Well, all the bicycles could be painted purple.

P.D. Hooker
research assistant in chemistry

Allegations false

Editor,

The allegations that Manhattan gas prices rise when the K-State students return is simply not true. Our records show that this year's price increase, at enrollment time, is the first in five years. They also show we typically have decreased the price at the beginning of the second semester. The records further indicate that the first price change after the end of the school year generally has been an increase.

Gas retailers do not sell gas only, and they want to sell their other merchandise to students.

I sincerely thank Richard Baker of KKSU for his knowledgeable challenge of Robert Stephen during a "Gas Price Gouging" interview.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submitting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

Suits take toll in hot climates

By Scott Berg
Science Reporter

Imagine being in an oven and only seeing outside through a small window in the door.

Some U.S. soldiers are experiencing this when wearing the chemical protection suits issued as a defense against chemical warfare.

Sgt. Bruce Marvin, instructor of military science, said the suits are cumbersome. Soldiers are trained, however, to compensate for the restricted ability and the tunnel vision the mask tends to create.

"The heat takes it out of you fast," said Greg Werkowitch, sophomore in German. "I feel there's a trade-off between protection from the chemicals and the heat."

Soldiers ordered to Saudi Arabia are issued the suit. The two-piece outfit, jacket and trousers, consists of an outer and inner shell. The outer shell is 50 percent cotton and 50 percent nylon treated with Qapil, a water and oil repellent.

They are waterproofed and don't breathe, Werkowitch said.

Charcoal-impregnated polyurethane foam makes up the inner shell and is held by a knit fabric called nylon tricot. Covering the head, hands and feet is the M-17 gas mask, butyl rubber gloves and overboots.

"The suits are very hot," Werkowitch said. "I was running through the woods last February. When I stopped, I poured water (sweat) out of the gloves. It's like trying to breathe through one nostril while in a rubber suit."

U.S. Air Force personnel wear a similar outfit consisting of cotton coveralls under an activated charcoal-impregnated garment with a standard flame-resistant nomex flight suit over it. A respirator and hood replaces the army gas mask. Three layers of gloves protect the hands.

Col. John McTasney, professor in aerospace studies, said an aircrew has to get in the suits before landing the plane when the base is under chemical attack.

Layering the clothes and having a hood over the head tends to put a thermal burden on the wearer, according to an article in the Aug. 12 edition of the Kansas City Star. The suits are only worn, however, when there is a threat of chemical attack.

The Air Force is developing a one-piece suit and air-cooled headgear to replace the present model. The new outfit will be lighter, easier to use and provide better ventilation, according to Aviation Week and Space Technology.

The new suit, designated CWU-66P, could be in full-scale production within a month, but the headgear is still being tested, said Robert May, director of human protection systems development at Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Aviation Week and Space Technology.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

Saga continues, but where's Steve?

Scott Paske

SPORTS REPORTER

What you're about to read is being written out of necessity. It's not really what I had in mind.

If you haven't already heard, that Henson guy — former K-State basketball and track standout Steve Henson — signed a one-year contract with the Milwaukee Bucks last week. The Bucks drafted Henson in the second round of the NBA's June draft.

And no, your short-term memory isn't failing you. I reported last week that Henson was going to spend the next year launching 3-point missiles around the Mediterranean playing for a pro team in Greece.

Thanks Steve, you've shot my credibility, too.

This space was originally planned for my not-so-expert analysis on Major League Baseball's pennant races as the final month of the regular season begins. I'll save it for next week when the picture is a little clearer, and I stand a better chance of looking like a genius.

Henson has shown that life can turn on a dime. Nine days ago, his father told me via telephone that Steve was taking a step that made him comfortable.

Overseas basketball was a guarantee for Henson and his wife, Cindy. His NBA future wasn't.

So Henson packed his bags and reported to training camp in Holland.

Mike Henson, Steve's coach at McPherson High School, also said that the dream of playing in the NBA might have been a creation of his son's coaches and fans. Sure, making the dream a reality was among Steve's goals — just maybe not a top priority.

But in Henson-like fashion, he decided to put his followers first.

The one thing that may save my credibility is that I reported that the Bucks and Henson were still contacting one another. From what Steve's father told me, it sounded like they were barely hearing each other. But they were talking.

Obviously, Milwaukee management and Henson struck a similar chord. Terms of the deal were not reported, but it was enough to lure the former Wildcat away from a lucrative deal in Europe.

It makes me, and plenty of other K-State fans I'm sure, happy to see Henson take his NBA chance. If he joins 'Cat alums Mitch Richmond, Rolando Blackman and Ed Nealy as the only active NBA players from K-

Volleyball team starts campaign with pair of wins

Tulsa, Drake fall to Wildcat squad in weekend, season-opening matches

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The K-State volleyball squad emerged from its season-opening matches with plenty of reasons to be happy.

The spikers topped the Tulsa Golden Hurricane 15-12, 15-13, 15-3, Saturday morning, before defeating the Drake Bulldogs Sunday afternoon 11-15, 15-9, 15-5 and 15-8 to sweep the homestand.

Despite having to overcome inexperience, the 'Cats fought back against Drake after starting slow.

"We had a lot of broken offensive plays that we just didn't keep in play," Coach Scott Nelson said. "We'd fist it, and it would go out of bounds. It just didn't seem that we were quite steady enough to allow Drake to make additional errors on their side.

"The first game, we didn't play to our passing strength. We made too many errors," Nelson said. "You look at serving, and it seemed like about every other serve was an error. So we never really put much pressure (on Drake), and, at the same time, they were playing real well.

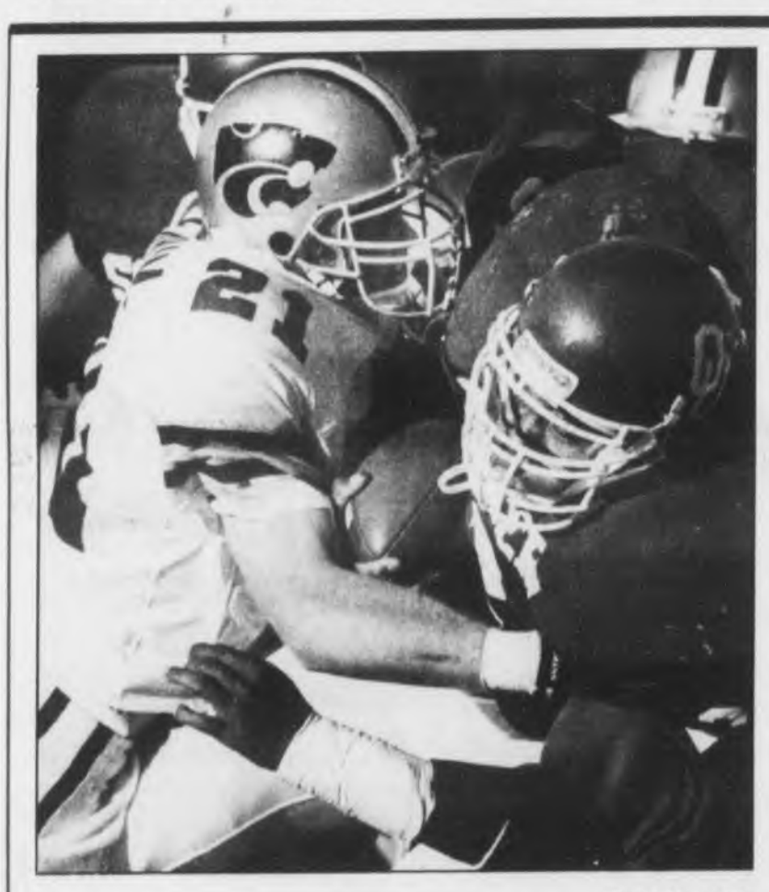
"The second game was different. We still had some serving errors, but our defense started picking up a little bit. Our serve reception as a team gave away less free points, so we started playing a little more to our strengths in the second and third game," he said.

One strength against Drake was the ability of sophomore outside hitter Julie James, who tied former K-State standout Shawnee Call's four-game record for kills with 25.

"Julie started out almost like the rest of our team in the match. I don't know if it was nervousness as much as being a little unsteady on serve reception," Nelson said. "She steadied out right away.

"(James' performance) appeared like how Rhonda (Hughes) put balls away right at the very end to win the match yesterday. Julie took on that role this afternoon. So I wasn't aware of all the kills prior to (the four at the end of the match), but I was aware that at critical times Julie came through, and we needed that as a team."

With a young team and a new offense, Nelson is pleased with his team's progress.



"(The offense) is coming along pretty well. We still have certain rotations that we score the majority of our points in. In other rotations, we're not scoring very many points, so what we can do now is go back and work on better offensive sets or plays in those rotations to improve our point capabilities," he said. "The advantage of the 5-1 system is that the same setter touches every other ball, so you get used to how she sets the ball."

With the lack of experienced setters, Nelson has been tailoring the new offense around freshman Alison Murphy, which has proved successful.

"I think (Murphy) is doing a great job," he said. "She just has so many different responsibilities as a setter, and we've tried to eliminate a lot of her defensive responsibilities so she can be focused on offense a little bit more.

"We're so young, experience-wise, that we have to stay focused on improvment, not only individually, but also as a team in our systems," Nelson said. "I thought we played in both these matches to our strengths pretty much the entire time.

"It's nice to be 2-0, but we could probably be feeling good about ourselves if we were 0-2," Nelson said. "We have some teams that are real tough on our schedule. If you just enter it as a win or loss, good or bad, I don't think that's fair."

Defensive backfield ready for challenge

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Defensive Backs

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

With the conclusion of spring practice, K-State football coach Bill Snyder indicated that the 'Cats may be able to forget that the team lost all four starters from their 1989 defensive secondary.

The departure of four-time letterwinners Tyreese Herds, Erick Harper, Marcus Miller and Dimitrie Scott created one of the biggest holes Snyder had to fill heading into 1990.

Snyder, however, could have reason to breathe easier after the high-priority position seemingly mended itself.

"When we came out of spring football, I said that our secondary at that time was improved over the secondary that finished the season for us," Snyder said. "I feel very comfortable with our defensive secondary. We felt in the spring that we identified four youngsters who we felt gave us better quality than we finished the season with.

"Now I feel comfortable that we may have as many as 10 youngsters who are going to be very competitive for those positions," he said. "I think we have established perhaps the quality, which is an improvement over last year, and also the depth that we needed."

The 'Cats, however, are not without experience. Junior left cornerback Rogerick Green, senior strong safety Danny Needham and junior right cornerback William Price are two-year letterwinners, along with sophomore free safety C.J. Masters, who lettered last season.

"This year, I feel that we're very confident in our secondary," Green said. "One thing we're really looking to strive for is being consistent. That's really been the emphasis throughout the spring and during the two-a-days.

"We have a lot of young guys, but everyone in the secondary has had some experience, and we have some young guys who are really excited this year," he said.

One reason for the defensive secondary to be excited is the opportunity to continue the success of last year's group, which ranked first in the nation against the pass, allowing 129.3 yards per game.

With one season under Snyder behind them, the chance to be

Miami still No. 1

By The Associated Press

Despite its opening victory Saturday, Nebraska fell three spots to No. 10 in The Associated Press college football poll. It was the biggest drop of any Top-25 team.

Miami, which starts its season at Brigham Young on Saturday, got the most first-place votes (27) and remained No. 1 with 1,444 points. Notre Dame, which opens against Michigan on Sept. 15, stayed in second with 20 first-place votes and 1,421 points.

Auburn and Florida State tied for third with 1,304 points, although the Seminoles led 7-4 in first-place votes. Florida State, which trailed Auburn by 43 points in the preseason poll, gained ground on the Tigers even though neither team has played a game.

Chiefs make final cuts

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Chiefs cut their roster to 47 players Monday to comply with an NFL rule, letting go, among others, last year's starting inside linebacker Walker Lee Ashley.

The team released the names of six other players placed on procedural waivers Sunday or Monday: wide receiver Willie Davis, offensive tackle Michael Harris, wide receiver J.J. Birden, defensive back Sherrod Rainge, offensive guard Gene Chilton and defensive tackle Peter Shorts.

Republicans open county offices

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Riley County Republicans kicked off the fall campaign with their traditional Labor Day opening of county Republican headquarters in downtown Manhattan.

Candidates for both state and local races called for unity and volunteers to help them succeed in November.

State Senator Lana Oleen was master of ceremonies.

Oleen said Riley County Republicans was one of the first county organizations to house all their candidates' headquarters in one building. This allows the candidates and their staffs to share information developed at the grassroots level, Oleen said.

Harlan Priddle, candidate for lieutenant governor, said the challenge for Republicans in the gubernatorial race is to get voters to look at which candidate has the most qualifications, competence and knowledge of the issues.

Priddle said party unity and grassroots work will determine how successfully this message is taken to the voters. Priddle said the party is recovering its unity after the primary campaign.

"Nestor Weigand did an excellent job of coming down for party unity," Priddle said. "I have been to four counties in the last four days, and the county chairmen are all ready to move ahead to the general election."

Priddle said they want a campaign on substantial issues and

K-State links past with Goodnow House

Educator's move west helps establish University, Manhattan communities

By Jerry Sapp
Collegian Reporter

Going back in time can be easy while touring the home that the father of K-State built — the Goodnow House.

"This is a chance to see the man and the things that belonged to him. It gives you an insight into his character," said Kathleene Brown, curator and sole employee of the Goodnow House.

Isaac Tichner Goodnow, a teacher and abolitionist who came to Kansas to help promote freedom, was a pioneer of higher education in Kansas.

Born in Whitingham, Vt., in 1814, Goodnow attended the Wesleyen Acadamy in Willaham, Mass., where he graduated as well as met his wife Ellen Denison.

In 1848, Goodnow became a professor of natural sciences at Providence Seminary, an all-girls school in Rhode Island.

Goodnow wanted to establish a college. In 1857, he helped to purchase a site for Manhattan's first college, Bluemont Central College, a proposed agriculture school.

"The major significance is that one person can make a difference," Brown said.

Goodnow's efforts in the House of Representatives persuaded the Legislature to accept Bluemont College's property as a donation toward building the new Kansas State Agriculture College.

"If Goodnow decided not to get out of bed and come to Kansas, the school, town and house would not be here. He didn't have to come here. He could have remained a professor," Brown said.

"Goodnow was very much into equal education. Mrs. Goodnow was college educated," Brown said. "In 1871, the graduating senior class from K-State had four women and one man.

In 1861, the Goodnows purchased six acres of land for $800 at what is now Claflin Road and College Avenue. The property was across from Bluemont Central College.

A few weeks later marked the beginning of the construction of the Goodnow House, where the Goodnows lived for the rest of their lives.

"Goodnow designed and built a lot of the house himself. He cut the trees and quarried the rock," Brown said.

The house had five rooms — a sitting room, two bedrooms, kitchen and a pantry.

"Seven years later an addition was built, and it tripled the size of the Goodnows' living space," Brown said.

"Goodnow House is made up of pine and black walnut," Brown said. "It is a beautiful old house that is rich in heritage and tradition."

A lot of items that belonged to Isaac and Ellen are still in the house, including Ellen's science collection and clothes as well as Isaac's letters and pictures of 1800s statesmen. One of those statesmen was Abraham Lincoln, a good friend of Isaac.

"The interior needs a lot of work to bring it back to its original look," Brown said.

The Goodnow House was first restored in the 1930s by Hattie Parkerson, the Goodnows' adopted daughter. She dreamed of turning the house into a museum. On Sunday, May 12, 1974, her dream came true when the house was dedicated by the Kansas State Historical Society.

"At the present, the Goodnow House is suffering from across-the-board budget cuts," Brown said. "We need money to update and preserve artifacts. We have to cut back on the air conditioning and all-around utilities. I didn't even have an intern for the summer, and sometimes I get swamped with work and get spread a little thin."

Tutors receive credit

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Staff

Volunteers who tutor at-risk elementary and middle school students will receive college credit from the Department of Human Development.

Stephan Bollman, director of the Human Development and Family Studies, said one or two credit hours will be given in either HDFS 300 or HDFS 700. Bollman said he ran into trouble last year for giving away credit. This semester, credit will be granted upon consideration of the amount of contact hours and the amount of research and written reports completed.

UFM created the internship program in cooperation with the Family Center at K-State.

Karen McCulloh, project coordinator, said she considers the tutoring to be "a learning experience, not just a work experience."

Volunteers are required to tutor six hours per week with two students, to write reports on articles reviewed and to attend workshops intended to draw in the student's families. Tutors will also help with homework as well as work on projects and write a contract with students defining their goals for the semester.

McCulloh reported last semester's success with the program's debut and said, "This is not just tutoring. I've seen what other schools are doing, and this is a little unusual."

Volunteers will also be expected to spend at least two hours per month in seminars with various Manhattan area teachers and learning specialists who will discuss strategies for working with at-risk students and their families.

The first meeting for volunteers will be at UFM at 3 p.m. Monday, Sept. 10.

Race for governor underway

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. — Labor Day traditionally kicks off the fall political campaign during election years in Kansas, and this year's holiday observance was no exception.

Both major-party contenders for election as governor on Nov. 6, incumbent Republican Mike Hayden and Democratic challenger Joan Finney, were out among the people Monday, kicking off a busy week for both.

They rode in the 94th annual Hoisington Labor Day parade in the morning, along with the two attorney general candidates, incumbent Republican Bob Stephan and Democratic challenger Bert Cantwell.

Finney also went to a Labor Day parade at Natoma, northeast of Hays, in the afternoon and to the Joyland Labor Day picnic in Wichita in the evening.

It is an especially ambitious first week of the fall campaign for Hayden, who will tour the state Tuesday trying to goad Finney into making more joint appearances than presently have been agreed upon, and will entertain President Bush for a fund-raising luncheon Thursday in Topeka.

Meanwhile, Finney is sticking to her less visible, but usually effective, style of making numerous appearances at small gatherings. She opens her Wichita campaign headquarters at 111 W. Douglas Tuesday evening.

Hayden and Finney face off in their first debate of the campaign at noon Saturday in the Farm Bureau Arena at the State Fair in Hutchinson.

It is one of only three joint appearances both candidates have confirmed so far. The others are at a Johnson County church and on TV stations in Kansas City and Topeka.

To try to get Finney to agree to more joint appearances, Hayden is flying around the state Tuesday.

Interviews require preparation

Placement center assists students in finding jobs

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

As a new batch of seniors begin to consider life after college, placement orientation informs seniors about the job-search process.

Placement orientation is one of many programs the Career Planning and Placement Center sponsors to help students find jobs. The first of such orientations was Wednesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall for seniors in engineering and agribusiness.

At the orientation, James Akin, director of the Placement Center, told the 331 students in the audience to start early.

"Students should begin the interview process nine months before they are ready to enter the job market," Akin said.

He said students need to fill out data sheets and establish a file at the center.

"The students initiate contact with employers by requesting an interview," Akin said. "After this request, we send a copy of their resume to employers, and they screen all the applicants."

Chosen applicants may then sign up for an on-campus interview in Holtz Hall.

Scott McRee, senior in mechanical engineering, said the orientation was helpful.

"I think it is very important to understand the process companies use to select candidates for interviews on campus," McRee said. "Now I will be able to tailor my data sheet to include the information sought after by prospective companies."

Akin said on-campus interviewing is not the only service offered by the Placement Center.

"We can help students a lot in our office with the paper trail to give them a good sound start," Akin said. "Our role is to help people in their job-search process, whether it's on-campus interviews, developing a network or helping them with the paperwork."

Other services include critiquing cover letters and resumes, printing resumes on a laserprinter for a small charge and providing handouts on resume guides. The center also has a Career Resource Library with information about companies and a list of prospective employers.

There were 10,000 interviews on campus last year. Akin said that this number varies yearly but that they have about 20,000 job vacancies reported every year.

"The job market is very good right now, and it's getting better," Akin said, "but it's the student's job to take the responsibility. After all, it's their job search."

McRee said the entire placement program at K-State provides an excellent method for students to get the maximum number of interviews with the companies of their choice.

Akin said the center has been using this system for eight or nine years. When they began, about three or four other universities were using the same type of system, he said. Now about a dozen universities use the system, and Akin said employers love it.

"Our only concern with this program was that employers would put too much emphasis on GPA, but this system has been very beneficial for everyone," Akin said.

Placement orientation for seniors in the colleges of Arts and Sciences and Human Ecology is at 4 p.m. Thursday in Denison 101. Students unable to attend the orientation for their college may attend any session.

"Students who missed all of the placement-orientation meetings may watch a 22-minute video to get an abstract idea of what was presented at the meetings," Akin said.

Population affected by lakes, irrigation

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The rural areas of Kansas and Missouri that lost the fewest people in the last decade, according to new census figures, were usually the places that found more ways to use water for crops and tourists.

A study of almost any map shows population centers grow near water, like bays, lakes, springs and rivers — and sprinklers and water slides in Kansas and Missouri.

"Irrigation farming has had a lot to do with population shifts," said Stephen White, geography professor at K-State, in explaining pockets of rapid growth on a map that shows population losses across most of western Kansas.

Other experts said water recreation has done the same. The lakes and tourist areas in central and southern Missouri showed some of the strongest growth in the region.

Preliminary census figures showed heavy population losses, often more than 10 percent, in northern Missouri and northwestern Kansas and parts of southeastern Kansas.

But experts caution that dramatic shifts in population figures may not appear so extreme when the Census Bureau refines its calculations. Local officials have challenged many of the preliminary counts.

The early numbers provided little surprise in showing that, like other Midwestern states, Kansas and Missouri failed to keep pace with the population growth of the rest of the nation.

Nor was it surprising that people continued to abandon smaller, more isolated places for more urban and suburban regions that hold greater promise of employment.

Local races begin for Legislature seat

K-State funding priorities for both candidates

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Both candidates in the race for the seat in the Kansas House from the 66th District, consisting of east Manhatttan and southwestern Pottawatomie County, believe funding for K-State will be the big issue in the fall campaign.

CAMPAIGN 1990
Sheila Hochhauser (D)
Stan Hoerman (R)
Kansas House of Representatives, 66th District

In the 66th District, first-term Democrat Sheila Hochhauser, a Manhattan attorney, is being challenged by Republican Stanley Hoerman, an employee of the Osborne Construction Co. of Manhattan.

Hochhauser said issues in the campaign of particular interest to the University community would be support for higher education — meaning funding for K-State — and the cost of health insurance to the state's classified workers.

Hochhauser said she also thought tax reform would be an issue in the coming campaign.

"There is a need to look at the whole taxation system and who is bearing the burden, with a goal of less reliance on property tax," she said.

Hochhauser said she would address the question of how to create greater efficiency in the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services while taking care of the needs of those dependent on its services.

Finally, Hochhauser said the school district equalization formula, which attempts to create a more equitable distribution of property tax revenue to the state's school districts and which will be considered by the Legislature next year, would be of interest to property taxpayers in both school districts she represents.

Hochhauser said that she is not familiar enough with Hoerman's positions on the issues to identify areas of difference. One exception is abortion, she said.

"On the abortion issue, my opponent is not pro-choice," she said. "He has made it clear he differs greatly from me on that issue."

Hoerman said Hochhauser's performance in the past two years, particularly concerning funding for K-State, is an issue in the campaign.

"She failed to keep the promises made two years ago," he said.

Hoerman said that as a Republican, he would be better able to build coalitions with the Republican majority in the Legislature

Program boosts membership

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

A new program designed by the Agriculture Alumni Development Committee is getting new College of Agriculture graduates involved with alumni.

The "Adopt A Graduate" program, which has provided the first-year K-State Alumni membership for all College of Agriculture graduates since December 1988, is designed to get graduates more involved with their alma mater and to raise membership numbers.

"The program is a way of keeping in touch with your university no matter where you are or what you are doing," said Bill Amstein, Alumni and Development Coordinator for the College of Agriculture.

The Agriculture Alumni is committed, and the program's purpose is to prove that to the new graduates, Amstein said.

The program is designed to show graduates the benefit of membership by special offers and a subscription to the K-Stater, which gives the graduate a link to his or her friends that have also graduated. In addition, the University benefits from the alumni through such items as legislative relations and scholarship funds.

Amstein said success is difficult to measure since the program is in its early stages.

For now, however, retention of membership by the graduates is keeping the membership base even, said Jeanine Lake, Alumni Association membership assistant.

Of the December 1988 graduating class, 28 percent have renewed their membership. For the May 1989 graduates, the percentage is slightly higher. Lake says the retention rate is good.

"Normally, solicitation from one of our mailings is only 2 to 4 percent, so the College of Agriculture is doing really good," Lake said.

While it is too early to compare retention of agriculture graduates to other colleges, Amstein hopes to see comparisons within the next year.

Terry Troutt, a December 1989 graduate in animal sciences and industry, said he likes the way the "Adopt A Graduate" program works.

"I thought it was a pretty good deal," Troutt said.

Troutt, currently working on his master's degree in animal science and industry at Clemson University, said he believes he will renew his membership by paying the alumni dues.

Release of Americans not possible

By The Associated Press

BAALBEK, Lebanon — An influential Shiite Moslem leader on Monday ruled out any quick release of the six American hostages in Lebanon, but indicated seven Europeans could soon be freed.

"If there is going to be a hostage release, it will be Europeans, not Americans," Hussein Musawi said in Baalbek, a town in eastern Lebanon.

"The United States has spearheaded the West's occupation of Saudi Arabia after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and that eliminated the chance of releasing American hostages in Lebanon this year," Musawi told reporters.

Musawi heads a pro-Syrian wing of Hezbollah, or Party of God, the reputed umbrella for extremist Shiite Moslem factions in Lebanon. He is said to be the mentor of pro-Iranian Shiite factions believed to hold the hostages.

There are four Britons, two West Germans and an Italian in addition to the six Americans held in Lebanon.

He was commenting on reports published in Beirut newspapers quoting unidentified Lebanese sources close to Iran as saying all 13 Western hostages, including the Americans, would be freed by the end of the year.

These reports quoted the sources as saying "backstage negotiations and preparations are under way to free Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite soon.

"Barring unforeseen hitches, Waite will be the next hostage to be freed. Otherwise, it will be John McCarthy."

Journalism school benefactor dies

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

A man responsible for helping the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications regain its accreditation died Aug. 30, at his home in Honolulu.

In 1989, Carl P. Miller, 92, donated $1 million to the K-State School of Journalism and Mass Communications, in the name of his father, A.Q. Miller Sr., for whom the school is named.

Carl Miller studied journalism at K-State and was general manager of the Collegian. He was also a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity.

Miller had many accomplishments throughout his lifetime. He was a former editor of the Pacific Coast edition of the Wall Street Journal and former president of Rotary International, of which he was active with for more than 50 years. He was past president and director of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, was past president of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Transit Authority and the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco, and was past director of the Los Angeles County Fair Association.

Miller received honorary degrees from the University of California at Irvine and Pepperdine University. During his lifetime he was also an editor of the Belleville Telescope, assistant financial editor for the Los Angeles Times and served as general manager of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange for two years.

"He remained very busy and was constantly working on projects up until his death," said Merle Miller, brother of Carl Miller and publisher of the Belleville Telescope. "He never quit."

Cruise Palmer, a friend of Miller, said, "When he heard that the Journalism School had lost its accreditation he wanted to do something to help. He donated the money to help upgrade the school and obtain its reaccreditation."

Palmer is the donator of the Journalism School's "Cruise Palmer Distinguished Professorship Award," which donates $5,000 each year.

Miller was born in Riley, Kan. He had lived in Honolulu for 20 years.

KSU lectures offer diversity

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

K-State is the home of three lecture series: the Landon Lectures on Public Issues, the Convocation Lecture Series and the Lou Douglas Lectures on Public Affairs. Each series brings three to five speakers from outside campus each year.

"Very few universities have the richness of lecture series we have here," said Robert Robel, professor of biology. "I don't know of any comparable.

"The Landon Lectures and Convocation Lectures are synergistic — (they) benefit each other," said Robel. "The Landon brings high visibility, where the Convocation brings expertise or more scholarly speakers."

Past Landon Lecture speakers have included U.S. presidents and vice presidents, presidential candidates, a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, cabinet members, generals, foreign heads of state, Nobel Prize winners and nationally known journalists.

"There is no question that the Landon name is magic," said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture and chairman of the Convocations committee. "The Lou Douglas and Landon Lectures — both of them have a public policy mandate. We try to assure that a broad spectrum of subject areas are addressed, (with speakers) focusing their talks on their role as scientist or the issue from a scientific perspective."

"The main unity of the (Lou Douglas) series deals with human rights, international development, justice and equality, and world peace," said Wayne Nafziger, professor of economics and chairman of the Lou Douglas Lecture committee.

New address forms aid mail delivery

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

No one likes to have their mail delayed or lost, whether it is important financial aid documents or the last paycheck from a summer job.

Students can have their mail forwarded by filling out change-of-address cards. These cards ensure that the students' address is changed with the U.S. Postal Service, businesses which the student deals with and publishers of magazines.

Ralph Brown, superintendent of postal operations in Manhattan, said students must fill out change-of-address cards and send them to the post office.

"If the students just have their mail forwarded to their K-State address, they will only be able to receive their mail temporarily," he said.

The Postal Service has an expiration date on mail that is being forwarded. If a person does not have their address changed in the post office and with the persons in which they correspond, their first-class mail will only be forwarded to them for one year.

Newspapers and magazines are forwarded for 60 days. After this, mail is returned to the sender.

Most magazines require a two- to three-month notice for a change-of-address request. The Postal Service contacts the publishers of magazines when it receives the request. It is a good idea, however, for students themselves to contact the publishers also.

"Some magazines are a little reluctant to change a customer's address," Brown said.

If a magazine needs three months to change addresses, and the Postal Service only forwards magazines for two months, issues may be missed. This mail is not lost, but returned to the publisher of the magazine.

Brown said students can cancel a change-of-address request. If students fill out forms to have mail forwarded to their home address over the summer, they can cancel the request after returning to school.

This saves students from having to fill out another change-of-address form at home and also saves the mail from being sent to the student's address at school, forwarded to the hometown and then forwarded back to school.

This shortcut, however, can be used only by off-campus students.

Greg Humbert, campus postmaster, said Manhattan's postal service does not assume responsibility for forwarding on-campus mail to an off-campus address. It will forward off-campus mail to an on-campus address.

Students living on campus who need to have their mail forwarded must make arrangements with the Department of Housing in the Pittman Building or their residence hall.

Change-of-address kits are available in Dykstra Hall, Humbert said.

Off-campus students can get cards at the post office at 500 Leavenworth St.

Germany relearns education

By The Associated Press

EAST BERLIN — Wolfgang Jung had spent his first two years in college absorbing communist economics when, abruptly, the world changed. So did his homework.

Jung is spending his last two years of college cramming for capitalism at East Berlin's College of Economics, where even the teachers are taking a crash course in free-market thinking.

The college is part of a vast educational system that is both trying to reshape itself quickly and continuing to train young people for jobs that may not exist on graduation day.

Nearly 2.1 million East Germans from elementary to graduate level are beginning a new school year that will be much different from the previous 42.

Millions of new textbooks free of communist ideology have flooded in from West Germany. Bloated departments devoted to Marxist-Leninist theory have been dissolved.

Hundreds of Russian-language teachers spent the summer learning to teach English. More than one-third of the nation's 1 million teachers are enrolled in retraining programs.

On the secluded campus where the Communist secret police once learned their fearsome skills, music, science and languages are taught to an ordinary student body.

Still, experts say, the changes are almost superficial.

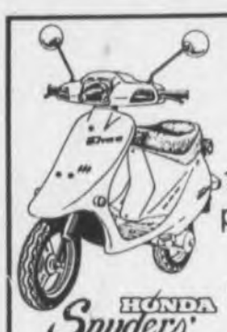
Most of the old teachers, former guardians of ideology and components of a vast domestic intelligence network, will be back in their classrooms.

All principals, rectors and chancellors were fired, but the communities entrusted with refilling those jobs returned more than half to their former positions.

What has happened to East Germany's schools in the year since communism fell is only the beginning of a process that may need a generation to complete, the experts say.

For Jung and others in the Class of '92, that is too long.

"I didn't know what a corporation was when we began learning a market economy," said Jung, 24, sitting in the school cafeteria bent over a West German textbook.



"It was socialism, socialism, socialism. Now we have to go back to the beginning."

The democratic government elected in March has only begun decentralizing the system, reteaching the teachers and eliminating the rigidity of lesson plans, said Hans-Joachim Meyer, the education minister.

Meyer believes the five state governments that will be created Oct. 14, to fit in with the West German system, will have a more formidable task when they assume full responsibility for the schools.

He said the hardest job will be to change the way people think, to instill individuality and imagination in a system dulled by decades of restrictive, paranoid Stalinism.

"We need probably four to five years to introduce the necessary structures," he said. "But in order to develop new attitudes toward life, toward society: yes, that will take a generation."

'Witches' proves magical for all

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

The late Jim Henson and cult director Nicolas Roeg join forces to create "Witches," a film with just the right brew to cast a spell over young and old.

This modern fairy tale depicts the visit of young Luke and his story-telling grandmother to a resort in England. Here Luke encounters members of the Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Luke is horrified to find out that the members of this society are actually bald, purple-eyed, toeless witches.

COLLEGIAN Report Card "WITCHES" B

The witches have contrived a sinister plan to turn all the children of England into mice. Luke's ravenous sidekick Bruno Jenkins falls prey to the evil witches and is used as a guinea pig to test a formula that achieves these ends.

Luke, played by Jason Fisher, must find a way to stop the fiendish witches and save the children. However, there is a slight complication — the Grand High Witch has also turned Luke into a mouse. His grandmother must come to his aid and prevent the children from becoming cat food.

The film showcases Henson's puppeteering magic. The characters in Roald Dahl's book come to life on screen, demonstrating Henson's creative genius.

The puppet mice in this film are not only fun to watch but lifelike as well. Audiences leaving the theater might be hesitant about ever setting out mousetraps again.

Normal objects also take on a new meaning as the camera follows Luke, in his mouse state, over soup labels, through knitting bags and down curtains in his quest to save the children.

As far as human characters, "Witches" offers us the evil Grand High Witch, portrayed by Anjelica Huston. Huston makes the "Wicked Witch of the West" seem like a saint as she plots the demise of the clean-smelling children she loathes. Her performance alone makes this film worth seeing.

Very credible makeup artistry, combined with outrageous visual effects, makes "Witches" note—worthy. The transfiguration of people into mice is a spectacular special effect. The witches' transformation from everyday people into monsters from a child's nightmare is also an impressive sight.

Sunset Zoo setting for jazz workshop

Snow leopards to inhabit new surroundings

By Stacy Harbison
Collegian Reporter

The Sunset Zoo will have a different breed of animal this weekend — Felinus Jazzicus.

The zoo, in cooperation with the International Association of Jazz Educators and the Kansas Arts Commission, will host the Cool Cats Jazz Festival from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

The festival will honor Dick and Jane Thiessen, who are sponsoring the renovation of the "Snow Leopards of Tibet" exhibit, to open in 1991.

"Snow leopards, being from the arctic region, are 'Cool Cats,'" said Angela Baier, zoo development officer.

The festival will encourage the appreciation, study and understanding of jazz and its artistic performance. It will feature three jazz bands, workshops and screenings of jazz videos. It will also include live animal-education shows.

World-famous jazz historian and broadcaster Dick Wright of KANU-FM will discuss the evolution of jazz as an American art form.

"His show is one of the most listened-to jazz shows of the Midwest," IAJE Executive Director Bill McFarlin said.

Tom Fowler, director of jazz studies at Wichita State University, will give a workshop for music teachers on how to integrate jazz into their school's music curriculum.

Students will have the chance to discuss the basics of jazz improvisation and work on a jazz rhythm section with Kim Park of Kansas City.

"He is really one of the top jazz musicians in the Midwest," McFarlin said.

"Crosscurrents," a Wichita quartet and one of the region's hottest jazz groups, will perform at noon. The Sam Johnson Company, a quintet playing in the Kansas City tradition, will play at 2 p.m. The Manhattan Jazz Orchestra, an 18-member band featuring Park, finishes the program at 4 p.m.

Zoo Director Don Wixom and Zoo Education Curator Ron Schulze will discuss various animals and their habitats in a variety of animal-education shows between performances.

Award-winning wildlife artist Jerry Thomas will be available to sign a limited number of his classic "Cool Cat Jazz" posters and discuss his work.

Admission is $1.75 for adults and 75 cents for children ages 5 to 12 years of age. Children aged 4 years and under and Friends of Sunset Zoo are admitted free.

Students may register in advance by calling IAJE, but walk-ins are welcome.

'Men at Work' does not work

Poor script, acting leads to film's trashy showing

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

"Men at Work," the new toy for Martin Sheen's boys, could well be the worst movie known to man — or at least this one.

Bosom brothers Emilio Estevez and Charlie Sheen team up to present one of the most poorly written, poorly acted and most tactless films to come out of Hollywood since "Howard the Duck."

This film fiasco is about a couple of garbage men, played quite suitably by the Sheen boys — who, if not for their father, Martin Sheen, would probably be collecting trash today.

After the two find a politician's corpse in a waste receptacle, they take it upon themselves to find the murderers. Why they didn't call the police is beyond me. It would've been quick and painless to the audience and would have undoubtedly provided more entertainment.

Whatever their reasons, they set out to nab a bad guy — and a bimbo for Sheen to smooch and save numerous times along the way. Coincidentally, this same twinky happens to be the first and only person they can think of who could have iced the politician. She is quickly ruled out.

COLLEGIAN Report Card "MEN AT WORK" F

Why? Well, she has a nice butt, of course.

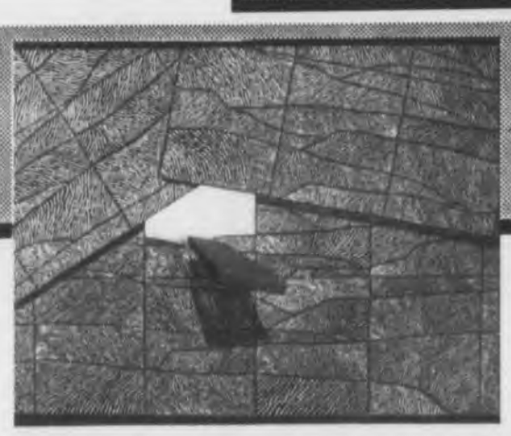
The real bad guys aren't hard to spot. They're the ones driving the car with the personalized tag "Hit Men." Maybe it does pay to advertise.

The script, written by Estevez, is weaker than the paper it was printed on. Let me give you a few examples — it's my pleasure.

The line evoking the most laughter was, not surprisingly, a rip-off from another movie. It is said when the corpse is found in the garbage can and goes something along the lines of someone having thrown away "a perfectly good white guy." Sorry, Estevez, I laughed at that one once already.

As they emerge from their car, which, by the way, just collided with the bad guys' car, we notice a limousine jam-packed full of even more villians who, it just so happens, have been sitting there for no explained reason.

Another classic mistake occurred at an earlier moment when the politician is murdered. As the camera focuses on the strangled corpse lying on the floor, it's apparent that it is still breathing.



Estevez was at his prime in "The Breakfast Club" and "St. Elmo's Fire," but has since developed into something resembling a muppet on acid. His acting doesn't seem up to par, either. Perhaps he was too busy coming up with the witty and original dialogue. Then again, maybe not.

To draw attention away from his own lack of talent, Estevez has made sure this movie is crammed full of inept actors. The only exception to this is the refreshing talents of Dean Cameron, who plays "The Pizza Man."

If you want to see a movie full of stupid mistakes, poor acting and annoying background music, go see "Men at Work." Don't say I didn't warn you.

He'll try to focus attention on what he thinks is her dodging of head-to-head confrontations by holding news conferences in Topeka, Garden City, Wichita, Pittsburg and Olathe.

Finney's campaign manager, Jack Parry, has said she will continue with her schedule of lots of public appearances but feels no need for numerous joint appearances with Hayden.

The irony is that Hayden was accused by his chief challenger, Nestor Weigand, of ducking joint appearances during the Republican primary campaign this summer.

Hayden is committed to appear on two debates originating at KPTS-TV in Wichita and is scheduled to be shown statewide by public television, but Finney has not agreed to those two appearances. The first gubernatorial debate on the public TV stations is set for Oct. 5 and the second Nov. 5.

An independent candidate for governor, Christina Campbell-Cline of Wichita, has not been invited to appear at most of the joint appearances. She was certified for the ballot on Aug. 24.

Bush is scheduled to arrive in Air Force One about 11 a.m. Thursday at Forbes Field south of Topeka, take a motorcade into Topeka and speak at a fund-raising luncheon for Hayden at noon in the Alf Landon Arena at the Kansas Expocentre. He'll also attend a private reception before the speech, and is scheduled to depart Topeka about 12:45 p.m.

There's been only one problem to Henson's summertime saga. Steve has remained in the shadows through all of this. No Kansas newspaper has been able to get his side of the story during the past few weeks.

Steve's father said his son's glory is not in press clippings, but from the cheers of his fans. That much is obvious. But the cheers might be a little louder if they could receive a taste of what's been going on.

Lectures include Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, then-adviser on U.S. military policy in Vietnam and political scientist; Frederick Taylor, executive editor of the Wall Street Journal; Admiral Gene La Rocque, director of the Center for Defense Information and Evalina Kane, writer and organizer for Woman Against Pornography.

Dr. Michael Kavanaugh from the National Research Council is this year's first Convocation speaker. The lecture will be at 10:30 a.m. Sept. 13 at McCain Auditorium. His topic is "The World Water Crisis: Fact or Fiction?"

The first Lou Douglas lecture speaker is Molly Ivins, a columnist for the Dallas Times Herald and frequent commentator on National Public Radio and McNeil-Lehrer Report. The lecture will be at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 11 at Forum Hall in the K-State Union. Her topic is "The Media, Politics, and Other Forms of Insanity."

The first Landon Lecture speaker has yet to be announced. Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lectures, said although she has not given a confirmation, Elizabeth Dole is a possible speaker.

not an emotional or single-issue campaign.

Scott Morgan, candidate for the U.S. 2nd District congressional seat, appealed for help in his campaign. He said positions are available for those who would like to work in a interesting and unusual campaign.

Morgan said he has tried to build support throughout the summer among traditional Republicans by demonstrating he was a viable candidate they could take pride in. Now Morgan said he will appeal to independents and dissatisfied Democrats.

Attorney General Bob Stephan, unlike most of the candidates present, said polls showed that he has a comfortable lead. Stephan said he appreciated the traditional hard work and support of the Riley County Republican Party.

Ron Todd, candidate for state insurance commissioner, said he had been though a tough primary and anticipated another tough race in the general election.

The key to his success, as in the gubernatorial race, is how well he can get workers out and raise money in the next two months, Todd said.

Both Republican challengers to the Kansas House of Representatives, Kent Glasscock in the 62nd District and Stan Hoerman in the 66th District, said door-to-door campaigning and organizational work are going strong.

even more of a threat is there.

"This year, we are doing the same things that we were doing last year, except the difference this year is we know exactly what we're supposed to do," Green said. "Last year, it was like we were trying to learn the system while we were in it. This year, everyone knows what to expect when we're in certain situations, we know what to look for, and it makes it a lot easier because you have more confidence.

"I know everyone's looking at our secondary as a young secondary, and that we lost four starters, so they're going to try us," he said. "I look at that in a positive way, because it will give us more opportunity.

he said.

Ragan said if an increased amount of oil were to come from Kuwait and Iraq, it would lower the price of gas, but he said he believes the price wouldn't fall as low as it was earlier this year.

"Now there is an uncertainty in the market with the realization that a high price of oil is not a distant history, but something that could reoccur," Ragan said. "To some extent, higher prices are here to stay, at least for the near-term."

Ragan said that we faced a worse crisis with gas prices in 1981, but the sudden rise in current gas prices has caused the public to express concern.

"Whenever there is something so noticeable to the consumers such as the price of gas, there is a tendency to express concern whenever it rises as quickly as it has," he said.

and with the Republican governor.

Hoerman said spending would be an issue in the campaign.

"Legislators need to be selective in funding and not vote for everything that comes along so money will be left for important things like K-State," he said.

Hoerman said he differs from Hochhauser in political philosophy and background.

"I'm a third-generation Manhattan native, and I have a better feel for the thinking of the people in the 66th District than someone who has lived here five years," he said.

"Sheila represents liberal representation, and I represent more conservative, Kansas common sense," he said.

Assassination may be quick solution

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The easiest way for the United States to end the Persian Gulf crisis might be to have Iraq's Saddam Hussein removed — and don't think the idea hasn't occurred in Washington.

But assassinating foreign leaders is prohibited by a 14-year-old presidential directive and, say some experts, is far more difficult than it might seem. Hussein came to power via the assassin's route and since then has survived dozens of plots against his life.

Not surprisingly, no one in the executive branch is publicly embracing Sen. Richard Lugar's formula for dealing with the Iraqi president: "It seems to me important that Saddam Hussein must either leave or be removed."

But neither does President Bush walk away from the concept. Maybe he simply wants to make his antagonist nervous, but Bush doesn't say, "No, that's a violation of American policy and principle."

Three former directors of the Central Intelligence Agency — Richard Helms, William Colby and Stansfield Turner — reject the idea of a U.S.-sponsored assassination.

"When push comes to shove, Americans don't believe in having America assassinate foreign leaders," Helms said. "They want somebody else to pull the trigger."

Colby said Bush clearly hopes the economic squeeze on Iraq will become so severe that within the country "people will get the idea, 'we've got to get rid of this guy.'"

Turner said assassinations offend American morality and can backfire.

"I don't think an American could possibly kill Saddam Hussein and survive, so you'd end up hiring someone else and who knows what they might do," Turner said. "They might kill 5,000 people to get Hussein. It's a very chancy thing."

Assassination is a much discussed topic in Washington because diplomacy seems to have such a scant chance of getting Iraq out of Kuwait and because the full-blown military alternative could result in the deaths of thousands of Americans and Iraqis on the way to its predictable outcome: the defeat of Hussein's outnumbered, outgunned forces.

Lugar, a solid member of the Republican establishment from Indiana, is not speaking for himself alone when he raises the possibility of Hussein's removal.

Lugar said a week ago that Bush's goal of restoring Kuwait's independence is not enough if Iraq is left with the ability to produce chemical and possibly nuclear weapons.

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger makes much the same point.

"If it should be concluded that sanctions are too uncertain and diplomacy unavailing," he has written, "the United States will need to consider a surgical and progressive destruction of Iraq's military assets — especially since an outcome that leaves Saddam Hussein in place and his military machine unimpaired might turn out to be only an interlude between aggressions."

Bush, asked about Lugar's view, said on Thursday that he had "great respect for Dick Lugar" but added that he had not altered his publicly stated objectives.

Ten days after Iraq invaded, Bush said he hoped the U.S. military buildup in Saudi Arabia would produce a change in Hussein's behavior.

"If that means Saddam Hussein changes his spots, so be it," Bush said. "And if it doesn't, I hope the Iraqi people do something about it so that their leader will live by the norms of international behavior that will be acceptable to other nations."

Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla. and a member of the House Intelligence Committee, was asked as he was leaving on a trip to visit U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia last week about Hussein's removal.

"The future of Saddam Hussein is of concern to everyone, the potential power and resources he would have available," the congressman said. "You fear his ability to regroup."

But as far as an assassination, McCurdy said simply, "That's out of our hands."

Spill at gas pump contained

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

More than 100 gallons of gasoline unexpectedly poured out of a pump in front of Shop Quik on Bluemont Avenue Tuesday.

Mitch Wahaley, a Shop Quik employee, was trying to change a fuel filter on one of the fuel pumps outside the convience store at 1127 Bluemont Ave. when gasoline started gushing out.

Lt. Larry Fronce, Riley County firefighter, said the fire department received a call at 3:56 p.m. and arrived at the scene two minutes later.

"We had the pump turned off within a minute," he said. But, by that time 100 to 200 gallons of gas had already poured out.

Battalion Chief Charles Tonetill said the employee wasn't aware that the pump he was working on was connected to the same tank as the pumps at the neighboring Texaco station.

"So when a customer turned on a pump there, it activated the pump the employee was at, even though he had turned off the pump he was working on," Tonetill said.

The firefighters turned off the pump with an emergency shut-off valve located at the base of the pump.

"It would've been really dangerous for the Shop Quik employees to try to turn off the pump with the emergency impact valve," Fronce said, "There was a fountain of gas coming from it, and to turn it off, we had to reach through the fountain. We had the right equipment to do it safely."

Fronce said the emergency impact valve is installed to automatically turn the pump off if a car hits it and knocks it over.

After turning off the pump, the firefighters isolated the area and covered the affected asphalt and land with sand to absorb the gasoline. The gasoline soaked into the ground and disolved part of the asphalt near the pump, but the firefighters were able to contain the gasoline from flowing into the street.

Before leaving the scene, Tonetill said the firefighters took the added precaution of testing to see if any of the area was ignitable. He said they used a lighter to test samples of the effected surfaces, but were unable to ignite any of them.

Tonetill said the fire marshall will notify the Environmental Protection Agency of the incident today so it can do a soil analysis.

Northview represents Midwest on PBS special

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Northview Elementary School is being used as an example of public education done right.

The Manhattan school will represent schools of the Midwest when it is featured on a special by MacNeil-Lehrer Productions, "Learning in America: Schools That Work."

KTWU will air the PBS special today at 8 p.m.

The two-hour special features four public schools of different ethnic backgrounds. Northview will represent the Midwest perspective as a school with a primarily white student population.

The other schools featured are a primarily Hispanic school in Corpus Christi, Texas; a school in Lowell, Mass., with an ethnically mixed ethnic student body; and a primarily black school in Landover, Md., a suburb of Washington, D.C.

"They were looking for schools that were doing things right, and we are a quality school," said Northview Principal Dan Yunk. "Producers started with schools with good reputations and went from there."

Northview was named a National Exemplary School in 1988 by the U.S. Department of Education. This honor is based on student test scores and an extensive application process, Yunk said.

Last year, MacNeil-Lehrer Productions presented a television special that concentrated on reasons why American schools were ineffective in teaching and working with students. They decided this year to give equal time to schools that were doing things right.

Producers filmed at Northview for an entire week last May. They shot 80 videotapes and interviewed children, teachers, parents and administrators. Former CBS news commentator Roger Mudd conducted the interviews and will narrate the show.

"They got a full view of Northview," Yunk said. "They were here bright and early at 8 a.m. Monday and left late Friday afternoon."

Producers captured hallway activity, trips to the principal's office for discipline problems and lunchtime conversation as well as regular classroom activities.

"One day, I was microphoned," Yunk said. "Everywhere I went, the camera followed. Whether I was in the office or in the teachers' lounge, they were filming."

Producers highlighted Rene Maule's fourth grade class.

"They came in for three days and filmed everything we did," Maule said. "It was really interesting. The kids rose to the challenge. The producers told the kids if they looked at the camera, they couldn't use that clip."

Producers filmed the fourth graders doing everything from making pizza and playing at recess to participating in Spanish class and reading to their kindergarten book buddies, Maule said.

"Sometimes the camera got right in our faces," Maule said. "It felt like they followed us around everywhere."

Northview will be featured for more than 25 minutes during the two hour program, Yunk said.

"Schools must change because they mirror society," he said. "If divorce, drug abuse and child abuse are happening in society, these are the kids that are coming to school. We have kids that have experienced more in their first six or seven years of life than many adults have."

Technology milestone occurred with ion beam atomic collision

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

An ion beam traveling at 10 to 14 percent the speed of light and at a temperature of minus 272 degrees Celsius accelerated through the recently constructed superconducting linear accelerator (LINAC) for the first time Aug. 23.

"It was a major milestone, a major step in technology for the lab," said Tom Gray, professor of physics and associate director for laboratory operations at the J.R. Macdonald Laboratory.

The LINAC project has taken five years to complete and is designed for high velocity collisions.

The Cyrogenic Electron Beam Ion Source (CRYEBIS) has been operational for a year and a half, said Lew Cocke, professor of physics and associate director for research at the lab. The CRYEBIS is highly charged but low velocity collisions may be studied.

"There are only three labs in the U.S. with a CRYEBIS — K-State, Berkeley and Cornell," said Patrick Richard, distinguished professor of physics and director of the lab, "and a few outside the U.S. — Sweden, West Germany, France and the Soviet Union where the first CRYEBIS was built."

Richard said because an ion must be traveling at least 6 percent the speed of light to enter LINAC, the labs Van de Graaff tandem accelerator was recently upgraded from 6 million volts to 7.5 million volts. The tandem then provides intermediate velocity ion beams.

Part of the uniqueness of the J.R. Macdonald Laboratory is all three kinds of collisions — high, intermediate and low velocity are possible, said Tracy Tipping, research assistant at the lab.

"The facility is the largest of this type in the world totally dedicated to ion-atomic collision — right here in Kansas," Gray said.

Superconductor refers to the property of some elements to have zero resistance to electrical flow at very low temperatures. Richard said. Ions are accelerated in the LINAC by a series of 14 superconducting resonators.

"The constant reversal of polarity accelerates the charged ion," Richard said.

A superconducting resonator may be powered by about the same amount of electricity as a light bulb, he said.

"At room temperature, kilowatts would be needed," Richard said.

The accelerated ion beam passes through a thin foil or a gas. The debris created when an ion hits an atom is the focus of the research, Richard siad.

"It's like playing pool blindfolded and the balls have the ability to break apart," Gray said.

The voltage signals gathered by detectors are converted to numbers sent to a computer. It is through the computer that the results of the experiments are seen, said Richard.

The lab is funded by K-State and the U.S. Department of Energy.

Greenhouse effect studied in structures on campus

By Candace Plett
Collegian Reporter

It is the year 2050 inside climate-controlled chambers north of campus where sheep graze under huge canopies of clear plastic film.

The structures are being used by scientists to study how plants and animals might respond to rising levels of carbon dioxide in the environment, known as the greenhouse effect.

"Currently, we are studying changes in growth dynamics of plants and plant populations," said Clenton Owensby, K-State range management scientist. "In the future, we would like to do carbon balance studies to predict whether grasslands contribute to or reduce the greenhouse effect."

Based on initial results from a two-year experiment sponsored by the U.S. Department of Energy, Owensby said he believes that the native tallgrass prairie in this area would buffer the effects of the atmospheric change.

"A positive effect of the prairie is something we need to be aware of," he said. "The tallgrass prairie could be a valuable asset to us globally."

According to an international agency on climate change, the impacts of the greenhouse effect could include rising sea levels, higher temperatures and less annual precipitation. Owensby said plant populations would probably migrate to the north or northeast.

The University is one of two national locations where studies are being conducted on how an ecosystem is affected by climate changes. Various studies throughout the nation are examining the impact of higher carbon dioxide levels on individual plants or single-celled organisms, Owensby said.

One aim of Owensby's research is to determine the quality of vegetation in the simulated future environment by taking diet samples from sheep.

In conjunction with this research, Mary Beth Kirkham, professor of plant physiology, is conducting similar studies on plant growth in smaller chambers north of Denison and Kimball avenues.

"So far we have found that plants in the elevated carbon dioxide environment grew at

Soldiers fire on African blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Soldiers fired on thousands of angry blacks Tuesday, and rival gangs fought with axes, knives and spears. At least 40 people were killed in the township violence.

President F.W. de Klerk and African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela visited black townships near Johannesburg to call for a halt in fighting that has killed more than 550 people since Aug. 12.

The government has imposed emergency restrictions and sent elite army units to the townships, but fighting between Zulu followers of the conservative Inkatha movement and other blacks loyal to the ANC raged for a fourth week.

In Sebokeng, a pre-dawn clash killed four people at a migrant workers' hostel. The victims were believed to be township residents abducted by hostel dwellers.

88 die in Typhoon Abe storm

BEIJING (AP) — At least 88 people have died in two coastal provinces that were battered by Typhoon Abe, an official report said Tuesday.

Abe, which landed Friday in south Zhejiang province, rampaged through Shanghai, China's most populous city, then headed back out to sea Monday afternoon, the China Daily reported.

The death toll in Zhejiang now stands at 65, with 839 injured, 660,000 stranded by floods and 40,000 left homeless, the report said.

Half the province's land area and one-fourth of its population — or 10 million people — were affected by Typhoon Abe. It was reported to be the worst typhoon to hit the province in 34 years.

4-year-old boy kills policeman

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A 4-year-old boy shot to death a policeman who jokingly invited the youngster to demonstrate the use of his pistol, a government official said Tuesday.

The incident occurred Sunday when the officer, Somboon Jandpuchong, asked young Peerapong Suwannarin to bring his 11mm pistol as he was leaving the boy's house.

The policeman jokingly asked the boy to demonstrate the use of the pistol, and the youngster aimed at Somboon — pulling the trigger, said the provincial governor, Surat Thani.

Somboon was visiting the boy's father and had apparently laid his pistol on a bed while inside the house. The governor said the boy was not arrested.

Nation

Souter receives high rating

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Bar Association's judicial screening panel Tuesday gave Supreme Court nominee David H. Souter its highest rating for professional qualifications to sit on the nation's highest court.

The well-qualified rating is reserved for those who meet the highest standards of integrity, professional competence and judicial temperament, according to the guidebook followed by the 15-member Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary.

The committee vote was unanimous, the panel said in a letter to the Justice Department.

The rating is expected to give a boost to Souter's nomination, scheduled to be taken up Sept. 13 by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Still, Souter is expected to be questioned closely about his judicial philosophy, and senators are expected to try to probe his views on the landmark 1973 ruling that legalized abortion.

Investigators refute treatment

ATLANTA (AP) — A controversial AIDS treatment that involves heating patients' blood offers no benefits and shouldn't be repeated, federal investigators said Tuesday.

A team of researchers from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases concluded that two patients submitted to hyperthermia were neither cured nor significantly helped.

"Hyperthermia, as applied in these two cases, appears to have offered no clinical, immunologic or virologic benefits to these two patients," according to a summary of the team's findings, released by the institute.

There does not "appear any support for further human experimentation in this area at this time," the summary concluded. It didn't say whether the technique, tried by two Atlanta physicians, should be tested on animals.

Dr. Kenneth Alonso, one of the physicians who used the technique, characterized the team's findings as a "report that is replete with errors." The report was an attempt to try to discredit his findings, Alonso said in a letter sent to Dr. Lawrence Deyton, who headed the government investigation. "Apparently any work which does not fit your thesis is ignored," Alonso wrote in the letter, which he released to the Associated Press Tuesday.

The institute's report is the harshest official criticism yet of the hyperthermia treatments, which made national headlines and offered hope to thousands of AIDS sufferers as one patient pronounced himself cured.

Hyperthermia, commonly used to treat infections before the advent of antibiotics, is still used against some cancers.

Reservists to be get benefits

TOPEKA (AP) — The state will provide special benefits for government employees called for active military service, and reservists will be able to receive free help in drafting wills and other simple legal documents.

Gov. Mike Hayden issued an order Tuesday allowing government employees called to active duty to obtain salary advances and pay for accrued vacation time. Hayden directed the state Department of Administration to put into effect new personnel policies to help the military reservists.

Also Tuesday, the Kansas Bar Association unveiled its "Project Call-Up," under which the association will refer reservists to hometown attorneys for free help in drafting wills and power of attorney documents.

Both actions are in response to concerns about the needs of members of the Kansas National Guard and Reserve units who are called to duty because of the Persian Gulf crisis.

Hayden endures difficult flight

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden and his lieutenant governor running mate, Harland Priddle, had to skip one leg of their five-city campaign tour Tuesday after encountering plane trouble.

Hayden held a Statehouse news conference to make his initial statement, then flew to Wichita, Pittsburg and Olathe for additional news conferences in the afternoon.

They also planned to go from here to Garden City, but a problem with the front landing gear on the executive state airplane, a twin-engined King Air 300, forced Hayden to skip the Garden City leg of his tour.

The plane had just become airborne at Topeka when a problem was detected with the nose landing gear, Hayden said in an interview.

After circling the Topeka airport for nearly an hour, the problem was corrected and the plane landed safely. Hayden and Priddle then chartered another plane to get to Wichita.

Slattery banks on past record to ensure success in election

CAMPAIGN 1990
Jim Slattery (D)
2nd Congressional District

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery said he believes an incumbent has to run an campaign based on a previous record.

As the 2nd District Democrat enters the final two months of battle against Republican challenger Scott Morgan, Slattery said he feels his record speaks strongly in his favor.

"I feel very good about where we are," he said in reference to his campaign. "Throughout the last few months, I have attended a number of events and have been very warmly received everywhere."

Slattery hit the campaign trail hard this summer, attending county fairs and numerous press conferences around the 2nd District.

After returning to Washington, D.C., over Labor Day weekend, Slattery said he feels confident his constituents know him and where he stands on a number of issues.

"Our work has been appreciated throughout the eight years I have been representing the people of Kansas," he said.

Slattery said being informed on a variety of issues is a necessity for whoever represents the 2nd District. He said his work in education, health, farming and the environment has kept him from being a one-issue candidate.

He mentioned his sponsorship of a federal health bill and his fight to retain Haskell Indian Junior College in Lawrence as two of his triumphs. However, he said his commitment to fighting unneccesary government spending is something he will continue to do.

"One of my major priorities is to kill the B-2 bomber project, and I believe I have been successful," he said. "As a member of the budget committee, I also fought against President Ronald Reagan's education budget cuts."

On the issue of Fort Riley, Slattery accused Morgan of trying to force-feed farmland to the Army in a premature context. He said Morgan's accusations of not taking a stand on the issue were without merit.

"I have always said I support Fort Riley, and I think everybody knows that except my opponent," he said. "I am prepared to do whatever is neccessary to keep the 1st Infantry Division, and I will support expansion if it becomes neccessary."

Slattery said his work on the budget committee, which has invested about $200 million in the fort, and his visits with high-ranking officers in Washington were proof of

Officials tour area schools

By Dan Scott
Collegian Reporter

Five state senators visited the Manhattan-Ogden public schools Tuesday morning for a fact-finding tour about state-aided programs.

Senators Sheila Frahm, R-Colby; Fred Kerr, R-Pratt; Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan; Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha; and Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson attended the tour.

The tour was conducted to find information about the use of public money by schools and to see the problems created by money shortages.

"We expect to be voting on a number of important public education issues in upcoming legislative sessions," Dave Kerr said. "The visit to the Manhattan and Riley County schools will provide valuable information as the various education proposals are evaluated."

The senators wanted to see firsthand how the state money was being used, Oleen said.

"Particularly in the Senate, we have many legislators that do not have children in school anymore," Oleen said. "My role as a senator from this district is to raise the issue of education."

The senators were shown various programs at the elementary, middle and high school level. The senators also ate the school breakfast and lunch at their own expense.

Superintendent Jack Hobbs, who led the tour, said the senators' visit was a success.

"We thought it went quite well," Hobbs said. "We tried to concentrate on showing the successes of the special programs that were funded by special legislation

Hotel sign gains approval

City Commission also authorizes park cabin lease

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

The University Inn, soon to be renamed the Ramada Inn, received permission from the City Commission Tuesday to add a new sign for its restaurant.

The rest of the renovation plans had already been approved by the commission in July when the plan for the sign was not yet completed, said Jerry Petty, assistant city manager, after the commission meeting.

The awning sign will read "Memories: A Fine Dining Establishment" and will be placed outside the north entrance of the hotel. This will be the main entrance to the restaurant, said Philip Brokenicky of the First Bank, which owns the hotel.

The sign will probably be put up today, Brokenicky added.

He also said ownership and management will remain the same.

Brokenicky predicted that the name of the hotel, located at 17th Street and Anderson Ave., would actually change sometime this month.

"Ramada needs to do a final inspection of the hotel. As soon as the final inspection is made, which should be within the next few weeks, the new sign will be put up," he said.

The hotel was named Ramada Inn about five years ago, before it was renamed University Inn, he said.

The commission also authorized the city to lease the Goodnow Park Cabin to the newly formed Goodnow Park Cabin Coalition, Inc., designed to preserve the structure.

The coalition was formed by concerned private citizens in the city, said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager.

A special committee was formed almost a year ago to study the cabin and determine if it should be named a historic structure. It was decided to merely preserve it and protect it from the nearby water treatment plant, which may want to expand in the future, Pearson said.

At first, no organizations with adequate resources showed interest in the preservation, he said, which was how the coalition was formed.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL

Education should always have top priority

Our campus has been stirred, and the administrators, professors and students are wiggling in their seats. Our administrators have been "strategically planning" to "merge or eliminate departments and faculty positions." But the future process of instituting these "internal reallocation measures" went unannounced to this academic community until the Wichita Eagle spilled the beans, someone's beans. But now this announcement is soon to be made by Wefald, Coffman and other administrators at an open forum on September 11. The purpose of the meeting is to introduce the Strategic Plan's reorganization process and for purposes of involving faculty in the monumental task of reorganization.

The bottom line when analyzing their decisions, when analyzing the quality of the University, must be priorities. Obviously, education is not a priority at the state level, for full funding of the third year of the Margin of Excellence has been lost. Thus the dilemma the administrators face, with the lack of funding and the need to maintain a competitive profile, is understandable. But ambiguity does exist in how quality is and will be defined.

I don't intend to assume the position of pointing fingers, neither at the faculty or the administration or the students; it seems that each level of this University is watched over by another level, that must be satisfied and appeased; and this stifles the educational process. But I do have three questions that need to be answered: Why were the faculty not informed first, but instead, became aware of these dramatic changes upon reading the newspaper? Wefald intends to maintain the quality of the University, but exactly how is quality defined, and to whose benefit? And, why weren't students involved in this process?

The quality of this University will be sacrificed if money for the "weaker programs" is redistributed into the budgets of the "stronger programs." Targeting University programs such as Agriculture, Engineering and Veterinary School will create a University without a diversity of classes, perspectives, students and ideas. Integral programs such as, philosophy, women's studies and ethnic studies, while small, promote and provide such a diversity of thought, of culture, of the individual; and these programs are vulnerable, are apt to be consolidated or eliminated.

I have to keep reminding myself that the faculty and administrators are here because of and for the students. The students provide the vocation that provides the faculty with their source of income, responsibility, purpose and security. And this is why I ask for students to be involved.

Jana Leep

But then, the student population at K-State does not have a united voice, or an interested and alert stance in campus issues. Issues such as consolidation may not seem as pertinent, as immediate because by the time implementation occurs, most of us will be elsewhere. The temporary nature of college life does not lend itself to long term commitments to the betterment of academic life.

But also, as a student, I continue to hear that I must learn to play the the "political games of academia" in order to speak, to voice, to insist on my education. This is tiring. Do we have to continue to trust the status quo? From what I have observed, the academic world is far from ideal, in fact, is a battleground, on which battles for publication, for permission, for privilege, for tenure, for budget allocations and now for departmental legitimacy, are fought, won and lost. I empathize with professors, for they are placed in a powerless position as educators without the resources, the energy, the administrative trust and support needed to educate.

Students don't receive the type of education they deserve, they want, when professors are distracted with such pressures and political campus issues. And students won't receive a better quality of education if much of the University programs are shaved down.

But then again, Wefald eased our minds when he said that the College of Arts and Sciences would not be sacrificed. Yet, what exactly would remain? The trends tell me that the College of Arts and Sciences would exist for the sole purpose of providing the compulsory classes for graduation. Such required, elementary classes do not provide the context, or breadth of knowledge for adequate communication, writing and thinking skills. The exploration that thrives within the humanities and social sciences would be sacrificed for the benefit of the technical sciences, the sciences that are marketable, that sustain our technological society.

Upon entering this University, I naively assumed that students and faculty all had the same goal — that of education and that of applying knowledge for the betterment of our lives. I have learned that the academic life is much more complex, much more political, much less ideal than what I believed. And thus as a student, I ask other students to not back away from this issue either. The administration needs student input. The administration is tinkering with a system that prepares students to think critically, to deal with the issues and realities of the world outside the campus.

I have been enriched by the diversity of campus life and the community. I would hate that future Kansas students would not have the choices that I did, or the opportunities to explore disciplines, people and ideas which brought new perspectives to my eyes.

K-State students need to voice their opinions

In the wake of some rather nasty funding cuts, K-State is about to restructure itself.

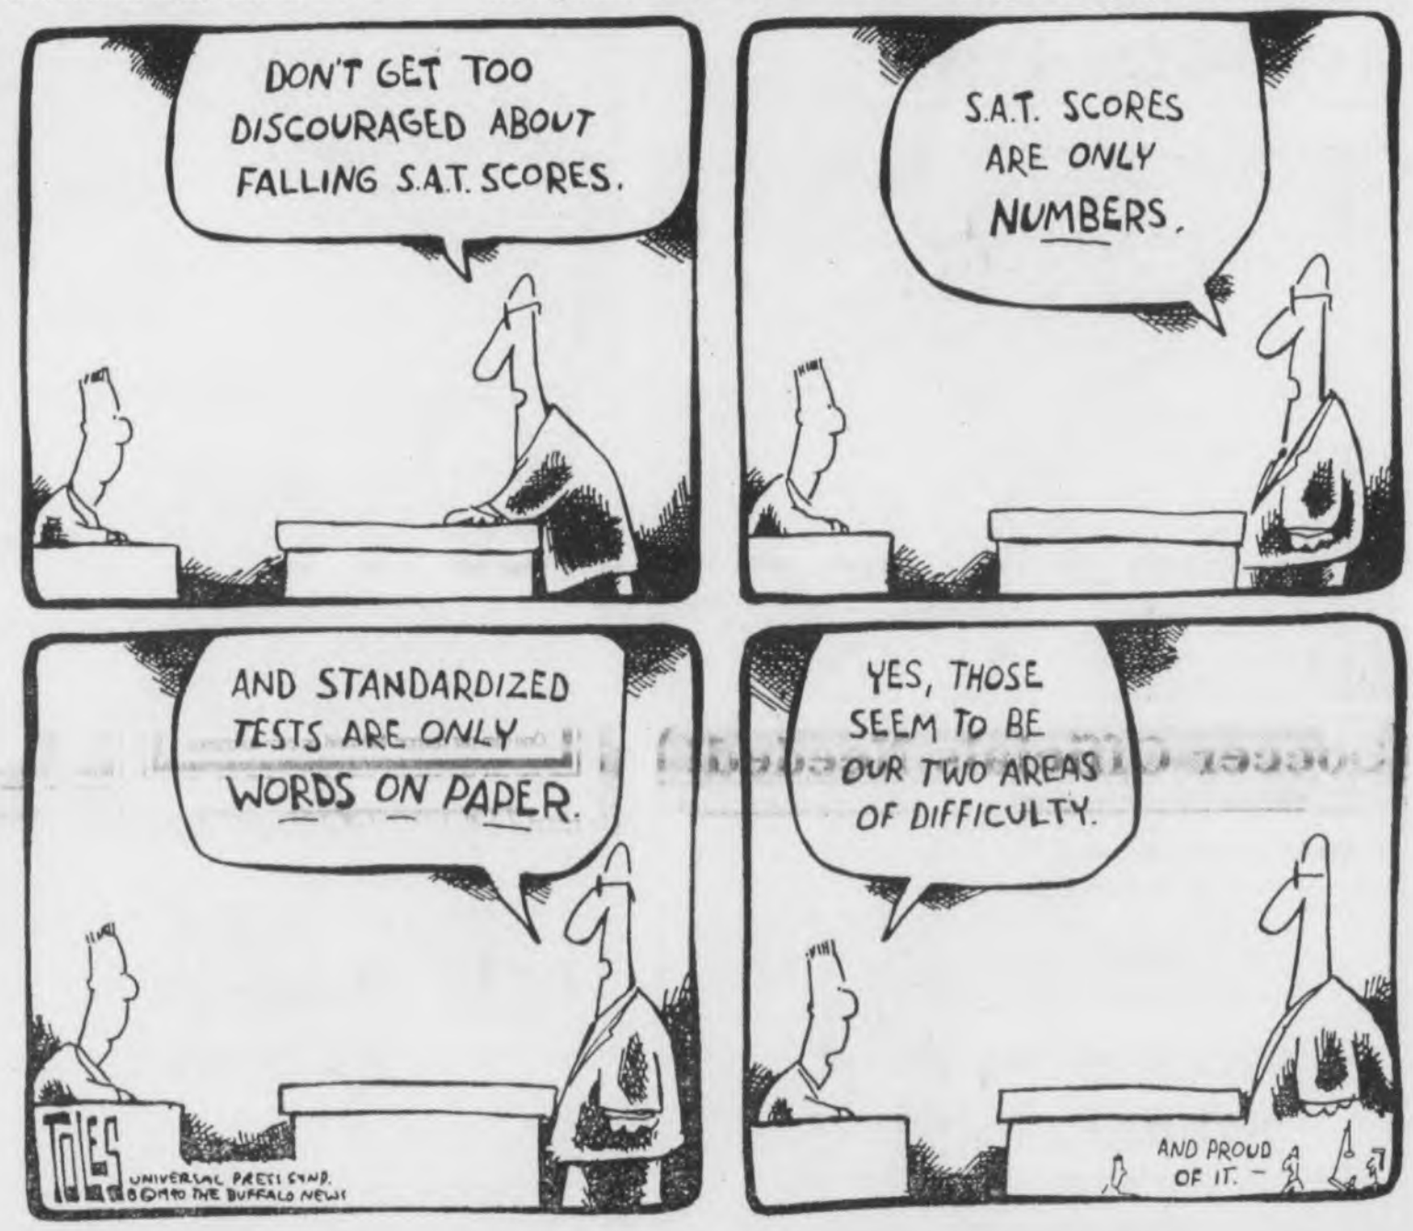
A strategic plan for the University has been in the works since 1986, but recent cuts have forced administrators to speed up internal reallocations. The administration has decided it is time to trim off the fat.

"We can't be all things to all people," President Jon Wefald was quoted as saying in the Wichita Eagle. "Every university should be doing this."

K-State has begun the latest higher education fad.

It should be of great concern to students that much of this restructuring may be done with little input from them.

Only one student has been attending the Strategic Planning meetings. That lone student has been charged with the solemn duty of representing all students by telling the administration what is on our collective mind.



That person is Student Body President Todd Johnson. It is important for students to note Johnson's title is not student brain president. He cannot read our minds. We must make our opinions, concerns and thoughts about reorganization known to him.

Though it is uncertain as to which specific programs, departments and positions may be merged or eliminated, it is almost certain that every student will somehow feel the effects of reorganization.

In the coming months, we will hear a lot about the future and the mission of the University. We must keep in mind it is our University. It exists for us, the students.

The only formal means we have to express our will to the administration is through the student body president. Informal means, however, can be just as effective. Talk to your student senators, write letters to the Collegian, write letters to the administrators. Let them know students care about the University's future.

The time to make a statement is now, not after programs have been cut and funds have been reallocated.

Students idealistic

Editor,

One would hope a higher education broadens a student's mind. This brings not only assimilation of knowledge, but hopefully, an increased ability to reason on a higher level. The ability to understand a problem, discuss it and propose practical solutions should be a basic goal of all people.

This is especially true of college students. Editors and columnists of a student newspaper, even more so, have an obligation to pursue this goal. However, I think that too often many people, especially college students, tend to be over-idealistic at the expense of real world practicality. Some of the Collegian editorial pages I have seen are examples of this.

I refer specifically to Brad Seabourn's column "More Diplomacy Needed" (Wednesday, Aug. 29). No one, including me, likes what is going on in the Middle East. However, the American nation does not have a "predisposition for killing." Our involvement is not an aggressive move, but a necessary response to a potentially widespread problem.

Life would be wonderful if we all could sit back and not worry about what happens across the globe. This, however, is not practical. There can be no denying what the Saddam Husseins of the world would do if their incursions into neighboring countries went unchecked.

I wonder what Seabourn would say if not one country, including America, made a military stand against Iraq, and he was soon unable to drive, be warm or generally live in our fossil-fuel-dependent society or, at least, be forced to pay ridiculously inflated (even more so than now) prices.

Diplomacy is usually the first and better option in many conflicts. However, does he really believe that talking to Hussein would have caused him to pull out of Kuwait and prevented him from moving into Saudi Arabia? No reasonable person could think so.

A refusal to see the seriousness of the situation and the necessity for an immediate military response is a dangerous blindspot. Seabourn came up with no practical solution to the problem. Hussein and George Bush at 10 paces is all he had to offer. Unfortunately, the only practical solution is the current one.

Ideally, things like this would not happen, and, if they did, they could be solved by diplomacy. However, this is the real world. The Husseins want it all, and diplomacy is no deterrent. As Nietzsche says in a favorite quote of mine, "All idealism is falsehood in the face of necessity." The current U.S. and world reaction is necessary and proper. The military stand halted further aggressions, and diplomacy is now being used to diffuse the situation.

It is absolutely proper to have ideals and strive to make the world a better place. It is absolutely dangerous to let an over-inflated idealism prevent the taking of necessary, practical steps. I am by no means a fan of this administration or Congress or the use of military force. However, I believe President Bush and his world peers took the only possible road to stopping Iraqi expansionism.

Refugees need aid

Editor,

Somewhere in the Middle East, somewhere between the Desert Shield and the human shields, a tragedy of potentially enormous and totally senseless proportions is quietly unfolding.

In the country of Jordan, more than 100,000 refugees from developing countries are waiting to return to their homelands. They are stranded in the desert, bitten by scorpions, broiling in the sun, lacking food and water, protecting children and even small infants, struggling to keep them alive from the scourges of starvation, dehydration and disease. They have no shade, no money, and few people in the Western world have been thinking of them over the past few weeks. These are the people caught in the crossfire from the Persian Gulf crisis.

According to a story printed in the Los Angeles Times and reprinted in the Tuesday Kansas City Times, this is only the tip of the iceberg. "By every indication, hundreds of thousands of Asians are still waiting to come, fleeing from the expatriate communities in Kuwait and Iraq that totaled 2 million before Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait ... about $150 million is promised by individual countries and international relief agencies.

Too little has arrived so far to have any effect on the suffering in the desert, and relief officials begged the international community to provide more."

Many students and faculty at K-State have different opinions about this crisis, I am sure. Some are patriotically backing the deployment. Some are cynically mocking it. Some are distressed at the uneven sense of international justice applied to the Kuwait invasion and the occupied territories. Most are praying for the safe return of Western hostages and that there won't be a war. Many are repulsed by Saddam Hussein, perhaps some are not. But no matter what your view on the overall situation, no one can doubt the plight of these innocent people. Few would not wish to lend a hand.

There is now an account at the K-State Credit Union called "Middle East International Response," which is set up to collect donations on behalf of the American Red Cross. Checks are payable to the American Red Cross, but must be earmarked in the memo space "Middle East International Response" to make sure this money goes to help the refugees. The account has been set up for the convenience of K-Staters.

If stopping at the credit union is inconvenient, or you wish to donate to the Red Cross directly, write and earmark the checks the same way as above, but send them to the Riley County American Red Cross, 411 North 3rd Street, Manhattan, KS, 66502. Beryl Adams, executive director of the Riley County Red Cross, said the checks received here will be forwarded to the national office and then to the Red Cross in Jordan, where they can help these people.

Please consider stopping at the credit union to make a donation to this account soon — during the next week, if possible. All funds will be turned over to the local Red Cross in a week, and the account will be closed. Time is short. Your dollars could save lives now. Thank you for your time and attention.

Recreational courses offered to community

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

The Community Enrichment Program of the Division of Continuing Education offers classes for all ages of the community year-round using the resources at K-State.

"The goal of Community Enrichment Programs is to provide the surrounding community with educational and recreational opportunities for all ages utilizing the Kansas State University facilities," said David Saueressig, administrator for Division of Continuing Education.

Several classes are offered for credit at the option of the participant. These classes include guitar, scuba diving, windsurfing, piano and horsemanship.

"We're looking forward to offering an option/credit sign language program in the spring of 1991," said Saueressig.

Currently the University does not offer a sign language class to students because it did not have enough money to offer the class, said Harold Nichols, department head for speech.

The sign language class offered by the University was not meeting enough hours to be given credit, he said.

"We look to keep on offering programs when the need arises in the community," Saueressig said.

Of the approximate 5,000 participants, about 40 percent are K-State students, Saueressig said.

There are over 100 instructors and coordinators. Most of them are students, Saueressig said. Many instructors are found by advertising on campus at the Union Job Board. Others sign up during registration. Many of the credit classes are contracted out for instructors.

Some classes offered to children include swimming, gymnastics, judo, art institute and summer adventure. Adults can take classes in computers, sign language, tennis, windsurfing, scuba diving, swimming, music lessons, horsemanship, trapshooting and tae kwon do. Arthritis classes are offered for senior adults.

"We would like to be offering more senior citizen programs in the future," Saueressig said.

The self-supporting program is limited by space and time. The fees for the classes pay for the teachers' salaries and any equipment or supplies used, Saueressig said. Fees are the same for K-State students and community members.

Some projects on the drawing board are the Genesis Learning Program which is geared towards ages six months to a year, and the Kaleidoscope of Adult Learning Program, which involves a series of changing needs adults may experience throughout their lifetime.

These projects require a lot of research, surveys and determinations of goals and objectives before they can be considered further, Saueressig said.

Campus unity promoted

Awareness week planned in October

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

Through increased cultural awareness and involvement, organizers of the Racial Ethnic Harmony Week hope to foster an environment in which all students feel comfortable. "Choose Unity by Celebrating Diversity" is the theme for this year's Harmony Week, scheduled for Oct. 8-12.

"I think the fact that we are having a second week is an indication of the measure of success of last year," said Andrew Cordero, co-chairman of the 1990 Racial Ethnic Harmony Week.

"I think there was apprehension as to what we were trying to accomplish last year," Cordero said.

He stresses the idea of increasing awareness of various cultures is not to emphasize differences but rather to recognize common traits. He said he hopes for increased participation throughout the student body this year.

Kicking off the week will be a presentation and workshop given by the New York Anti-Defamation League President Caryl Stern. The program entitled "A Campus of Difference" is aimed at combating prejudice and discrimination on college and university campuses.

The workshop will include a Cultural Self-Knowledge Exam to assist participants in recognizing what they do not know about other cultures as well as Cultural Simulation Exercises which help participants experience and observe cross-cultural interaction.

Among the week's activities will be a lecture on how interracial relationships are portrayed in country western music and an exploration of various religions. Dr. Julienne Earls of the NASA Lewis Research Center will speak on the final day.

K-State is one of many universities in the United States that is recognizing an increase in ethnic, religious and racial tensions on campuses.

The Center for Immigration Studies reports 30 percent of the total college-youth in the 1990's will be representatives of what has traditionally been referred to as "minorities." In the competition for applicants, colleges and universities will need to

Linebackers among Big 8's youngest

Barta, Patterson, Boone, Veatch among those cutting teeth on field

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Linebackers

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

In most college football programs, Brooks Barta and Chris Patterson would have been apprentices last season. Freshmen linebackers with starting jobs are a rare breed.

As sophomores, the tandem will enter Saturday's opener against Western Illinois as young veterans.

"I definitely learned a lot playing back there last season," said Barta, who set a K-State freshman record with 81 tackles in 10 games last season. "It was difficult learning a new system, but I think we were more comfortable with it as the season progressed."

Barta was chosen as the Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year by the Associated Press in 1989. The Smith Center native had three double-figure tackle games, including 19 against Northern Illinois. He missed the Oklahoma game with a groin pull.

"Our biggest disadvantage was that we weren't physically where we needed to be," Barta said. "I don't suppose it's any different with any other team, but we had a lot of bumps and bruises as the season went along."

Patterson, who started in six games, finished the year with 71 tackles. Despite battling injuries, he was second on the team with 38 solo stops and posted a season-high 15 tackles against Kansas.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said Barta and Patterson are being pushed by three-year letterman James Enin-Okut. Enin-Okut is the veteran of the linebacking corps by far, having played in 26 games during his career. He posted a career high in tackles with 11 against Northern Illinois last season during one of his three starts.

Enin-Okut was listed as a backup to Barta heading into the final week of preseason drills.

"Those kids logged a lot of the playing time, and that should help us heading into this season," Snyder said. "We have the experience there, but we certainly have some improvements to make in that area."

The improvements could come with some added depth at the position. Patterson's backup is Joe Boone, a 6-foot-1, 210 pound junior, who took advantage of injuries to K-State's top three linebackers last season at Oklahoma to turn in a legendary performance.

Boone, a walk-on transfer from Coffeyville Community College, entered the game midway through the first quarter against the Sooners after injuries sidelined Patterson and Matt Hennesy. The Shawnee native responded with 12 tackles, including 11 unassisted stops, and was the 'Cats' nominee for Big Eight player of the week honors.

Boone was not on K-State's preseason roster.

"You talk about coming out of nowhere, and Joe Boone did it," Snyder said. "He performed very well for us and should really help us this year."

Newcomer Laird Veatch could also see playing time this year. The Manhattan High standout had 117 tackles as a senior in leading the Indians to a Class 6A runner-up finish.

"We knew that Laird was going to be a quality player coming in, but just how soon we didn't know," Snyder said. "He possesses a great affinity for the ballgame, and really picks up things quickly."

Snyder said the battle for starting spots could go on until the season opener.

"We're just uncertain right now," Snyder said. "I believe they've all come along quite well. They are all playing relatively comparable."

Cross country team deserves respect

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

In the fall, questions arise as to whether the football team will improve on its one win last year.

During the winter, all attention is drawn toward the traditional basketball power K-State possesses.

And in the spring, the popularity of baseball has grown to where K-State set a state record for attendance against Wichita State University last year.

I know these are the sports most colleges emphasize, but what about the sports that are reaching national caliber success without the record crowds.

I believe it is time some of these sports receive the recognition they deserve.

Almost every student realizes when the football or basketball team wins or loses, but how many of you know when the cross country team captures a meet title or places at the national meet?

While sports like football and basketball are running away with the majority of press coverage, Coach John Capriotti has quietly built one of the strongest cross country programs in the Big Eight. Just watch what the stats have to say.

With the women harriers leading the way, K-State has placed third or better every year in the last decade except once, when they placed fourth. Last season, they continued their streak by capturing third place.

The women were also consistently ranked in the top 10 in the nation last year and placed 20th at the NCAA Championships. They would have placed considerably higher had No. 2 and No. 3 runners Angie Barry and Janet Treiber not fallen at the start.

The men have also had their share of success in a strong Big Eight Conference, which boasts last year's NCAA champion Iowa State. The men's team is second on the all-time Big Eight championships list with 11, behind only cross-state rival Kansas.

And Capriotti has said this year's men's team could be one of the best ever.

Now for those of you who don't realize what kind of a person it takes to be a conference- or nationally-recognized runner, let me try to explain it to you.

Have any of you ever thought of dedicating your life to running? Now, before you answer, this commitment would mean eliminating many weekend nights in Aggeville to prepare for a five-mile race for men or a five-kilometer race for women.

It would not be one of the easiest steps to take. I can vouch for that, after trading in my high school running attire for the more relaxed atmosphere of intramurals.

Cross country takes dedication as strong as is found in any other sport, as well as inborn running ability.

It is this dedication that separates champions from everyday runners. Would you be willing to run every day, sometimes twice a day, adding up to as many as 50 to 70 miles per week, combined with interval training three times a week?

That is what it takes to be a cross-country runner.

I know it is sometimes hard to be a spectator at the meets, which are usually quite a distance from home. I am not asking you to drive all over the country for the team.

But when you see the team practicing or see a team member on campus, think about the name they have given to K-State cross country and give them the congratulations they greatly deserve.

Volleyball team continues early-season dominance

From Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The K-State volleyball team continued its early-season dominance over non-conference foes with a three-game victory over UMKC Tuesday night.

The match, which lasted just 56 minutes, was won by the Wildcats 15-4, 15-9, 15-13.

Freshman setter Amy Carlson led K-State while on the floor in games two and three. She recorded 16 sets and four digs during those games.

Fellow freshman Melissa Berkley led the Wildcats in kills with six. Three other K-State players had five kills each.

K-State continued to hit at a percentage. The Wildcats hit .338 as a team against the Kangaroos, while limiting the hosts to a .109 hitting mark.

The Wildcats, in contrast, hit just .198 last season. K-State has held each of its three non-conference foes in 1990 to a percentage below .200.

The win raised K-State's record to 3-0. The Wildcats last opened a season with three consecutive victories in 1988. UMKC fell to 0-1.

K-State is idle until Saturday, when it travels to Springfield, Mo., to participate in the Southwest Missouri State University September Classic. The host school and Minnesota will provide the opposition.

Program helps ex-athletes

'Second Wind' gives chance to get degree while off-campus

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Each year, many college athletes finish their eligibility and leave school without receiving a degree. Some pursue opportunities to become professional athletes. Some look to other financial opportunities. Still others are disillusioned by or uninterested in the prospect of receiving a degree.

Of these athletes, some find success in spite of not having a degree. Many, however, encounter closed doors without the training and marketability that a degree affords.

Some find themselves regretting their choice to leave school without completing their education.

At K-State, the Division of Continuing Education and the KSU Department of Intercollegiate Athletics have jointly developed a program to give such former student-athletes another chance.

Second Wind, organized by the Non-Traditional Study program in the Division of Continuing Education, allows former student-athletes to resume their studies without requiring them to return to campus.

"Second Wind is part of K-State's outreach mission," said Cynthia Trent, coordinator of the Non-Traditional Study program. "We're trying to find former KSU student-athletes to invite them to complete their education."

Two success stories are already credited to Second Wind, though the program is only in its second year of development. Two former K-State football standouts, Isaac Jackson and Tim Stone, received degrees last May.

Jackson, K-State's all-time leading rusher, left school in 1973 for an offer to play professional football. His career never materialized, however, and Jackson wound up working in Denver. Now, 17 years later, Jackson has a degree in social sciences because he completed his education through Second Wind.

"I knew getting a degree was something I wanted to do, but I didn't know how to get back to school until they told me about this program," Jackson said in an article that appeared in "Sidelines," the magazine of the College Football Association. "I feel I've accomplished something, and I feel a lot better about myself."

Stone, an offensive lineman in the early '80s, left K-State in 1986 for the NFL, spending the next few seasons with the Los Angeles Raiders, Kansas City Chiefs and Cincinnati Bengals.

Upon retiring from football, Stone resumed his studies through Second Wind and earned a degree in criminology and sociology.

The Second Wind program reaches former K-State athletes who live in various parts of the country. Through such tools as community-based outreach courses, audio and video taped courses and correspondence courses, Second Wind can help former athletes earn a degree from the University without returning to Manhattan.

This makes Second Wind different from programs provided by other universities, which typically bring former athletes back to campus, Trent said.

"Other things get in the way of a former student returning to school," Trent said. "A lot of these people have families, jobs, civic commitments. That's the whole idea, to not uproot them from their lives in order to complete their degree programs."

Trent said Second Wind was the Non-Traditional Study program's first effort to reach former students living outside the state. The department hopes to expand to provide a similar program to all former students in the future, she said.

Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director in charge of academic assistance, works as a catalyst to the program, making contact with perspective participants.

"Very few of the participants are unemployed, but some have not been satisfied or are not employed in the area where their interests lie," Switzer said. "In spite of not having degrees, there are some you find who are successful, but often they realize they could put a degree to work to enhance their upward mobility and status."

Switzer said the program is concentrating on contacting athletes from the past 10 years who left school with a 2.0 grade point average. Some former athletes with GPA's just below 2.0 or who left school prior to 1980 can also receive consideration.

"It's hard to believe," he said. "We've gone back up to 14 years and found students only six to 10 hours short of a degree, but often they find it difficult getting back into the university setting."

The development of Second Wind began when the athletic department approached the Non-Traditional Study advisory committee about in-

Hall rooms vacant; apartments filled

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

Enrollment is up and off-campus housing is nearly full, yet K-State's residence halls still have 200 available spaces.

The large amount of available space contrasts to the last year's overflowing residence halls. Typically, the residence halls have 100 vacancies, said Bob Burgess, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

"A smaller freshman class is what we see as the main reason for the spaces," Burgess said.

The decrease in freshman is attributed to a 6 percent decline in high school graduates in Kansas this past spring, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life.

"This is a trend that the United States will see over the next three to five years," Bosco said. "We are projecting over the next several years smaller freshman classes and smaller enrollment."

Bosco said the housing situation is understandable with the decline in freshmen.

"A majority of the freshman are our major tenants," Bosco said. "Right now, we have a bulge in the system for the previous four years of growth because older students are leaving the residence halls and moving into apartments."

Burgess and Bosco agree the shortage of residents won't hurt the housing and dining services financially.

"Vacant space is anticipated every year and considered when budgets are figured," Burgess said.

Strategic Plan ideas being sought

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

Students and faculty members can help administrators with the Strategic Plan with which the University will be reorganized.

Student Body President Todd Johnson, who is a member of the Strategic Plan Committee, said members of the University community can tell the Student Governing Association their ideas on how to improve the plan.

"I would anticipate having a couple of student forms," Johnson said. "We had, until now, well over 100 proposals from administrators and faculty members from different areas of the University."

Johnson said that after the committee received the proposals, it broke down into separate committees to set priorities for different University programs.

He said the committee came up with five themes or goals for the University:

- Enhance graduate and research programs.
- Establish a common intellectual basis for graduates.
- Enhance economic development and protection of the environment.
- Respond to needs and circumstances of diverse groups.
- Increase international emphasis.

Provost James Coffman said every individual's ideas that might help the program are welcomed.

"We need access to the opinion of the students based upon their experiences in K-State," Coffman said.

Student government will probably provide a vehicle in the planning process to get access to students' opinions, he said. The first step in this process took place Aug. 30 at the first Student Senate meeting.

The plan directly affects faculty members, as well as students.

> "We need access to the opinion of the students based upon their experiences in K-State.

> —James Coffman
> University Provost

"The faculty members can help by providing their ideas so that we can benefit from their experience," Coffman said.

He said the formal vehicles for increasing faculty involvement are the Faculty Senate, Faculty Senate leadership and the faculty representation of the Strategic Planning Committee.

The Strategic Plan should last no more than five years, and many things will change. Some people will not be here in a few years, Johnson said.

"I'm not going to be here forever," he said.

Johnson said until now, the University has kept things much the same, but since times change, some things should also change.

Strecker Gallery to display professor's art

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

Judy Love, assistant professor in art, will have her pastel drawings on display at Strecker Art Gallery starting Friday. The showing is called "of the prairie" and will continue through September.

Love uses color to add meaning to Kansas landscapes

By Rob Batchman
Collegian Reporter

Judy Love's fingers do the walking.

Love, assistant professor of art, creates prairie scenes. The Manhattan artist has developed her techniques into an artistic style that uses colors to add meaning to Kansas landscapes.

"One of my major intentions is to raise the awareness of how beautiful the land is," Love said. "I have always been intrigued with color. I really like the vividness of color, the intensity and the subtleness of it. I have looked at landscapes all my life, and they are absolutely beautiful."

Love's work will be on display starting Friday at Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave.

To create her paintings, Love uses pastel drawing sticks in much the same way a crayon is used.

Julie Strecker, owner of Strecker Gallery, said Love uses her fingers as a means of creating her work.

"Essentially, pastels are called paintings, even though they are more like drawings, because you use a stick of chalk," Strecker said. "The normal way of using them is like a crayon, and to actually draw the picture. But Judy uses it more as a paint medium, because she uses her fingers as a paintbrush and rubs the color in."

Love paints abstractions of the Flint Hills and the surrounding Manhattan area. Ideas for many of Love's pastels come from natural scenes she sees while traveling on the highway. Many of these scenes, she said, often catch her by surprise.

"I have drawings on the back of envelopes, on the back of letters and on the back of my checkbook," she said. "I grab a pencil and draw on whatever is there at the time. I do a line drawing and write myself some notes. It's usually no more than a four- to five-minute sketch. Later, I just pick up the drawing and work from that. It's like I replay the image in my mind.

"I'm after the feeling of the landscape," Love said. "The feeling in the painting is more important than the image of what it is."

"Of the Prarie" is the title of Love's showing at Strecker Gallery. The show is a collection of pastels from the past two years, and the paintings range from abstract features seen from the highway to paintings of the landscape outside her window.

"Twelve to 15 paintings should be on display at the showing," Strecker said. "Most are scenes of the prairie that we've all witnessed ourselves. They are paintings of places and of times of day we're all familiar with. Judy brings the color into the prairie and makes it alive."

Love said she considers herself just to be starting out in the area of discovering her talents.

"I am excited about what I have become, but I don't feel I'm at the top level of my abilities yet," she said.

"I think of Judy as a mid-career blossom," Strecker said. "Her desire to work with pastels was the turning point in her career. She has something very important to offer to the public. She helps us to see our everyday scenes in a different perspective."

Love said she has been working with pastels for about two years. Before that, her main interest was in weaving. Because of the low demand for woven art, she decided to try painting with pastels.

"To me, weaving was not practical," Love said. "With painting, I can put the same intensity into my work and get a better return."

Love said she enjoys the challenge and variety of pastels.

"What's important about my art is the act of creating," Love said. "I am very happy playing with pastels. When I'm finished, it's done, and then I'm excited about the next one."

This will be Love's first one-person showing of her pastels. Strecker said she believes Love is ready for the exposure.

"I think it's really important that artists get exposure, and the only way to get exposure is to enter shows," she said.

Love is on sabbatical this year from K-State and plans to use the time for both traveling and working.

"A sabbatical is a learning experience," she said. "It's a chance to concentrate on my own personal work and to get a lot more painting done. I am planning to go to San Francisco, Chicago and New York to visit art and natural history museums. I want to do a lot of drawing and gathering ideas. Then when I'm back, I'd like to focus on my painting."

Campus lectures offer diverse viewpoints

Many experts come to K-State to participate in Convocation, Lou Douglas, Landon series'

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

K-State's three University lecture series, which begin in the next two months, all have a tradition of presenting perspectives on public issues to the community.

The University offers the Convocation, Landon and Lou Douglas lecture series.

The Convocation Lecture Series, the University's oldest lecture series, was founded in the 1940s, said Joseph Hajda, professor of political science and series coordinator.

"The Convocation's lectures had a public affairs emphasis back then," Hajda said.

Since both the Landon and Lou Douglas lectures are concerned with public affairs and policy, the Convocation lecture committee tries to address issues from a variety of disciplinary perspectives that are of importance, said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture and chairman of the committee.

Convocation speakers are selected by a University-wide committee, which includes two members from the Manhattan community and three students, Kremer said. The Convocation lectures are almost entirely funded by the University.

The first lecture of the year will be co-sponsored by the Mark Enloe Lectureship, said Robert Robel, professor of biology and coordinator of the lectureship. The reputation of the series for relevant topics and the quality of past speakers attracts potential speakers, he said.

The Convocation and Lou Douglas lectures are scheduled to begin in September, but the Landon series' first lecture is tenatively scheduled for late October.

The prestige of the Landon Lectures grew from Alfred M. Landon's political position and the commitment to the series by former K-State President James McCain, Hajda said.

Landon was the Kansas governor from 1933-37 and the Republican candidate for president in 1936. The lecture series was inaugurated in 1966 by McCain, and Landon presented the first lecture.

"The Landon Lectures are completely funded by patrons," said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lectures. "No University funds are used for the series."

Reagan said he discusses potential speakers with Sen. Nancy Kassebaum and K-State President Jon Wefald. When a selection has been made, an invitation is sent, and some speakers are contacted personally.

"Nancy Kassebaum asked Ted Kennedy at the Senate," Reagan said, "and Congressman Jim Slattery helped get Tip O'Neill."

The Lou Douglas Lecture series, is in its 10th year. Sponsored by UFM, the series was founded to honor the memory of Lou Douglas, former professor of political science and one of the founders of UFM.

"The people on the committee are just like Lou was, they listen to the gray areas — they're open-minded," said Douglas' wife, Mary.

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series was created to address social issues and current events, said Sue Maas, former director of UFM.

The series is funded by private donations, various organizations on- and off-campus and sponsoring departments, said Karen McCulloh, coordinator for the lectures. The lecture committee consists of University and community members.

Mould's vocals, guitar enhance album

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Bob Mould's new release "Black Sheets of Rain" is reminiscent of his Husker Du days, with a full and completely harsh sound, but without the strong guitar that marked his solo debut "Workbook."

"Black Sheets of Rain" is filled with powerful guitar riffs and Mould's deep wailing vocals, creating a rich blend of intriguing rhyme schemes amidst heavy melodies.

It is difficult to tell whether Mould's main concern is the environment or broken relationships. He uses and abuses metaphors to enhance the lyrics with overwhelming symbolism.

In "Stop Your Crying," symbols and realities are magnificently confused: "I guess I never wanted to crash in the wave of your emotion/I walked away from all of the trash looking for a perfect ocean."

The best songs on the album is "The Last Night," which sounds more acoustic and folky than the rest. Mould loses some of the gruffness of his rock'n'roll vocals and adds some keyboard to create a song filled with tough emotions.

The second best song is "Out of Your Life," with an enchanting mix and the best guitar solo — not to mention the intensity of the lyrics, which probe deeply into relationship pretenses.

The third best song is "Hanging Tree," which ends dramatically with a heavy guitar riff following the best lyric line of the album: "Is there a place for those of us who don't belong? I haven't found it yet."

COLLEGIAN Report Card
"BLACK SHEETS OF RAIN"
A

The final song on the album, "Sacrifice/Let There Be Peace," is disturbing because Mould exposes himself entirely. He lays out his gut-wrenching emotions along with the strength of everything in which he believes and for which he is willing to die.

The vocals in this song are so raspy that it seems Mould is actually being sacrificed for the peace about which he sings. Mould commands a lot of respect for the stance he is willing to take against environmental pollution and the disintegration of relationships. The lyrics, "Sacrifice me, let there be peace," suggest a sort of allegory that we understand as the ultimate resolution about which Mould can only sing.

The strong point of the album is the theme of bitter disappointment in both environmental concerns and interpersonal relationships.

Of course, the guitar is one of the best parts of the album — even though I kept wishing for more than I got, which was good. In fact, I just kept listening to this album, immersed in the classic element of the music and the quality of it all.

I recommend "Black Sheets of Rain" to anyone who liked Husker Du or likes Bob Mould, anyone who is concerned about the environment or anyone who has has ever broken off a relationship.

the same rate as plants raised in current conditions," Kirkham said. "What's interesting is that the high carbon dioxide plants used less water, therefore increasing their water use efficiency. That is really desirable in this climate."

It is unknown how temperatures will actually change in the future, she said, but the carbon dioxide levels are increasing rapidly. She said that in the six years since climate experiments have been done, the carbon dioxide level in Manhattan has changed drastically.

"The rate of change is a very timely concern," Kirkham said. "Experiments of this nature will be increasing. We are lucky to be doing this research here at K-State."

Trent said most of the former athletes considered for participation in the project took the initiative to contact her or the athletic department as word of Second Wind spread.

While several former athletes have expressed an interest in the program, Switzer said only five are currently taking courses through Second Wind. At present, the program lacks the resources needed to reach a larger number, he said.

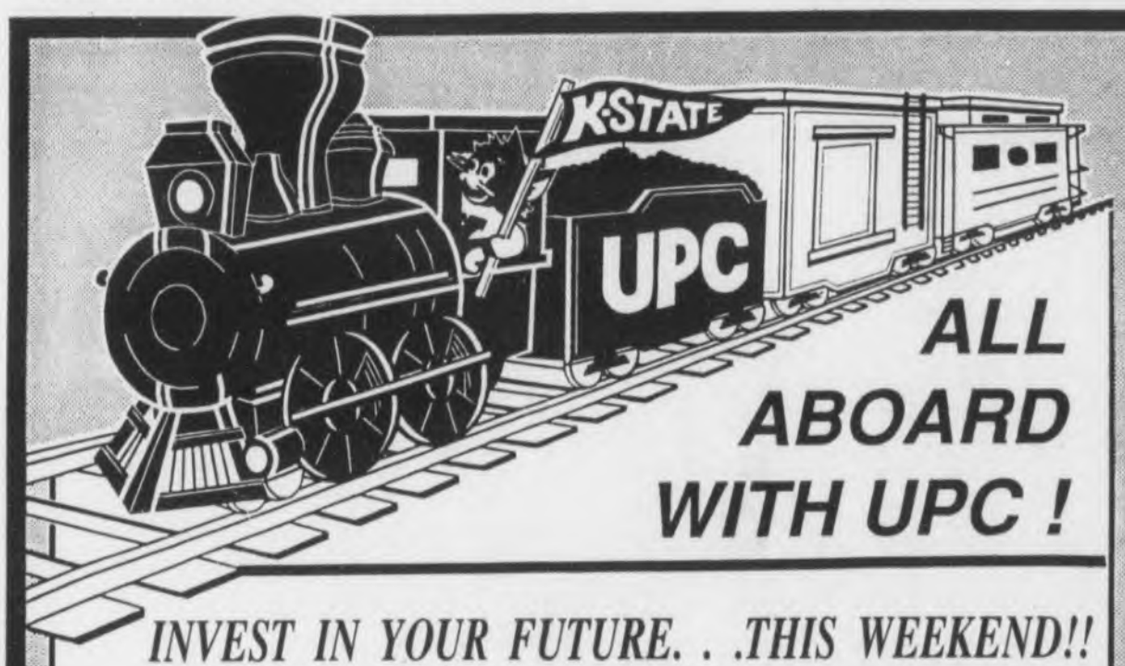
within the last couple of years."

At the same time, Hobbs pointed to specific problems that existed in the school district.



"The crowding situation due to the increase in the number of students (was one problem)," Hobbs said. "Also, just having enough funds to produce the quality of education that we'd like to is another issue."

Hobbs said a number of programs are thriving but cannot be expanded without additional funding.

"We have a Spanish program at Northview Elementary School that's working quite well, but we can't expand it," Hobbs said.

During the tour, the senators talked with Hobbs and other members of the tour about finding non-monetary solutions to some of the problems. Several ideas were presented such as using uncertified people as teachers if they have a strong background in certain subjects. Giving tax credits to businesses that assist education was also discussed.

The tour was the first among several fact-finding tours that the senators have scheduled. At this time, no other tours have been firmly scheduled, but Oleen said Wichita was an area being discussed for a tour.

Possible landfill shows promise

Approvals given from state office

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

After a long delay, the state attorney general's office appears ready to grant preliminary authority for Riley, Geary, Morris and Dickinson counties to form a compact for the construction and operation of a landfill.

Dan Harden, Riley County engineer, said the preliminary authority for the compact — to be called the Big Lakes Regional Waste Compact — was expected in June.

Dan Myers, Riley County legal counsel, said all intergovernmental agencies, such as the compact, must be approved by the attorney general.

Myers said the decision on the preliminary agreement by the attorney general's office was delayed because some of the wording in the compact agreement had to be reviewed by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. Myers said KDHE has only two attorneys on staff and has a backlog of cases.

Word was received from the attorney general's office Tuesday morning that the KDHE attorneys have approved the agreement, Myers said.

The counties can reach a formal agreement on the compact and submit it to the attorney general for final approval. Myers said he anticipates no future snags in the approval process for the compact.

Harden said work has gone forward while waiting for the attorney general's decision.

Harden said negotiations have produced a tenative agreement for Dickinson County to join the compact. That agreement cannot be implemented until the counties have authority to act as a compact, he said.

The consulting firm of CH2M Hill has submitted its survey of the economic and environmental suitability of the 13 potential sites, including the four sites announced last spring from which the likely future site of the landfill would be selected, Harden said.

According to the survey, the Dickinson County site, located in an abandoned rock quarry about six miles southwest of Junction City, had the highest score of the sites in the survey.

The site would be the easiest and least expensive to construct and operate because piles of shale onsite could be used for construction and daily cover, according to the survey.

The other advantages of this site are geologic conditions more protective of the environment, lack of streams and springs that might be contaminated and the already disturbed state of the site from its history as a quarry, according to the survey.

The main disadvantages noted in the survey is the higher population living nearby and along the hauling routes. The site will also be harder to screen from the public than the other sites considered, according to the survey.

The O.K. Ranch site, located 14 miles southwest of Manhattan in Geary County, had the second highest score in the survey.

American shot by Iraqi soldier

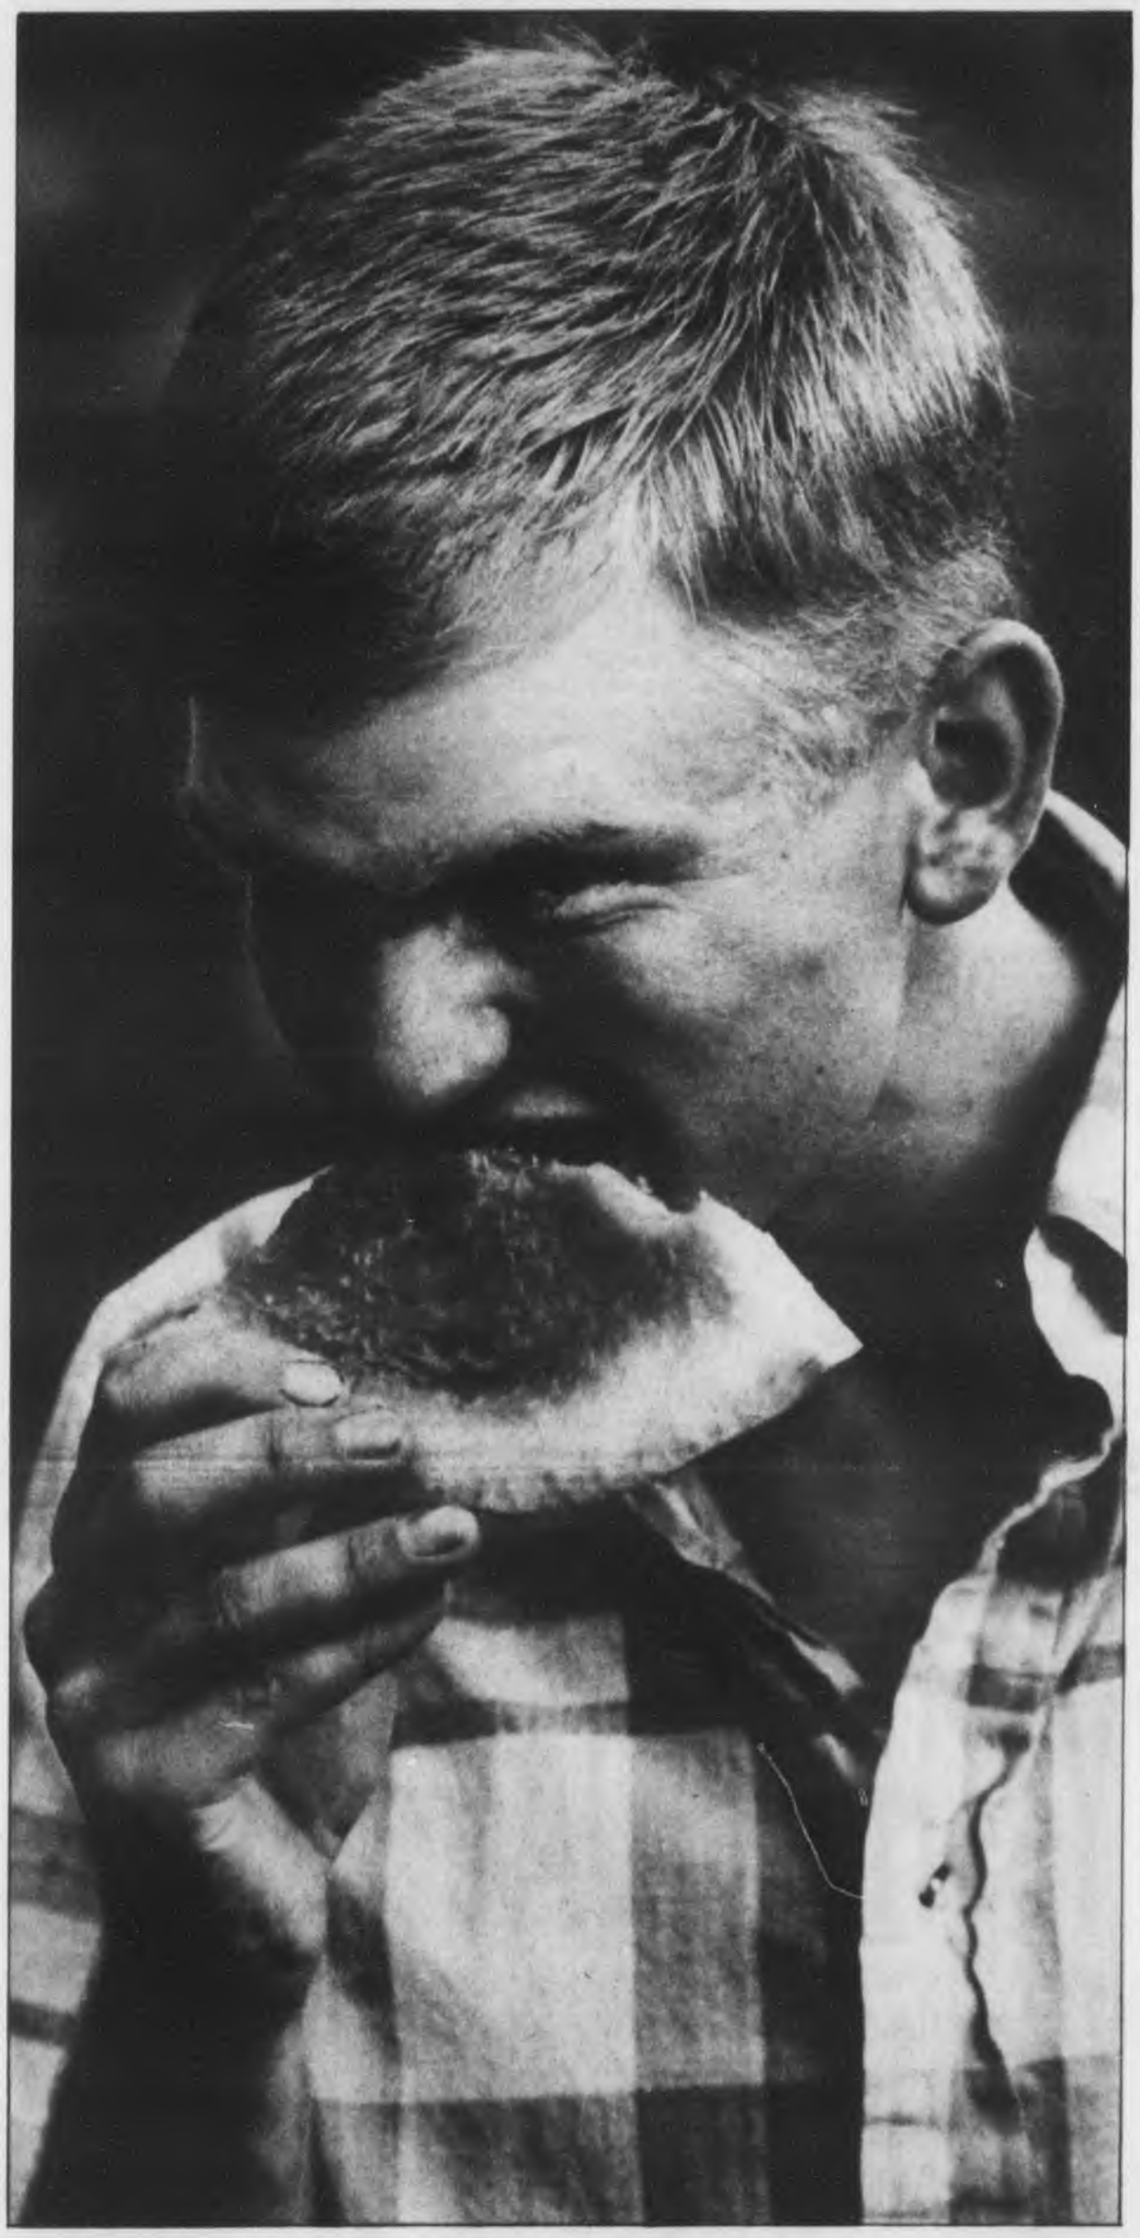
CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An Iraqi soldier shot an American citizen trying to avoid capture in Kuwait, according to a report reaching the State Department revealed by the department Wednesday night.

The reported shooting happened during a day in which President Bush telephoned the besieged U.S. Embassy in Kuwait to encourage the ambassador and his skeleton staff to hang on under "most difficult circumstances."

Separately, Bush told lawmakers he would consider further moves if economic pressure fails to push Iraqi forces from Kuwait.



The State Department said attempts by U.S. diplomats "to obtain more information from Iraqi officials in Kuwait have been in vain. We will continue to press this case."

The department declined to identify the American and said it did not know the seriousness of his injuries.

Bush, who met privately with more than 30 senators and House members, will address a public joint session of Congress next Tuesday night after returning from his weekend summit meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

Senior administration aides, meanwhile, disclosed that the United States wants its allies to pay the entire cost, either in cash or contributions of material, of the U.S. military buildup in the Persian Gulf. The aides said the administration estimated those costs as $6 billion to the end of the year and $1 billion a month after that, plus $10.5 billion a year for nearby states hurt by the trade embargo and an unspecified sum for developing countries battered by oil price increases.

Teaching satisfies higher educators

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

Reports that President Jon Wefald did not have time to teach a history class this semester may cause students to wonder if administrators have time to teach at all.

Many do, and although they don't get paid extra, many cite personal satisfaction as reason enough to teach a class or two.

Few at the president's office have the flexibility in their schedule to teach courses. However, Executive Assistant Charles Reagan tries to make time for lectures in philosophy and has taught an occasional class, including a class in existentialism last fall.

"I just consider that being part of academics. I do it because I want to. I love the intellectual life," Reagan said. "That's what attracted me to the University. I came here to read, write and teach philosophy."

Thomas Isenhour, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences who also teaches a chemistry course with another professor, said, "I have pursued a faculty career because teaching and research are exciting, stimulating adventures. I've always enjoyed educating young people and I always will."

However, Isenhour said his administrative duties make it impossible for him as dean to provide sufficient office hours to teach a mainline course alone.

Judith Zivanovic, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, is a professor of speech and also teaches a graduate course in theater.

"The reasons I teach are that I love theater and drama and so I enjoy very much interacting on that subject with people. I like particularly to work with graduate students because I think you can learn so much," she said. "When I teach, I keep in touch and keep up with what the faculty are doing as well."

Jack Holl, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, decided not to teach this semester. But he said he thinks teaching is important and has taught at freshmen seminars.

"It's important as an administrator to keep in touch with the teaching mission of the institution, and there's no better way to do that than to teach," he said.

Holl also said teaching gives him a chance to learn something, too.

"I'm required to read new things, reread things, and rethink old issues. I always presume I'm going to learn a great deal about my subject from my students and I have, not necessarily facts but mostly changing perceptions, values, and intensity of concern," he said.

Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of the College of Engineering, said he has a very busy schedule teaching three classes and must make time for

Police say they will nab 'bathroom bandit' soon

By Lori Stauffer
Campus Editor

K-State Police came one step closer to apprehending the "bathroom bandit" Wednesday.

About 5:20 p.m., a woman encountered a naked male in an Anderson Hall women's restroom, said Mike Baysinger, campus patrol officer.

Baysinger said this is the third or fourth incident reported to the campus police within the past two weeks possibly involving the bathroom bandit.

Another incident Baysinger said he believes could be related to the bathroom bandit occured Wednesday afternoon in a Farrell Library elevator. He said a young man, roughly fitting the bathroom bandit's description, grabbed and propositioned a woman in the elevator. No one was apprehended.

The Anderson Hall victim gave the police a general description of a male that was similiar to that of the suspect reportedly seen in a Bluemont Hall women's restroom Aug. 24, said Lt. Rick Howard, campus police officer.

Howard also said the victim described the suspect as wearing khaki pants and a blue-and-white striped shirt.

The female victim contacted the campus police and two officers, Baysinger and Howard, were sent to search the premises. Upon questioning, the victim said the suspect was last seen heading west toward the Union.

Baysinger said two male subjects resembling the description of the bathroom bandit were questioned inside the Union, but neither were detained.

He said the victim waited 10 minutes before contacting the campus police. This delay may have hindered police action and a possible apprehension, Baysinger said.

"We are trying to address this problem, but we are being hindered by not being contacted immediately," he said.

Baysinger also offered advice to women who may encounter this individual in a University bathroom.

"Don't scare them off, leave the area and call us immediately," Baysinger said.

The police described the bathroom bandit as a male, 20 to 22 years of age with sandy blond hair. He is also believed to be of medium build and medium complexion.

Howard said it is only a matter of time before the suspect is caught.

"We will get him," Howard said.

Sales tax aids city budget

1st State of the City address encourages active citizen imput

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Manhattan Mayor Richard Hayter said he is proud citizens take an active role in public policy, in his first annual State of the City address.

The program is sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and is part of the Chamber Member's Congress Luncheon series. The luncheon was served at the Manhattan Holidome Wednesday.

This was the second installment in what could be a six-part series by the end of 1990, said Lowell Jack, Chamber of Commerce Director of Member Relations.

Hayter addressed a variety of federal, state and local issues Manhattan faces. Several local politicians, along with city staff and chamber members, were present.

Hayter pointed out Manhattan's uniqueness in its city manager government and the fact that most revenue in this year's $24.2 million city budget comes from sales tax and not property tax.

"I think it is very important to recognize how important sales tax is to our community," Hayter said. "It's another reason to shop at home. Because by increasing our sales tax, we are lessening our dependency on property tax."

Hayter said Manhattan sits in the middle as far as city imposed property tax when compared to the 15 other class one cities in the state.

Hayter said taxes are not where they should be, but also are not at any extremes.

Possible expansion of Fort Riley took the forefront of federal issues Hayter considers important to Manhattan's economy. Issues tying in with the fate of Fort Riley such as reductions in the ROTC program and possible expansion of Manhattan Municipal Airport were also discussed.

"It is in our best interest to try to maintain the 1st Infantry Division," he said adding he would not comment further until the city as a whole decides what position to take on the issue.

"With the Middle East situation, the entire fate of the 1st Infantry Division is on hold," Hayter said.

Hayter said the city commission will look into the possibility of hiring a lobbyist to represent Manhattan's interests concerning Fort Riley in Washington D.C.

Widening of K-177 and Seth Childs road could be finished as early as July 1, 1994. Hayter said he would like to see the state combine the Kaw Valley bridge project with this to avoid prolonged road construction in the area.

With construction to begin on Anderson Avenue and several intersections as well, Hayter said he does not want Manhattan known as "the city of eternal road construction."

The fate of the Goodnow House in also undetermined. Hayter said it is not yet known if it will receive state funding.

"I hope we can keep it part of our tradition," he said. "It is a matter we are watching closely and one we hope we can positively influence."

At the county and city level, Hayter praised the combined effort between county and city officials in developing a hazardous waste management plan which he called one of the best in the state.

Hayter did show concern about the operating costs at the Riley County Police Department. He said he plans to have a small task force or ad-hoc committee look into the matter in the near future.

Hayter closed the forum with a question-and-answer session.

Chamber of Commerce President Randy Martin said he was pleased to have the cooperation of Hayter and the community in presenting this examination of the city.

4 arrested in Israel uprising

JERUSALEM (AP) — A military court sentenced four Palestinians to life in prison for murdering an Arab village leader, the army said Wednesday, the 1,000th day of the uprising against Israeli rule of the occupied lands.

Arab reporters said the men, all from the West Bank village of Kfar Bidiya, killed the village leader on suspicion he sold land to Israelis.

Underground leaders of the uprising had called for protest marches to mark the anniversary of the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, but no demonstrations were reported.

31 attempt to claim fortune

LONDON (AP) — Before she died in January, Dorothea Allen destroyed family papers and letters and tore the date and place of birth from her passport. She left more than $2.8 million in cash, no traceable next of kin, no will, no birth certificate, no marriage certificate and a growing list of claimants to her fortune.

So far, 31 people have come forward, claiming to be heirs of the woman known in British newspapers as "the vanishing lady."

By law, claimants have 12 years to prove they are blood relatives. If they fail, the fortune goes to the state treasury.

KKK plans Springfield rally

SPRINGFIELD, Mo.— A Ku Klux Klan faction plans to rally near Springfield next month.

Steve Saxon, who describes himself as the southwest director of the Missouri Realm of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said Tuesday the group will rally on private property just outside the city Oct. 27.

The purpose of the rally, he said, is to counter the image of the KKK as a hate group.

"We're going to be addressing subjects such as the ethnic intimidation laws that don't protect whites, the Affirmative Action laws that are unequal for whites, abortion, homosexuality, drug abuse, interracial mixing and things of that nature," he said.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People plans a counter-rally the same day.

Carolyn Moncrief, president of the NAACP's Springfield chapter, said the KKK is still a hate group.

"Our plans have always been to do something whenever they say they are coming. We're going to do something, too," she said.

"But they will always find some little people who are followers just to get notoriety," she said.

NASA scrubs Columbia launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA scrubbed the launch of space shuttle Columbia for the third time after discovering a leak as liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen were being poured into the fuel tank on Wednesday.

The decision was made after 10 times the normal amount of hydrogen was found in the shuttle's aft compartment, said shuttle director Robert Crippen.

The launch crew immediately began trying to trace the leak. No new launch date was set.

"I think we got fooled by the fact we had two leaks," Crippen said. "I think this leak has been there all along."

Survey shows sex ignorance

NEW YORK (AP) — Sex may be on the minds of nearly everybody, but a new Kinsey Institute survey finds that most Americans do not know much about it.

Fifty-five percent of those surveyed flunked a test of basic sexual knowledge, Kinsey director June Reinisch said Wednesday.

Only about 25 percent knew that the typical American first has intercourse at age 16 to 17, or that an estimated 30 percent to 40 percent of married men have had an extramarital affair, the report said.

Only 21 percent knew that more than a quarter of American men have had a sexual experience with another male as an adolescent or adult.

Half incorrectly thought that rectal intercourse itself could cause AIDS, even if neither partner was infected by the AIDS virus.

The poll's 18 questions were drawn from those most often asked of the Kinsey Institute, and represent facts that "people need to know for both their physical health and their mental health," Reinisch said in an interview.

Participants from the Midwest generally scored best, with 55 percent passing, followed by 47 percent in the West, and 40 percent in the South and Northeast.

Middle East guidelines strict

TOPEKA (AP) — Saudi Arabian postal laws prohibit mail that contains alcohol, tobacco products or pornographic material, and U.S. Army officials here say packages sent to soldiers overseas should meet guidelines.

"Anything that might smack of pornography" is being discouraged as mail to U.S. troops in the Middle East, said Joy Moser, public affairs officer for the adjutant general's office in Topeka.

Magazines with pictures of nude women or women in skimpy bathing suits, books or newspapers that contain underwear or bathing suit ads are taboo in the conservative Middle East country.

Man to let son return home

WICHITA (AP) — A Wichita man has agreed to allow his ex-wife to return their 9-year-old son to Saudi Arabia, despite the threat of war in the Middle East.

A Sedgwick County District Court judge was scheduled to decide Tuesday whether Chuckie Killion should remain with his father in Wichita or return with his mother to Jiddah, Saudi Arabia.

Wichita lawyer Andrea Ramsay said the hearing was canceled after Chuckie's father decided his son could return safely to the Middle East.

The father, Chuck Killion, went to court last month as Middle East tensions were rising after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. Killion's lawyer argued that Saudi Arabia was "unstable and dangerous," and asked that Chuckie remain in Wichita until Middle East tensions eased.

The mother, Barbara Tyner, countered in court papers filed by Ramsay that Chuckie would be living 825 miles from Kuwait. She also argued that there would be plenty of time to leave the country should fighting break out in Saudi Arabia.

Ramsay said Killion decided to drop his custody battle after his ex-wife came to Wichita and helped convince him that Saudi Arabia was still safe. Ramsay said Chuckie Killion would return to Saudi Arabia later this month.

Signe Balch, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and biochemistry, spent her summer as an intern for NASA. Balch and other students attended lectures and worked on specific projects in a laboratory during their stay at Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

Student has dream internship; schedule demanding, enjoyable

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

Signe Balch took one small step towards her dream this summer.

Balch, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and biochemistry, spent six weeks as a NASA intern at Kennedy Space Center working in the Space Life Science Training Program. She said she was able to actually see the future at work during her internship.

"There are so many things we still don't know," she said. "We don't even know if man can survive in outer space for a long time."

Balch was 8 years old when she decided to be a veterinarian, she said. Her dad had an interest in science, and she became interested while using his microscopes to study objects.

During her internship, Balch learned how NASA designs and prepares life-science experiments for flight aboard the space shuttle. But her days dreaming of working at NASA didn't prepare her for the rigorous schedule.

"In the mornings we used to have lectures by astronauts, teachers and scientists and in the afternoons we had labs," Balch said.

She said 36 students participated in the program, and they were split into four lab groups.

"Each group emphasized on a project, and we rotated to the other three labs," she said. "By the fourth week we had to do a presentation on our project.

"We also had to do a presentation every Friday and one final (presentation) at the last week."

But as busy as Balch was, she said that she enjoyed every moment at the center.

"We had a lot of fun, and we used to talk about everything and anything," she said. "The pressure was there, but we couldn't necessarily feel it."

She said that one of the most important things that she learned was how to work with others.

"We learned a lot about teamwork, and this is going to be very important if you want to work for NASA," Balch said. "The first thing that was stressed on the first day was to teach us how to work as a team. Everybody worked for everybody.

"I understood how NASA works — how all the red tape you have to deal with actually works," she said.

One of the scientists she worked with was Ron Biro, manager of Life Sciences Educational Program at NASA.

"We advertised the program to over 6,000 schools in the United States, and applications came in from all across the country," Biro said. "NASA and university people evaluated the applications and selected the best students."

Biro said the students rotated through six research projects, and Balch participated in all of these projects.

"Signe did quite a lot of things," he said. "She worked hard for six weeks, seven days a week."

Biro said this was the sixth year NASA had the program, and this year they had a group of good students who accomplished a lot.

The program helps students by giving them the opportunity to experience real professional life, Biro said.

Student instructors teach study habits

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

Interested in a class that has no University teacher and could improve study habits and grade point average?

The course is Learning Skills Seminar and is taught by student instructors. It is offered through the Academic Assistance Center and is open to any undergraduate who wants to get an extra edge, particularly those enrolled in general psychology, introduction to sociology or an entry level math course.

Judy Lynch, associate director of Academic Assistance, said some students may question the qualifications of the undergraduate instructors, but she is sure of their abilities.

"These students are hand-selected through an extensive application and interview process in the spring," Lynch said.

"We look for a strong, solid GPA and successful completion of the psychology, sociology or math class that they will be helping with," Lynch said. "Personality is also very important. We look for people who we think will lend themselves well to teaching and helping others."

The program has been successful since it began in 1983. Students who take the course are more likely to graduate than other students with comparable entry scores, Lynch said.

Since the program began, Academic Assistance has encountered only one major problem.

"We felt one instructor wasn't putting in full effort, so the supervisor stepped in and took over the section," Lynch said.

The instructor's classes are under frequent observation, and the instructors themselves attend an additional class during the semester they teach.

"The course serves as sort of an in-service. I also drop in on their classes and talk to them about what I see," Lynch said.

Besides the seminar, the instructors are required to attend the psychology, sociology, or math class the students in their class are enrolled in.

"The biggest struggle that we face is getting the right combination of students enrolled in the right courses," Lynch said. "We may end up in one section with some students enrolled with one professor and some with another. We end up doing a lot of reshuffling at the beginning of the semester."

Ira Bolden, senior in electrical engineering, has been involved in the program for five years. As a freshman he was a student in the course, and this fall is his fourth time to teach it.

"I love to teach and help people. I had a lot of people that really helped me out and I wanted to be able to do the same," Bolden said. "A lot of students are surprised to find students teaching, but it works out really well. The class gives you a different perspective. It's not just something for 'dumb' people," he said.

Lynch said the course teaches students the tools they need to be successful.

"It's really something positive, not remedial. The student is already a success. It takes a certain quality to enroll in the class to begin with," she said.

Policy not valid until ROTC is eliminated

The policy of K-State is to ensure equal opportunity to qualified individuals regardless of their race, sex, national origin, religion, handicap, sexual preference or other non-merit reasons.

So it will read in the first chapter of the newly-amended affirmative action plan at the University. Those familiar with the University's affirmative action policy (and we all should be) will notice the addition of the words sexual preference.

This addition is as commendable as it is overdue. Until we all live together in harmony we must continue to make concerted efforts to ensure that everyone is given equal opportunities.

Ironically, a campus organization is violating the affirmative action policy with, we must assume, the administration's blessing. Homosexuals are still not allowed in ROTC programs.

Some would argue that ROTC provides valuable experience for many and to take it away would be to deny students unique opportunities. This may be true, but to selectively deny a group of people these same opportunities is discrimination, plain and simple.

Eliminating ROTC from the University will upset many, especially in this time of heightened consciousness of the role and importance of the military. But the administration must not wait for the political climate to change before taking action to enforce the University's affirmative action policy.

By not eliminating ROTC from the University, the administration will set a price on civil rights at K-State. Until ROTC is removed from the University the affirmative action policy is not worth the paper it is printed on.

Low attendance reflects apathy among students

As supporters of higher education battle state budget cuts, another problem is developing in elementary and high schools — apathy.

The Kansas City School District announced Tuesday that about 10,000 students out of 38,000 enrolled students failed to attend the first day of classes. That means more than one-fourth of Kansas City youth elected to extend their summer vacations.

This fosters the belief that education stands for nothing, that what one can learn on the streets is more important than what is contained in the pages of a book, that anyone can make it on their own.

Administrators and school board members excused the absences, saying it might have been the heat, or a lack of transportation, or — like in many urban cities — just a fact that students don't bother coming to the first few days of classes. Some administrators were quoted as saying it may take up to two weeks before all district students begin attending classes.

Members of the work force don't have it so easy. They know that blowing off the first two weeks of a new job means standing in an unemployment line. University students know it means all-night study sessions before midterms and, perhaps, academic dismissal.

As important as classes about math or science are lessons learned about life. Those lessons are better learned in a school setting than on the streets in the real world.

Principles define America

"The first casualty when war comes is truth." Hiram Johnson, (1866-1945), U.S. Senator.

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

President George Bush said in a nationally televised speech Aug. 8, 1990, "I have witnessed throughout my life in both war and peace, America has never wavered when her purpose is driven by principle."

You know you are listening to a good politician when you hear one plying words like "purpose" and "principle." We Americans have always been suckers for a cause with purpose or principle in it.

It's even considered unpatriotic not to be principled. Why, the greatest, patriotic American who ever lived, John "Duke" Wayne, lived by so many highfalutin' principles we named the restroom after him.

The Duke's first and foremost principle was, "All Americans have principles." A corollary to that was, "And if you ain't American, you ain't worth dirt."

His second principle was, "All American principles are patriotic." Which follows, if your principles aren't patriotic then you aren't American, and of course, "If you ain't American, you ain't worth dirt."

John's third principle was, "Obey all American principles." I suppose because to not obey isn't American and (all together now), "If you ain't American, you ain't worth dirt."

And of course "Big John" believed all principles should be enforced with the additional principle, "Anyone not worth dirt should immediately obtain the terminal opportunity to view about 6 feet of it from the bottom of a hastily dug grave."

This makes me question what George Bush as SPPA (Supremely Pompous Principled American) was referring to as our "principles" in last month's nationally televised presidential speech. Of course, any good politician worth his saltpeter is intentionally vague about such trivial details.

Maybe he was referring to the principle of "Sovereign right to self-defense," in which if attacked, as in the bombing of Pearl Harbor by the Japanese prior to World War II, we would justifiably defend ourselves.

This principle doesn't appear to apply in the Middle East crisis however, since Iraq has not attacked the United States. In fact, prior to sending U.S. troops to Saudi Arabia, Iraq hadn't even so much as thumbed their nose, shot a spitball, or given the one-fingered salute of friendship our direction.

On the other hand, Iraq could certainly feel threatened by the billions of dollars worth of economic and military aid the U.S. pours into a blatantly hostile, anti-Arab country like Israel each year. If I were an Iraqi, I just might consider this analogous to the Soviets sending missiles to Cuba in 1962.

Or maybe SPPA Bush was invoking the principle of, "We will defend all sovereign nations, foreign and domestic, from the Wicked Aggressor," since Iraq (the wicked aggressor) obviously invaded the foreign (or is it domestic?) country of Kuwait. Yet, if this were true, the United States would have sent troops to Afghanistan to defend against the Russian invasion in 1979.

If for no other reason than human rights abuse and sheer brutality, the U.S. should have, based on this principle, sent its righteous swift sword in defense of the students in Tiannanmen Square last year, or laid waste to South Africa for its continued policy of apartheid, or blasted Baghdad into orbit for its heinous gas attack on defenseless, Kurdish civilians. We could have made a "principled" stand on these issues ... but we didn't.

One principle that seems to adequately describe previous and current U.S. policy is, "What is ours is ours, and what is yours is ours." We applied this principle quite nicely to the invasion of the tiny Caribbean island of Grenada in 1983, and in the invasion of Panama just last year. It is pretty much understood that we consider just about everything in the Western Hemisphere as ours. We give this principle a haughty title, such as "Monroe Doctrine," to add credibility and establish a basis for future acts of aggression.

This principle fits the Kuwaiti problem as well. Any "principled" person can see we have a right to oil in the Persian Gulf — Jimmy Carter said so.

This principle also overlooks of course, in the name of that all-inclusive phrase "national interest," the widely accepted principle that any country can sell (or choose not to sell) any of its goods, services, and resources, regardless of their value to the rest of the world, to anyone, at any price free competition on the world market will allow. This is quite commonly called "capitalism" ... a "principle" Americans often pride themselves on.

Obviously the "what is ours ... " principle applies only to the United States. For if Mexico were to define computer technology as a highly important Mexican "national interest" and invaded California to acquire Silicon Valley and thus ensure access to said interest at a desirable price, the U.S. would certainly view this as an act of war, and nuke Mexico into the most worthless crater south of Memorial Stadium.

In contrast, the U.S. can declare oil to be of vital national interest, send the largest U.S. military deployment to the Middle East since the Vietnam War to protect it, and this is called acting with "purpose" and "principle."

This brings me to the principle which most accurately describes our military presence in the Middle East, that being: "The United States and its citizens, being the most arrogant, wealthy, wasteful, opulent nation on earth, have the right to maintain our excessive lifestyle by any means we see fit; which, above all, includes the right to drive American highways and byways at 65 mph or more, in the biggest, gas-guzzling, air-conditioned, non-car-pooling hogs in the universe."

America's desire for aiding Saudi Arabia is based not on free access to oil but rather on need ... much like a cocaine addict needs access to the dealer.

So, if you see a one-eyed fat man by the name of Duke driving 70 mph in a Cadillac, by himself, down the interstate, wave the flag with "true grit" and speed on.

It's patriotic. It's American ... "And if you ain't American ... "

Solution practical

Editor,

In light of the developments in the Middle East, and Randy Crnkovich's letter to the editor, I would like to continue the discussion of "idealism," "realism," and "practicality."

Crnkovich is quick to point out that our involvement in the Middle East is "not an aggressive move." I am far from a military expert, but I do believe that when a nation undertakes the largest military airlift in its history, aggression is at least a consideration.

We are also informed that our current show of military might is the "only practical response to a potentially widespread problem." What problem would that be? Most likely, Crnkovich is concerned with "ridiculously inflated ... prices." Who's practical now?

George Bush, in his infinite "chip-on-the-shoulder" wisdom remained on vacation during the progression of a world crisis. Who's practical now?

Joint Chiefs of Staff head General Powell wanted to activate the entire surplus of American reserves in order to better fortify the "Desert Shield." Who's practical now? I don't believe I know.

I do know that one "practical" solution, if not directly to the present crisis at least to future conflicts, would be to devote more time and money to the exploration and development of alternative energy sources.

"Realistically," we as a nation should have long ago developed these alternatives to combat the degeneration of our environment, but we have failed to do so. However, as one of my favorite sayings goes, "Hindsight is 20/20."

Now, we have tangible economic and moral reasons to vehemently pursue a non-fossil fuel course, and we should look to that solution.

The key to the crisis in the Middle East lies in our priorities. "Ideally," we should honor peace and the preservation of human life above high gas prices. "Realistically," we seem to have sacrificed one for the other. Who's practical now?

Buy gas elsewhere

Editor,

This letter is in response to Stan Hayes' letter to the editor printed in Tuesday's issue of the Collegian. I have been living in Manhattan for the past 12 years, and every time that the students come back from or are ready to leave for vacation gas prices have risen. Furthermore, when there is a long vacation (i.e. Christmas, spring break) gas prices have risen.

The people of Manhattan have always paid higher prices for their gas compared to surrounding communities. During this year alone (before the Gulf crisis), there was a period of time in which Manhattan gas prices were 25 cents per gallon higher than prices in Ogden and Junction City.

So, Hayes, we the people of Manhattan know that these allegations are true. I personally don't buy gas in Manhattan, and I hope that the people of Manhattan and the K-State students are mad enough that they also buy their gas somewhere else.

Union provides many recreational opportunities

Sponsored trips furnish students getaway chances

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

A day in a 16th century English marketplace surrounded by jousting knights, sorcerers, artisans and musicians, and a weekend camping and hiking in the Rocky Mountains are set on the Union Program Council's itinerary for the fall semester.

UPC is sponsoring a trip to the Kansas City Renaissance Festival Sept. 29. The trip costs $15 and includes round trip transportation and an admission ticket. It is one of four UPC trips scheduled for this fall.

Also planned is a weekend trip to Chicago, Oct. 26-28, a shopping trip to Kansas City on Dec. 1, and a winter break ski trip to Steamboat, Colo.

Activities sponsored by the Outdoor Recreation Committee include mini-rappelling at Tuttle Creek Dam on Sept. 22 and Sept. 23, a weekend of Rocky Mountain backpacking Sept. 29-30, Blue River Canoeing Oct. 6-7 and a day of exploring Missouri caves on Nov. 10.

The Survival Game will be played Oct. 20 near Manhattan at Hunters Island. This game requires each team to develop a strategy for capturing the opposing teams' flags. The price is $12 which includes gun and pellet rental, refreshments and prizes for the winning team.

The winter break ski trip includes five nights' lodging, four days of lift tickets and ski rental for $290. Stan Winter, program director, said UPC worked with KU and various other Kansas colleges to schedule their ski trips at the same time to further reduce prices.

Winter said he is expecting a good turnout for the activities this year. The student committees have been an integral part of the programs, he said.

"We have a good committee that really wants to be involved working for us," Winter said.

The programs are planned, promoted and implemented by student volunteers with help from faculty members, Winter said. Interested students must apply and be interviewed before committees are chosen.

Emily Folsom, junior in anthropology, has been on the Outdoor Recreation Committee for two years. She said she wanted to be a part of UPC after participating in last year's mini-rappelling adventure.

"I really enjoyed it. It was something I'd never done before, but I really liked it," Folsom said. She said making phone calls, hanging posters, and distributing flyers can be hectic but said she has a lot of fun.

Trips can be offered at minimum prices because UPC is not a money-making organization, Winter said.

"We are based on a break-even system," he said.

UPC theater offers lower-priced movies to help out with students' pocketbooks

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

If the recent price hikes at local movie theaters have students staying home and watching television, then the Union Program Council has an cheaper alternative for the weekends.

UPC Feature Films and Kaleidoscope Films committees are constantly working behind the scenes to bring students such box-office hits as "Pretty Woman" or the critically acclaimed cult classic "Blue Velvet" at a fraction of commercial theater prices.

"Our program is one of the strongest in the region, if not the country," said Mike Penner, K—State Union program adviser. "A lot universities have done away with their programs because they are not making enough money. They only have two choices, to continue not making money or to drop the program."

While other programs are going in the hole, UPC is making about $13,000 a year on their feature films. Penner credits it to the work of the committees and the enthusiasm of the student body.

"It's one of only two committees that are budgeted to make money during the year. The money the films raise is used to carry some of the other UPC committees that have a budget, but aren't designed to make money," he said.

The only other UPC committee that turns a profit is the Promotions Committee which stands to make $11,000 this year from sales of the Programmer.

Feature Films concentrate on current films, especially box-office successes, and tries to provide them at a lower cost to people affiliated with the University, Penner said.

Feature Films show in Forum Hall Friday and Saturday at 7 and 9 p.m. and Sunday at 7 p.m. for $1.75. That price sharply contrasts with the $5.50 or $6 admission prices for similar showings at local commercial theaters.

Kaleidoscope Films bring a more diverse selection of critically acclaimed international films, documentaries, cult films, classics and experimental films that may not otherwise be available to students, Penner said.

These films show in the Union's Little Theater on Wednesday at 7 p.m., Thursday at 3:30 and 7 p.m. or during special weekend matinees or midnight showings and cost $1.50.

Greg Rosa, chairman of the Feature Films committee, said the process of acquiring the films is long and complicated.

The committee receives a list of available titles and their release dates from two film companies, one

Summer in Alaska filled with baseball

Trio of 'Cats travel to hone skills on field

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

The final out of the game has been recorded, and it's approaching midnight.

But the summer sun still shines brightly on a baseball field in Alaska — and it will for two more hours. From 2 to 4 in the morning, the light gives way to darkness, and night games become a possibility.

But who's going to play baseball then?

A trio of K-State baseball players experienced life in Alaska first-hand this summer. And most of the games they played were contested by the light of day — light that lasted for 22 hours.

> "It was a great atmosphere. I got a real feel of what like would be like in the minor leagues. You basically eat, sleep and play ball.
> —Chris Hmielewski
> K-State baseball player

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

K-State shortstop Craig Wilson, who threw batting practice Tuesday during the Wildcats' first fall workout, was one of three baseball players who traveled to Alaska this summer to play in a league. Wilson was joined by teammates Chris Hmielewski and Sean Pedersen.

Shortstop Craig Wilson and pitcher/first baseman Chris Hmielewski spent the entire summer in Alaska, honing their skills. Later in the season, they were joined by pitcher Sean Pedersen, who spent three weeks with Hmielewski's squad.

The experience, for each of the three, was an eye-opener to be sure. And their eyes weren't opened by the sun while they were trying to sleep.

"It was a great atmosphere," said Hmielewski, who was a member of the Kenai Peninsula Oilers. "I got a real feel of what life would be like in the minor leagues. You basically eat, sleep and play ball."

Wilson's routine with the Anchorage Glacier Pilots was much the same.

"Anchorage was a great place to play," he said. "All we did was go to the yard, come back to eat, go back to the yard, come back to sleep, and go back to the yard again."

Routines like the ones Hmielewski and Wilson were experiencing will either make you love the game even more, or become sick of it once and for all.

Love conquered all.

"When you are playing that much, every day, baseball becomes a habit," Hmielewski said. "You're fine tuning your skills each day, and by doing that, you can't help but get better. And as you get better, you enjoy it more."

Repetition was a key to Wilson's growth as a player as well.

"I worked a lot on fielding. I'd take 50, 60 or more ground balls before each game," he said. "And at the same time, I was working on my hitting."

The work was necessary to play at a competitive level, said the three players. Pedersen, the youngest of the trio, found that out almost immediately.

"There were a bunch of really experienced hitters up there," he said. "You've got the Nos. 3 and 4 hitters off their college teams.

"Facing those kind of guys made me, as a pitcher, work even harder on thinking about what I was doing before every pitch. The stuff (pitches he threw) I had up there was good enough, but the mental side was even more important."

Wilson said the opposing teams weren't the only things that added to the competitive nature of the experience.

"Sure, you were playing against good teams every day, but you were doing it in front of crowds of 2,000 people," said Wilson, who had played before the then-largest crowd in Kansas collegiate baseball history when K-State faced Wichita State at Frank Myers Field last spring. "Your concentration level had to be great every game."

Following the conclusion of the season for Kenai, Hmielewski joined Wilson's Anchorage team for a trip to the National Baseball Congress tourney, held each year in Wichita.

And they added another chapter to a storybook summer.

Wilson hit a home run that left the park, but it didn't go over the fence.

Confused? Let the duo explain.

Wilson: "There's a wall behind the main wall with advertising on it. When I hit it, I knew I'd hit it good, but I didn't think I hit it all that hard."

Hmielewski: "After he hit it, I was watching it from the dugout and saw it go out. But it didn't go over the upper fence. It went through."

Wilson: "I was wondering if it had maybe broken off a portion of the wall in a big chunk."

Hmielewski: "But it didn't. It just left a hole."

And it left another memory. A memory of the home run that left the park through the fence instead of over it.

For all the travel, the tough hours and the time away from friends and family, each of the three agreed it was worth the trip. And sunlight while they slept wasn't a bother.

"I had a little trouble with the time change," Hmielewski said. "I'd be thinking that it was about 9, and it was 12 or 1 in the morning."

"It wasn't too bad getting to sleep if you shut your blinds," Wilson added. "But it was bad coming home from the park at midnight and having the sun shining."

It was the sun of a summer in Alaska.

Assistant volleyball coach Greg Lambert came to K-State after a stint as a Notre Dame assistant. He played water polo at Stanford.

Volleyball assistant looks for experience

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

First-year assistant volleyball coach Greg Lambert is making plans for the future.

After spending three years as an assistant at Notre Dame, Lambert wants to accomplish many things at K-State.

"I have aspirations to be a head coach someday," Lambert said. "I thought this would be a great opportunity, as far as a stepping stone more for my future."

While at Notre Dame, Lambert served as an assistant coach on the United States Volleyball Association club team and looks forward to getting involved in the junior team at K-State.

"I wanted a place where I could immerse myself in (volleyball), and this seemed like the place to do it," Lambert said. "There's a lot (head coach) Scott (Nelson) wants to do, and there's a lot of things we can do to get better and keep improving. There's a lot of room for development, so it's exciting in that respect.

"Scott's been at the national level as a player, so I thought it would be a good opportunity to

Several to see action on line

Battle for interior spots heated; ends work for consistency against run

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–Defensive Line

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

K-State defensive line coach Bob Cope is a man of few words.

"The proof is in the pudding" was all Cope had to say when previewing his unit's prospects for the coming season.

Cope, who was honored by The Sporting News this fall as the best defensive assistant in the Big Eight, awaits the test of combat before thoroughly evaluating the status of the defensive line.

"It's tough to tell how you're going to compete in any phase of the game until you put it together in a game situation," Cope said. "We certainly are not by any stretch of the imagination where I'd like to see us right now, but they're working hard, and our young guys are coming on."

Several young linemen gained valuable experience last season, and only two members do not return to the group. But while the number lost is small, the quality lost from the departure of tackle John Crawford and Maurice Henry, who lined up at defensive end or linebacker the past two seasons, will certainly be felt.

Though Cope isn't ready to fully assess the quality of the defensive line, he said the group possesses the potential to improve upon the performance of the line of last year.

"The new guys we've got are bigger and stronger, and they can really come on," Cope said. "Fundamentally we need to make a tremendous amount of improvement, but I've been pleased with their work and think that, in time, we'll have an outstanding defensive line."

Coach Bill Snyder looks to rotate at least five players as down linemen this season. Senior Anthony Williams and sophomores Jody Kilian and Ekwensi Griffith saw significant playing time last year. Snyder said junior Evan Simpson, a transfer from Iowa, and sophomore Tony Williams are new additions competing for starting spots.

Simpson has been a question mark for Cope and the defensive line this fall. At 5-foot-11 and well over 315 pounds, Simpson's weight held him in doubt. But while Snyder admits Simpson isn't well conditioned, he said Simpson will be counted upon at nose guard.

"Evan isn't in the kind of condition we'd like him to be in," Snyder said, "but he has tremendous potential as a football player. He has all the strength, quickness, and explosiveness you need, and with his stature, the leverage is built in."

Tony Williams, a 295-pound defensive tackle, moves over from the offensive line this season. Also likely to see time in the interior line are Eric Clayton, a 6-6, 285-pound sophomore, and Steve Moten, a 6-2, 285-pound sophomore.

Junior Elijah Alexander returns to his starting defensive end spot. Kilian, who will play some on the interior line, will probably start at the other end position. Cope said Kilian, at 6-5 and 255, is the fastest lineman on the team and should be one of its leading pass rushers. Backing the starting ends will be sophomore Reggie Blackwell.

Alexander said the top priority of the defensive line this fall has been to improve upon stopping the opponents' ground game.

"To be an effective team in the Big Eight, you must be able to stop the run," Alexander said. "We want to stop the run and force teams to have to throw against us. It's easier to pressure the quarterback and to defend against receivers when the run is ineffective."

Alexander said the most significant improvement for the defense has been the strength added to the interior. With bigger and stronger interior linemen and a year of experience behind the young linebacking corps, he expects marked improvement.

An addition to the defensive end position is Billy Ray Smith, a two-year performer for the basketball team who hasn't played football since junior high. Smith is listed at second-string defensive end and on several special team spots.

"Billy Ray is going to make a real contribution to our team," Cope said. "He's an excellent competitor, and I think he'll have a big impact.

"For him to be doing as well as he is, for a guy who hasn't played since the eighth grade, it's quite a tribute to him," Cope said of Smith's adjustment to football.

Team hopes for return to NCAAs

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

It's time the men's cross country team returns to the NCAA Championships, according to Coach John Capriotti.

The men have been to the national meet only one time since Capriotti became the head coach in 1986. However, the Big Eight is one of the toughest conferences in the country, placing three teams in the top 10 last year, including the national champion.

"We want to return to the national meet," Capriotti said. "This is definitely one of the best men's teams we've had. Now we just need to race well."

The major reason Capriotti is praising this team more than past teams is the ability of the top four runners. David Warders, Ron Smith, Todd Trask and Phil Byrne are of virtually equal ability.

"I think a couple of them are capable of making all-American. It could be anyone out of the group," Capriotti said. "I really don't care who our No. 1 runner is. I just care that they all run well."

The group of four runners stressed the importance of the equality that they have between them as a factor for having a successful season.

"There is a closeness, and we are all four equal in strength and experience especially," Byrne said.

Warders and Smith are the two returnees from last season's team, which finished fourth in the conference. Both are Kansas products and have spent their entire college running careers at K-State.

Warders is the sole senior on this year's squad. He developed appendicitis during the indoor track season last year after narrowly missing the national qualifying time for the 5,000 meters. After some complications, he had to sit out the outdoor season also.

"He has had tough luck, but he has shown signs of doing it. Last year at the Wisconsin Invitational, he was seventh, and the six guys that beat him were in the top 15 at the NCAA meet," Capriotti said. "He has the potential to be in the top 20 or top 10 guys at the NCAA meet."

Smith is entering his junior season in cross country. Capriotti said he believes he is really developing and making strides toward becoming a great runner, especially after his redshirt freshman season in track last year.

"He made a big move outdoors, so he is coming on at the right time," Capriotti said. "It took a little while, but he is young."

The remaining two top spots are filled by junior college transfers Trask and Byrne. Trask is from Santa Rosa junior college and was the California state cross country champion, along with being runner-up in the 5,000 meters.

Byrne was the sixth-place finisher at the national junior college meet two years ago.

"Those guys give us immediate help and are training real well right now," Capriotti said. "They both had real good summers, and are both running with our top two guys."

The group also creates greater intensity than Capriotti has seen in practice before.

"It is a good group of four. We are going to have better up-front runners," Capriotti said. "The problem with training the group is to hold them back. I really have to control their intensity during the workouts because you have four competitive

Bush to speak at Hayden fund-raising event

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — President Bush is scheduled to make a quick stop today in Topeka for what Gov. Mike Hayden's campaign staff expects to be the most important fund-raising event before the general election.

Hayden's staff sees Bush's visit as an opportunity to raise tens of thousands of dollars for the governor's re-election campaign as well as promote Republican Party unity.

However, a spokesman for State Treasurer Joan Finney downplayed the significance of the Bush visit for Mrs. Finney's efforts to unseat Hayden in the Nov. 6 election. Democratic State Chairman Jim Parrish criticized the visit, saying Bush would do better to attend to the Persian Gulf crisis.

"We expect this, obviously, to be our major fund-raiser for the general election," said Frank Ybarra, Hayden's campaign press secretary. "I think the presence of the president speaks well for the governor."

Ybarra said as many as 800 people could attend a $500 per person luncheon at the Kansas Expocentre. That means Republicans could pay a total of $400,000 to hear Bush's 15-minute speech.

Ybarra said the campaign does not have an estimate on how much the visit will raise for the campaign, noting that it will have to pay for the expenses of the presidential visit.

Ybarra said Hayden expects the visit to also boost his image because Bush enjoys relatively high approval ratings from the public.

Hayden defeated Wichita realtor Nestor Weigand Jr. by about 8,000 votes in the Aug. 7 Republican primary, and Democrats plan to form a Republicans for Finney organization in an attempt to capitalize on possible dissension within GOP ranks.

"It sends a very strong message about unity," Ybarra said of Bush's visit. "It sends a very strong message to Republicans."

Bush is scheduled to arrive at Forbes Field south of Topeka at about 11 a.m., with a ride in a motorcade to the Expocentre to follow. A private reception for Republican dignitaries is scheduled for 11:30 a.m., with Bush expected to make his remarks to the luncheon crowd shortly after noon.

The president is scheduled to depart before 1 p.m. for a trip to Tallahassee, Fla.

Hayden left Topeka for Washington Wednesday night. The governor was to fly back to Kansas with Bush on a new Air Force One, a Boeing 747 built in Wichita.

Parrish labeled the events "ostentatious displays of limousine motorcades and big jets" and said that Mrs. Finney "knows that the majority of votes do not come from the jet set or the limousine crowd."

Jack Parry, Mrs. Finney's campaign manager, said she expected to be outspent in the general election campaign.

Sororities discontinue redistribution formula

System failed to get adequate overall numbers

By The Collegian Staff

An experiment to redistribute membership failed during the K-State 1990 rush, said Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser. The Panhellenic Council will be returning to its original method of setting quota for rush in 1991.

The National Panhellenic Conference suggested the sororities base the quota on the average percentage of women pledging over the last three years divided by the number of houses participating in rush.

The K-State chapters accepted this in an attempt to reduce pledge class numbers for the larger houses, Robel said. The smaller houses continued to pledge close to the same number of women.

"We can not get an adequate amount of women pledged with this method," Robel said.

For rush 1991, K-state will return to the traditional method of setting quota. It will be determined by the number of women active in rush on the last day divided by the number of chapters, Robel said.

"Our main reason for this adjustment is to accommodate as many of the women interested in the greek system. The addition of Sigma Kappa as well as this change will allow Panhellenic Council to pledge many more women," Robel said.

Low grades can also be attributed to a high withdrawal rate in the 1990 K-State sorority rush. Of the 612 women participating in fall rush, 99 withdrew.

"About half of these girls were upper-classmen," said Trina Callicott, rush coordinator and senior in architectural engineering.

The 1990 Sorority Way, the University rush handbook, did not list a general grade point average requirement for going through rush. Rather, each house listed an individual grade requirement. Next year, a grade requirement will be added to the rush handbook, Callicott said.

The GPA requirement for rush participation is published in the rush material received by freshmen and transfer students.

Stage celebrates 125

Dessert theater scheduled as museum benefit

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

You can eat, be entertained and support the Riley County Historical Society at a benefit dessert theater for the Wolf-Butterfield House.

The dessert theater will mark the 125th birthday of the Butterfield Overland Dispatch stage line and will be at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Pottorf Hall at Cico Park.

On Sept. 11, 1865, the first passengers boarded the coach at Atchison en route to Denver. One of the many stopping places along the coach's trail was the Wolf-Butterfield House Museum at Juliette and Fremont in Manhattan.

The house was built in 1865 and served as an inn and tavern for weary travelers. An addition was constructed in 1880 and used as the tavern.

The house was given as a gift to the Riley County Historical Society by Lucille Wolf in 1982. The society would now like to restore the house to its original condition.

"The money is going to be used to restore the tavern area back to its original time period," said Edna Williams, Wolf-Butterfield House Museum curator. "This is one of our next major projects."

Rix Shanline and his Kansas Heritage Theater will present a radio broadcast, "Willie and Me," a play about the life of Emmett Kelly. Kelly was a noted clown who grew up in Sedan, Kansas.

"The play depicts Kelly's life from early childhood to his retirement from the Ringling Brothers circus in 1955," Shanline said.

The play also contains vignettes that deal with people in Kelly's pre-professional and professional career. It demonstrates how Kelly, who was raised in poverty, beat the odds to become one of the most famous clowns in the world. The play was broadcast on KKSU-AM in July 1988.

"This is just one in a series of plays that I've written for the Kansas Heritage Theater about famous Kansans," Shanline said. "It explores what kind

Leadership sought in area campaign

K-State funding, property taxes major issues

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

The question of who can provide leadership in Topeka for the needs of K-State has become the biggest issue in the campaign for the 66th District of the Kansas House of Representatives.

The first-term Democratic incumbent Katha Hurt, a Manhattan school teacher, is being challenged by current Manhattan City Commissioner Kent Glasscock, president of Kansas Lumber.

Katha Hurt said she thought K-State funding and property taxes would be issues in the coming campaign.

Hurt said she would do everything possible to make up ground lost when the full enrollment adjustment was not funded. She said if there is to be systematic and consistent support for higher education, it needs to come from income tax.

Hurt said she differs from Glasscock on the way they would raise revenue. She would raise money by an income tax on the higher income bracket, while Glasscock would raise revenue through a sales tax.

Hurt said the candidates also differ on how they would spend revenue.

She said Glasscock would spend money on expensive highways and infrastructure. Hurt said her spending priorities would be for education, health programs for children and medical expenses, while maintaining the existing infrastructure.

Hurt said she and Glasscock have different views of leadership.

"Kent thinks he is a better leader, and he is not," she said. "He defines leadership as finding out where people are going and getting in front of them. I define leadership as encouraging people to change directions.

"That kind of leadership takes tenacity and patience, and the results aren't always immediate," she said.

Glasscock agreed K-State funding and tax reform would be issues in the campaign.

Restoration of the Margin of Excellence and a commitment to the guidelines of the enrollment adjustment are on the agenda needed to be taken to the legislature, he said.

Glasscock said state affairs need to be conducted so that across-the-board funding cuts do not have to be implemented at the end of the legislative session, such as those that hurt K-State so badly last year.

Glasscock said he believes the property tax question has to be effectively and appropriately dealt with so the state can move to other challenges and concerns.

Glasscock said both funding and classroom reform for K-12 education will be an issue. He said he would support the allocation of some sales taxes to relieve the property tax burden.

Glasscock said the differences between the candidates are leadership and the ability to get the job done.

"The prime issue is credibility in Topeka, the ability to build consensus and working with the House leadership," Glasscock said. "Katha has been inadequate."

Glasscock said he already has a working relationship with the leadership in Topeka from his city work.

"I think I have proven on the local level my ability to build consensus on a broad range of issues and with a broad range of constituents," he said.

Computer speeds enrollment

By The Collegian Staff

The decrease in time students spend during the enrollment and registration process can be accounted to the installation of a new mainframe computer last winter break, said Registrar Don Foster.

The mainframe was added to increase the capacity of information which could be handled and also to process transactions more quickly.

The computer is an IBM 3084 and was used for enrollment purposes the first time last spring, said Tom Gallagher, director of University computing.

An IBM mainframe was chosen since both the administration and library require IBM or IBM compatible machines.

In addition to handling more information, the mainframe speeds up the enrollment process.

"If the classes are open it takes very little time to get the students through," said Erma Gobber, office assistant in the Office of the Registrar.

The fee payment process was improved due to a policy the University adopted which requires students to pay their fees on a pre-assigned day or their classes are dropped, Foster said.

The policy was designed to reduce each student's waiting time by limiting the number of students going through Ahearn Fieldhouse at any one time.

Additional time slots were also added to reduce the number of students going through fee payment at the same time, said Foster.

"I've worked at it (fee payment) when it has been two days and when it's been three days. It's definitely a lot less crowded when it lasts three days," said Mardee Stadel, junior in Animal Science.

Morgan adopts pro-choice view

By The Collegian Staff

Abortion has been forced into the election spotlight again this year.

Kansas candidates for Congress and state-wide offices, like their gubernatorial candidates, are scrambling to make their views on the controversial issue known.

Scott Morgan, candidate for 2nd District congress, announced at a press conference Wednesday he was pro-choice on the abortion issue and asked for his opponent, incumbent Jim Slattery, D-Kan., to stop waffling on the issue.

"I am pro-choice," Morgan said. "Anyone who feels that he or she is pro-choice needs to fight to protect that right.

"I've got a little over 60 days in which to convince the people of northeast and northcentral Kansas that I should represent them in Congress and that there are significant differences between myself and the incumbent," he said.

Slattery stated in a Sept. 5 news release that although he does not think abortion should be used as a means of birth control, he said he doesn't think the government should make a choice for its people on an issue that "is essentially a matter of individual morality."

Morgan said abortion should not be decided on a state-by-state basis and should be protected on a federal level.

He also said abortion should not be used as a political litmus test for anyone who may be up for nomination as a Supreme Court justice.

"I think it should be taken out of the arena so that every time we get a Supreme Court judge we don't have to consider whether he's pro-choice or anti-choice," Morgan said.

Morgan said the state should not be legislating personal, religious and moral standards.

"I view abortion as a health issue," he said. "That is not to say that I believe a woman faced with that decision is not already

North, South Korea continue talks

Students protest while leaders talk

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea demanded Wednesday that South Korea release jailed dissidents and stop joint military exercises with the United States as a step toward easing tensions between the rival nations.

During the historic meeting between the prime ministers of North and South Korea, North Korea also demanded that South Korea stop efforts to enter the United Nations separately, saying that would perpetuate national division.

"We view these as very urgent, very serious matters ... directly connected with the future fate of this conference," North Korean Premier Yon Hyong Muk said.

Yon stopped short of calling the demands a precondition for future talks, but he indicated North Korea might stall progress of the premiers' talks, the highest-level contact between the hostile nations since 1945.

The prime ministers met Tuesday and opened formal talks Wednesday. They are to continue until Friday. If all goes well, they will meet again next month in the North Korean capital.

Virtually all the demands and proposals made Wednesday have been issued before, but never face to face between representatives of the rival Communist and capitalist governments.

"This is a historic turning point," said the South's unification minister, Hong Sung-chul. "This time, responsible authorities have made proposals. From this point on, South Korea can consider North Korean proposals in earnest."

As Wednesday's meeting was under way, about 1,000 radical students marched through Seoul, shouting anti-American and anti-government slogans and hurling rocks and firebombs at riot police.

Prison escape plot for movie

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

How often do you get to see a film made by a man wanted for murder?

"Yol," an epic drama made by director Yilmaz Guney while serving time in a Turkish labor camp, may be just the escape for you — if you can stomach some of the graphic scenes and keep pace with the subtitles.

Winner of the Palme D'or at the Cannes film festival, "Yol" will show at 3:30 p.m. this afternoon in the Union Little Theatre and at 7 p.m. tonight in Forum Hall.

"Yol" centers on the release of four men from a Turkish prison and their individual goals to find the people they had left behind.

Subtitles serve as your predominant connection to the plot of the movie. If you miss them, the film may be sketchy, at best. I may have missed a few, so be patient.

At least two of these men are going home to their wives and children. Depressed times have resulted in desperate actions, however, and the homes they left are not the homes to which they now return.

Seyit, played by Tarik Akan, returns to a wife who has been suffering punishment for her acts as a prostitute. Despite the shame this has brought upon him, Seyit still wishes to take his wife and son away. A highly dramatic scene arises during their trip across miles of snow in freezing temperatures. The climate proves fatal for Seyit's horse.

This film quickly skips through many places, including Konya, Adana and Kurdistan, showing the depressed condition of each.

Very few scenes from this film were faked. If there's a scene which takes place on a moving train, then you can bet it was shot on a moving train. If you get motion-sick while reading in the car, close your eyes during these scenes and hope you don't miss any important subtitles.

While on the subject of sickness, certain scenes may prove too grotesque for those with a weak stomach. One scene in particular includes a shot of a decaying horse carcass. I doubt they went to the lengths Hollywood goes to in order to simulate the likeness. What you see is, more than likely, very real.

"Yol" contains several impressive scenes, but in the panic to read the subtitle, figure out who said it and to whom, much of their impact can be lost. A full remake, using American technology and language, would doubtless make it more appealing to local audiences. The rustic fraught with personal, religious and moral dilemmas, but that the role of government is to ensure the medical care she receives is at certain minimum standards."

Slattery expressed his views on abortion in his news release.

"Government is not going to resolve this issue. We must all work in our homes, churches, schools and communities to encourage our citizens to act responsibly and avoid unwanted pregnancies," he said.

Slattery said he does not believe the government can, or should, make decisions in this area for its citizens. He has never supported a human life amendment or a repeal of Roe v. Wade.

He said he also hasn't supported the Freedom of Choice Act because it could restrict the ability of states to enact any limiting measures, including parental notification or post-viability procedures.

At the Capitol on Wednesday, Secretary of State James A. Baker III wound up a second day of congressional questioning — repeating his proposal for planning of a new "regional security structure" for the Middle East — and was leaving Wednesday night for Saudi Arabia.

He said anew that Americans should not expect any quick resolution of the standoff which has brought tens of thousands of U.S. troops to the Saudi desert, across the Kuwaiti border from an even larger force of Iraqis.

Current U.S. efforts, aimed at weakening President Saddam Hussein's resolve through the economic embargo, "are going to take some time, and that is what we ask most of the American people: Stand firm, be patient and remain united so that together we can show that aggression does not pay," Baker told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

This site's advantage is its location would allow the lowest relative hauling cost for delivering solid waste from all the counties in the compact.

The Fort Riley site, located about three miles north of the Manhattan Airport, scored third in the report.

Harden said the Army has decided a landfill would be inappropriate to the mission of the Fort and negotiations with the Army have stopped.

The CH2M Hill report represents an economic and environmental evaluation of the potential landfill sites, Harden said. Human and social evaluations are yet to be made, and Harden said public hearings will be part of that process.

"Once the attorney general gives approval, public hearings on the siting process can start in each of the compact's counties," Harden said.

them by going into the office early and working late in the afternoon. But, he said, it is worth it.

"I don't think anybody likes a steady diet of 100 percent administration when you're in an academic institution," he said. "I need to do both administration and teaching to get the level of satisfaction from this job I'm seeking. It's just more satisfying to be teaching in addition to the administrative responsibilities."

Robert Hollinger, associate dean of the College of Business Administration, teaches a business finance course. He also said he puts in many extra hours, including working through much of his lunch break.

"You just have to make time for it. It's good to keep in touch with the students," Hollinger said.

The runners themselves have set their goals nothing short of going as far as their ability will take them, and believe that the season could be a drastic improvement from last season.

"If you compare last year's top four to this year's, I would say that this four is definitely a better group," Smith said.

"There are three goals that I think we all consider — the Big Eight Championships, districts and then nationals," Trask said.

The group is eagerly awaiting the first meet at Wichita State Friday, even though it is not a prestigious meet as conference and national championships.

"I think we are eager to see where we are at, but I don't think the real excitement will come until the Big Eight, district and the NCAA championships," Warders said.

learn a great deal from him, in terms of the game, strategy and things like that — to just broaden my scope of volleyball knowledge," he said.

"After two days of interviewing and seeing the campus, I really had a good feeling about it," Lambert said. "So when Scott called me back about a week later to offer me the job, I didn't hesitate to take it."

Lambert, a 1983 graduate from Stanford, earned all-America honors in water polo on a team which won two national titles in 1980 and 1981.

"I'm really enthusiastic about volleyball," he said. "I played water polo in college, and I picked up volleyball through playing a lot of doubles and intramurals and things like that.

"There are a lot of great things here. The commitment everyone shows, also being in the Big Eight, and the notoriety it has, having one of the top teams in the country, the fact that K-State has had a winning program for many years, and wanting to elevate itself and shoot for the Big Eight championship. The facilities here are excellent — some of the best I've seen," Lambert said. "With all those reasons in mind, I thought it would be a great place to have on my resume."

He also sees K-State as a place to prove himself, free from the family ties at Notre Dame.

"At Notre Dame, I worked for my father, so I wanted to break away and establish myself, even though we had a great time working together," Lambert said. "(My father) gave me the opportunity there and got me involved. I went to graduate school there and wanted to coach, so he gave me that opportunity, which I'm thankful for.

"We work really well together, but I needed to break away after three years, and I felt that I had enough experience where I could establish myself as an assistant coach, by myself, in another program so I wouldn't be looked upon as Art Lambert's son," he said. "People do that, and whether or not I'm good or bad, it's still 'well he's the coach's son.'" nature of the film as it is, however, adds character and mood to the storyline.

Too often Americans view films chiefly for entertainment with no intentions of learning anything. The results, very often, are cookie-cutter films with audience emotions to match.

"Yol" doesn't rely on entertainment as much as it does on teaching. That fact alone establishes it as a movie worth seeing. The ethnic origins of the film serve as a rather substantial hindrance, however. If you like the parts you're able to catch, then maybe you'll need to see it again.

Guatemalan refugee speaks about labor union experience

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

A Guatemalan labor organizer who has been threatened by death squads in his home country told his story to about 100 people Thursday at St. Isidore's Chapel.

The man, who is using the alias Luis, told his story through a translator because he doesn't speak fluent English. He is seeking refuge in Canada because he fears for his life. He has been marked as a target by the death squads because of his union activities in Guatemala.

Luis is Manhattan's first political refugee traveling on what is called the Overground Railroad, a network of communities in the United States that assists refugees from El Salvador and Guatemala who have filed for political asylum and have temporary legal status in the United States.

Luis was a welder for a Guatemalan company until he helped organize a labor union. He first served as treasurer and later as primary spokesman for the union.

While being involved with the labor union from 1983 to 1989, Luis's activities in the union helped to gain benefits and bonuses for his co-workers.

He played an instrumental part in gaining a wage increase that almost doubled the income of the workers. The council of the labor union had asked the company for a pay raise, but was denied.

The labor union called for a strike against the company, and one month later the increase was granted. The workers signed a pact allowing them to come back to work on July 3, 1989, with their new wage intact.

The company felt threatened by the existence of the labor union.

"There was always constant tension between the company and the union," Luis said.

Luis said as a result of that tension, the company hired thugs to threaten him.

"The company wanted to dissolve the labor union and to take away its power," Luis said.

On July 20, 1989, the thugs forcibly gained entrance to his home. Luis, however, was not there. When he returned home, his wife told him of the visit.

African speakers kick off month-long celebration

By Erika Parker
Staff Reporter

African Awareness Month, sponsored by the African Student Union, was launched at 11 a.m. Thursday morning in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

Victor Toko, executive secretary of the Organization of African Unity, spoke about the role of the organization in African peace and development, said Mike Neba, graduate student in agricultural engineering and public relations officer for the African Student Union.

OAU is composed of the heads of state of the African countries and encourages economic developments, Neba said.

Audience members included President Jon Wefald and Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan.

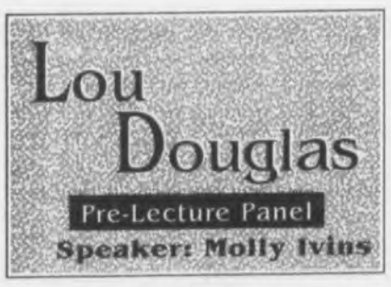
The second event of the awareness month, a panel discussion, began at 7 p.m. Thursday in Little Theatre.

Panelists included Theresa Canty, senior in secondary education and president of the Black Student Union, and Robert Guei, graduate student in agronomy and president of the African Student Union.

They discussed African and African-American cooperation and the education of black students about their African heritage.

After the panel discussion, Canty said she feels black students need to be educated about their past.

"I think we've been cut off, culturally speaking, for the last 400 years ... we're like babies now just learning a new language ... African awareness is important," she said.



The theme of African Awareness Month is "More Than 30 Years of African Independence — A Look into the '90s."

"This can be misleading," Neba said, who is from Cameroon, in West Africa.

Panelists discuss news suppression

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

Suppression of information, the Fairness Doctrine and constraints and controls on the news media were the topics presented at the first 1990 Lou Douglas pre-lecture panel Thursday evening at the K-State Union.

Donald Hedrick, professor of English, discussed five ways information is filtered through the mass media and controls what the media sources pass on to the public. He said he believes information is defined as important or trivial by those in the media or government, but information is only information.

Hedrick cited an Associated Press article about Iran printed in the Collegian last June to illustrate how the press has assumed a patriotic function in the last decade. The information is there but the way it is set up, the Iranians sound crazy because they are our enemy now, Hedrick said.

Jim McCluskey, assistant professor of radio and television, explained the unfairness of the Fairness Doctrine. Unlike the press, radio and television are regulated by the Federal Communications Commission.

"The original intent of asking for FCC intervention was about frequencies — not freedom of speech," McCluskey said.

The law states that if broadcasters allow editorials and opinions, they must also offer equal time to all opposing views, Hedrick said. The effect on broadcasters is to oppress opinions, he said.

"I tend to think the press does a good job for what it's supposed to do," said Robert Daly, associate professor of journalism. "You get the news you deserve."

Daly said he believes reporters have a strong sense of informing people, but they have problems with coverage of the news. The AP sends out 3 million words a day, but only 10 percent get into the paper.

"Editors are butchers passing themselves off as surgeons," Daly said.

Because of the "butcherings," the reporters begin writing for editors, he said. Reporters also write for their peers, other reporters, because they know people out there are not reading the papers, Daly said. Readers and viewers do not want upsetting news, he added.

Covering political candidates has two traps, Daly said. The reporter begins to like the person, and it becomes more difficult to be objective. Reporters also begin to try to appear as if they are not out to get a candidate, and thus do not go after them like they should.

Louis Ellsworth, retired physicist, said "I think he (Daly) is 100 percent right, unfortunately."

The first Lou Douglas Lecture will be at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 11 in Forum Hall. Molly Ivins will be the speaker.

Alcohol proposal downed in Senate

By Chris Koger
News Editor

A resolution recommending that 3.2 percent beer be allowed in a controlled area of the KSU Stadium parking lot was considered by Student Senate Thursday night.

The resolution, sponsored by the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, failed to be moved by special orders, which would have allowed it to be passed without a first reading by Senate.

Many questions were asked by senators concerning the wording of the resolution and what would be done with minors caught in possession of alcohol. It failed to move special orders because many senators wanted more time to hash out the actual details.

As it was presented, the resolution would:

■ Allow a temporary fence to be erected each game in the southeast corner of the lot to limit access into the area,

■ Provide security to stamp those who are of legal age and monitor for underage drinking and

■ Forbid vehicles to leave until the start of the fourth quarter.

However, the sale of alcoholic beverages was not recommended. Students would have to provide their own beer.

Athough Senate cannot impose new regulations on the University's alcohol policy, the resolution would be sent to campus administrators, who could accept, amend or disregard the recommendations.

David McIntyre, head of the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, said the administration has not expressed full support or rejection of the resolution. He did, however, say the KSU Department of Intercollegiate Athletics would like to see it passed.

McIntyre said the department would cover the costs of the program and provide the fence.

Sean Cash, arts and sciences senator, asked the senators to move the resolution special orders to allow Senate to decide on it before the football season progressed further.

"My first instinct is that this is Student Senate, not Student and Administration Senate. This is just a recommendation for the administration," Cash said. "Time is a virtue we don't have now — time is not on our side. We could wait a week or two weeks, but it would be best if we passed this now."

Joel Gruenke, graduate senator, said his constituents would need time to review the resolution.

"We need the best legislation, not the fastest legislation," Gruenke said.

Hayden given Bush's support

President speaks at GOP function

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

President George Bush was in Topeka Thursday urging Kansans to support Gov. Mike Hayden in the November election.

About 750 people attend a $500 a plate fund-raising luncheon at the Kansas Expo Center to hear the president speak. Bush landed at Forbes Field in the new Air Force One at about 11 a.m.

In his prepared speech, Bush urged Congress to put partisanship on the back burner and agree on a national budget before the new fiscal year begins on Oct. 1.

"The time for avoiding tough decisions is gone," he said. "The time for action is gone. Let's fix this budget mess once and for all."

Bush called Hayden a truly great governor and said that Kansans should support him because of the things he has done for Kansas.

Bush said Kansas unemployment is the lowest it has been in 11 years. He also cited the $4 billion increase in farm revenue since 1987 and the $2.6 billion highway improvement programs as some of Hayden's accomplishments over the past four years.

Bush also said he would like Kansans support on a farm bill that would emphasize market-oriented policies.

"In Kansas, even chickens realize that when it comes to farming, Washington doesn't know best," he said. "Kansans do."

Bush personally thanked the Kansas Air National Guard 190th Air Refueling Group from Topeka and all Kansans serving in the military for their contribution to the force in Saudi Arabia.

In the final part of his speech, Bush said he was looking forward to his meeting with Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev this weekend.

Bush said the crisis in the Middle East could have escalated into something very serious between the two superpowers, but because of improved relations, the superpowers are working together to solve the problem.

"The past year has seen new levels of cooperation between our countries," Bush said. "The Persian Gulf shows what this cooperation can achieve."

East Germans may lose land

KLEIN MACHNOW, East Germany (AP) — Large, handsome homes line every shady block in this township southwest of Berlin. Many residents would find it difficult to move away. Many fear they may have to.

Officials say up to 70 percent of the property here has been claimed by West Germans who once lived in its quiet neighborhoods.

With German unification less than a month away, the day is drawing nearer when those claims — and up to 1 million others — will be decided by local committees in scores of towns.

Such claims are only one aspect of the broader question of how to decide who owns land that was until recently under strict Communist control and, before that, part of prewar Germany.

Escape tries may mean prison

Iraq tightened the screws on trapped Westerners on Thursday, warning that anyone trying to leave without permission could face life in prison. The Soviet Union for the first time called for sending a U.N. military force to the Persian Gulf.

Washington and Moscow, meanwhile, scrambled to prepare for the weekend superpower summit they hope will bring a break in the 5-week-old crisis.

At the United Nations, diplomats said U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar planned to send an envoy to occupied Kuwait to meet with diplomats whose embassies are surrounded by Iraqi troops and with trapped foreigners. Baghdad would have to give its consent for the visit.

Men net great white shark

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Two brothers fishing off the Southern California coast caught a little more than they bargained for Tuesday.

Trapped in one of their nets was a great white shark measuring 16 feet, 5 inches and weighing an estimated 3,000 pounds.

Pete and John Busalacchi, both of San Diego, were fishing for swordfish, thresher shark and mako shark when they snared the great white about 25 miles west of Point Loma.

Great whites are not uncommon in waters off the California coast, but few that size have been netted and brought ashore.

The brothers gave the shark to a seafood processing company, American Seafood, which sold the head and jaws to a collector in Minneapolis. The rest will be sent to a research laboratory in New York for studies of its immune system, said David Arpia, the company's president.

Heart problem traced to genes

BOSTON (AP) — Scientists have discovered two defective genes that cause dangerous thickening of the heart.

Thickening of the heart is the leading medical cause of sudden death among young athletes.

Glitches in these genes result in an inherited disorder known as familial hypertrophic cardiomyopathy. Victims are prone to suffer heart rhythm problems and heart failure or to die suddenly from cardiac arrest.

Among the most notable victims of cardiomyopathy was basketball star Hank Gathers of Loyola Marymount University, who collapsed during a game in March. Experts are uncertain, however, whether he had the inherited form of the disease.

The latest discovery by researchers at Harvard Medical School is the first time scientists have pinpointed the precise genes responsible for an inherited abnormality of the heart itself.

Government regains Franklin

OVERLAND PARK (AP) — A federal appeals panel ordered government regulators to retake control of Franklin Savings Association on Thursday — just hours after the thrift's managers had moved back into their offices.

U.S. District Judge Dale E. Saffels had ruled Wednesday that regulators improperly seized the thrift, the largest in Kansas.

The operators were allowed back in their offices Thursday morning, but the government obtained a stay Thursday afternoon from the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

In response, Saffels ordered the Resolution Trust Corp. to retake control of the thrift immediately while the case is appealed. The court made no comment on Saffels' decision.

Franklin officials could not be reached for comment immediately after Thursday's order.

Finney, Hayden trade insults

TOPEKA (AP) — The debate over debates in the gubernatorial campaign continued Thursday.

The campaign of Democratic State Treasurer Joan Finney criticized Republican Gov. Mike Hayden for missing a Wednesday function in Lawrence.

The criticism came two days after Hayden said Finney was ducking debates with him. A Hayden spokesman said Finney's criticism is off base.

Finney attended a luncheon held Wednesday by the Association of Mental Health Centers. Hayden was represented by Dennis Taylor, acting Social and Rehabilitation Services secretary.

"Mike Hayden was to appear," said Jack Parry, Finney's campaign manager. "Much to Finney's surprise, a surrogate was there in place of Hayden."

Parry added: "Mike Hayden is hiding. If you want to talk, you have to show up."

Frank Ybarra, Hayden's campaign press secretary, said the governor was not scheduled to speak at the luncheon. Hayden has proposed having 10 joint appearances, and Finney has agreed to four.

"It's an attempt by Finney to try to divert attention away from the issue," Ybarra said. "The issue here is clear. Finney is ducking appearances with Mike Hayden."

PSU professor aids in search

PITTSBURG (AP) — A Pittsburg State University professor helped develop a technique investigators are using as they look for clues in the killings of five students in Gainesville, Fla.

John Frair, who now teaches journalism at PSU, has been working the past several years with Dr. Michael West, a dentist and deputy medical examiner from Mississippi, investigating the use of ultraviolet light to uncover clues that would normally remain invisible.

West has been in Florida the past two days, helping law enforcement officials there find additional fingerprints and other clues that might have been overlooked before.

Frair said he and West developed the technique — which can show footprints on a hard floor or the remnants of bruises that appear to have long since healed — while trying to find a way to identify bite marks on crime victims, matching the marks to a suspect's teeth.

Because visible wavelengths of light penetrate the skin, much of what is seen by the naked eye is beneath the surface layer, Frair said. That's why tissues under the skin, such as blood vessels, are visible.

But ultraviolet light doesn't penetrate the skin nearly as far as visible light, meaning it will make surface defects visible. Those defects, whether bite marks, bruises or other trauma to the skin, can then be photographed.

Carnival promotes activities

More than 100 clubs will have displays in Union Sunday

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

A wide variety of campus groups and organizations will set up displays at the 33rd Annual Activities Carnival Sunday at the K-State Union.

The carnival, sponsored by the Union Program Council Special Events Committee, KSDB-FM and the University Activities Board, will be held from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m.

"The carnival has a two-fold purpose," said Amy Hoch, UPC Special Events Commitee Chairperson and sophomore in business. "It lets people who want to get involved see their options, and it's a great way for campus activities, clubs and organizations to promote themselves."

The evening will offer UAB-registered organizations an opportunity to show interested students what they have to offer. The carnival also gives students the chance to see the wide variety of groups and activities available for extracurricular involvement at K-State.

Each organization will set up a display table in the Union using audio-visual materials to show the different projects, functions and services that specific organization may participate in or provide.

The Professional Business Women of Manhattan will provide a cotton candy machine to enhance the carnival atmosphere. The event will also feature demonstrations and performances by some of the participating organizations. KSDB-FM, a cosponsor of the event, will be doing live remotes and interviews throughout the evening.

To promote spirit and unique display ideas, carnival sponsors will be holding a best booth contest. Cash prizes of $25 for first place, $15 for second and $10 for third will be awarded to the winning organizations.

"We like to reward those organizations who put a lot of effort into their set-up," Hoch said. "It makes things more fun and interesting that way."

More than 100 organizations have already signed up for the event, and a waiting list was created due to the lack of space available, said Mike Penner, UPC program adviser.

"It's a great way for clubs and organizations to get recognized and recruit new members," Penner said.

The UPC Feature Films Committee will also be showing "The Hunt For Red October" at 7 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall Sunday.

Penner said he hopes the film will draw students to the carnival and carnival-goers would consider seeing the film.

Non-resident tuition increases 10 percent for fall semester

By Eric Robison
Collegian Reporter

Tuition and fees increased 6 percent for residents and 10 percent for non-residents this semester from the fall 1989 semester.

K-State tuition and fees for resident undergraduate students are $785.60, while non-resident student tuition and fees are $2,347.60.

Marvin Burris, assistant budget director for the Kansas Board of Regents, said tuition may be the same from university to university, but student fees can vary.

Burris said K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University are required to charge the same tuition of $613 for resident students and $2,175 for non-resident students.

The student fees are set by each university and must have the regents' approval, Burris said.

WSU charges the highest student fees of $191. K-State student fees are $172.60 and KU fees are $169.

Each state school compares its cost of tuition to five peer schools, Burris said. K-State compares its budget with Colorado State, Iowa State, North Carolina State, Oklahoma State and Oregon State universities.

The regents determines the budget for each university one year in advance. Another increase of 3 percent for resident students and a 10 percent increase for non-resident students is planned for fall 1991.

Music curriculum hurting in several essential areas

Lack of funding, practice facilities may cost program

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

Due to some problems within K-State's music department, accreditation was deferred at the department's 10-year review.

"The Music Department is reviewed every 10 years by the National Association of Schools of Music, and this year we had three problems that caused our accreditation to be deferred," said Jack Flouer, head of the music department.

The problems consisted of a lack of funding, the marching band's practice field and a lack of practice facilities, Flouer said.

The accrediting team met in September 1989, which was followed by a commission meeting in November. The music department was notified of its deficiencies in December 1989, he said.

To remain accredited, the department must meet certain guidelines. The guidelines concern curriculum items and student requirements. Also, there are requirements of programs and facilities that must be addressed, Flouer said.

Right now the music department is making certain proposals to correct the problems and keep their accreditation, Flouer said.

"We are working to correct our deficiencies. We have taken care of the problems of funding and the lack of practice facilities space," he said.

Flouer said the department has proposed Wenger Practice Modules for practice facilities.

"The modules are self-contained practice units; now we need to find a place to put them," he said.

The problems with the band's practice fields are being addressed, said Stan Finck, director of bands.

"As far as the location of the practice field, it is wonderful as it is located near McCain Auditorium," Finck said. "Problems with the practice field include bad drainage, which causes muddy, slippery conditions and bad grass in the field resulting in dusty conditions."

The music department has decided to regrade the field and form it with a small hump in the middle like a football field. A sprinkler system will then be installed. All of these remedies will assist in drainage, Finck said. All of the problems have been addressed and should result in the department remaining accredited.

"All of the problems were things that can be corrected and there is no reason that the accreditation should not go through," Finck said.

Flouer said the accrediting team's deferral helped the department define problems in its program, and he said he sees their visits as a positive influence on the department.

"Having an accrediting team come is good, and it keeps us on our toes," Flouer said. "That is what keeps programs strong."

Sensitivity to audience crucial in word usage

The editors of the University Daily Kansan learned a valuable lesson last week. They learned that words can hurt.

An editor of the University of Kansas daily newspaper decided last year to uppercase the word black when referring to a group of people. One month ago, the new editor reversed that policy and decided to lowercase both black and white in all references.

The editor explained his reasoning in a column. Among his reasons was a desire to keep style consistent with other newspapers. After all, the Associated Press stylebook — commonly referred to as the journalist's bible — supports lowercase style. Other students had been angered that, in the past year, black had been uppercased, but white had not.

This decision was not popular with black activist students who felt slighted by the reversal. Thirty-five students, after meeting with Kansan editors and campus administration, burned a stack of newspapers outside the Kansan newsroom.

After consideration and consultation with his peers, the editor reversed his decision. The Kansan now uses both black and white in uppercase style.

The Kansan did the right thing. Sometimes a newspaper has to change its policy to accommodate the unique needs of its readers. Because in the end, words don't matter, people do.

Laws needed to regulate alcohol around stadium

Football season is full of traditions — marching bands, mascot and fan antics, rallies and cheers.

And tailgate parties.

It has been the unwritten policy of the KSU Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, K-State Police, students, administrators and alumni to virtually ignore Kansas laws prohibiting the consumption of alcohol on state property — which includes the KSU Stadium and parking lots.

Yes, it is illegal. Just read the back of your football ticket. It's right there, next to the ad for Vista Drive-In: "Drinking or consuming alcoholic beverages on stadium grounds or surrounding area is punishable by law."

The athletic department and police have tried to half-heartedly dispel the fact that fans are allowed drink before, during and after games. When the question was raised last year about the legality of this tradition, both departments said it wasn't condoned.

The tailgate parties sponsored by the athletic department weren't promoting alcohol use, and police were not going to tolerate it: anyone with alcohol would be ticketed.

At least that's what we were told. But after the campus police gave this statement, the practice still continued. Students were warned and their alcohol was confiscated, but no tickets were issued.

It goes without saying that there will be alcohol at the football games, and no amount of security — short of strip searches — is going to stop it.

The obvious answer to this lackadaisical attitude toward the law is to change the law. University officials need to work with the athletic department and students to implement a system that would allow alcoholic beverages in a controlled area of the parking lots. Student Senate has already begun to consider this, and their constituents should voice opinions in favor of such measures.

Another suggestion would be to allow the sale of 3.2 beer inside the stadium. Concession money could easily be boosted, which would help the athletic department's faltering budget.

Doing so is not likely to create a drunken mob of students, at least not more than there usually is. The student sections of the stadiums frequently smell like a brewery and are littered with empty and broken liquor bottles. Alcohol is prominent at the games. If you think it isn't, you haven't been to one.

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

I was sitting in my bullpen office pondering ways to get five students out of each of my composition classes when Bart Bryce ran in the door and sat down next to me.

"D.L.," he said. "The bridge is out. We're adrift in a sea of fog. Our horse is untethered. Our answer is blowing in the wind!"

I set aside my two seven-page class lists and leaned back in my chair. "What's wrong this week, Bart? Are you upset because that guy from New Kids on the Block beat up that man on that plane?"

"It's not that, D.L. It's much more disheartening than that."

"Explain."

"I'm a staunch Republican, D.L. I really am. But this election thing has really got me confused."

"What's wrong with it?"

"Many terrible things, D.L. A transformation is taking place between the parties."

"Explain."

"The conservatives are becoming the liberals, and the liberals are becoming the conservatives. The Democrat is against legalized abortion, and the Republican is for it. What does this mean?"

I shrugged. "It could mean that the terms conservative and liberal are meaningless."

"But if you take away the 'L' word, what's the difference between the Republican and Democratic Parties?"

"What difference is there now?"

"Well, the conservatives believe in protecting human life via executions and the outlawing of abortion, or is that the liberal position now? And the liberals, or conservatives now, believe in protecting human life via legalized abortion and no executions. Or they used to, I think. I'm so perplexed."

"Well," I said. "this all makes more sense when you remember that Kansas, a bastion of conservatism, has legalized abortion and no death penalty, making it one of only four states that meet both requirements of true liberalism."

"Why do we vote Republicans for president then?"

"Why have we had so many Democratic Governors?"

"I've always felt that was caused by rigged voting booths."

"And," I continued. "Why is it that no governor, Republican or Democrat, has been able to push a death penalty bill through the Legislature, even if it was one of his key campaign stances?."

"Poor leadership?" Bart suggested.

"Maybe it's a lack of interest by the voters. I mean, did you hear anyone complaining about a lack of a death penalty?"

"Weigand and Finney," Bart said.

"But Weigand also said we need a balanced budget ammendment in Kansas when our constitution already contains such a clause, and Finney's a Democrat who even has some women confused. Is it more important to have a woman as governor even though she is against legalized abortion or to have a man who supports legalized abortion?"

"That's why I'm confused!" Bart yelled, standing up. As my desk is in the midst of 20 other desks, many shared by two people, and the noise level is always high, Bart's outburst went unnoticed. "I always vote Republican — always. I'm a good Republican and a good conservative, but now the only good conservative is a Democrat. It's the Lloyd Bentsen syndrome all over again, D.L."

"I guess your problem is that you're going to have to decide if you're a Republican or a conservative."

"I thought they were one and the same."

"Perhaps they used to be. But you've also got to decide what those terms mean. My theory is that they are meaningless for the most part. I believe that as long as Kansans' taxes are reasonable, their highways are reasonably well-maintained and their children are being reasonably well-educated, that all the rest of those issues are just treated as peripheral and sort of silly. Kansans are fiscally conservative, don't confuse that with right wing, whatever that is."

"So am I a conservative or a liberal?" Bart asked. "Or a liberal or a Democrat or whatever you just said.?"

"Well, Bart, that's a really hard call and it's going to take some soul searching on your part."

"Maybe I should vote for that guy in Lawrence who's running on that legalize pot thing, the Pot Party or whatever. Too bad he's not running for governor. Or I could vote for Phelps and let him save me from all those perverts in state government."

"That pot thing sounds okay," I said. "But remember, they can't even keep the perverts out of Farrell Library, how are they going to keep them out of the government."

"Maybe it's time we got violent with them," Bart said. "Or is that too much of a liberal/conservative thing to do?"

"Perhaps it's time you became a true Republican radical conservative liberal status quo dyed-in-the-wool fly-by-night stay-the-course knee-jerk controlled-response Geraldo Rivera Democrat. It's so very you."

"I think that's a good idea, D.L., just let me look up a few of those phrases first." I shrugged and picked up my class lists again. Who started all this anyway?"

Anxiety created

Editor,

Congratulations and thank you to Jana Leep for her thoughtful commentary on the University administration's plans for reorganization — and congratulations and thank you to the Collegian for printing that commentary. Perhaps I have been mistaken in supposing that the most we might expect from the Collegian would be a waffling, wobbling, weak-kneed response to what promises to be one of the most important administrative decisions at K-State in the past half-century.

Like Leep, I look forward to hearing how, on Sept. 11, the adminstration will attempt to convince us that it really intends to act in such a way as to make K-State a stronger academic institution — a stronger university, that is, rather a 1950s version of a technological school characterized by narrowness of vision and purpose.

To achieve that end, as Leep contends, the administration will have to make clear how it hopes to strengthen, not debilitate all areas of the College of Arts and Sciences. Quite rightly, Leep points out that it must assure us that it sees the entire college, certainly including the humanities and social sciences, as having a larger purpose than merely providing yeoman service to meet the needs of the technological areas of the University.

Unless it is prepared to act in such a way that recognizes the integrity of the disciplines within the humanities and social sciences, in a way that supports both the research and teaching in these disciplines, in a way that permits development of a faculty whose undergraduate and graduate programs can produce students qualified to continue their studies in the nation's best graduate and professional programs — it will only tell us that it wants to turn the College of Arts and Sciences at K-State into a glorified JuCo.

That the administration will succeed in providing us a clear and compelling explanation of its plans and vision is to be hoped, but perhaps not to be expected. So far the administration has done a woeful job of communicating its intentions for the reorganization to the faculty and students.

After the Aug. 10 article in the Wichita Eagle, murmurs and whispers of denial occasionally rustled through the corridors of Anderson Hall. In the next two weeks, while foul rumors proliferated and morale of the faculty diminished, there were no official clarifications, no press releases, no attempt to communicate with the University community as a whole, simply no attempt at damage control. Only on Aug. 29 did we hear from the provost, who tried to rally our spirits with a "there, there, we really care" letter — a letter fraught, I fear, with alarming ambiguities.

Despite this foreboding start, we must continue to hope that the administration will make good use of its time and energies on Sept. 11 to allay the anxieties it has created, to assure us that its idea of reorganization amounts to something more than simply lopping off limbs here and there in the hope that those remaining will be stronger, to assure us that it has a vision of a University.

Oil destructive

Editor,

In reference to Randy Crnkovich's pronunciamentos over what is necessary and proper in the Middle East: how do you know, Randy, that Saddam Hussein isn't God's way of telling us to drop our self-destructive addiction to fossil fuels once and for all? If the worldwide concerted effort that George Bush is calling for were dedicated to that end, oil would cease to be the cause for international tension and what Saddam Hussein did would be none of our business.

Think about it. You are ready to kill to avoid letting go of your addiction to oil, just like a crack addict kills for more coke. Remember, the first step is admitting that you have a problem.

You're right about one thing, though, it is absolutely proper to have ideals and strive to make the world a better place. It just works better if one considers more than one point of view before jumping in with what, in this case, might be an inappropriate, painful and expensive military response.

IN FOCUS

David Galloway, senior in pre-veterinary medicine, and Todd Lowe, senior in marketing, release a group of young homing pigeons Thursday evening on the lawn of Anderson Hall.

Flights of fancy

K-State students raise and race homing pigeons

A lone homing pigeon rests on the rooftop of Galloway's garage. The flock is free to fly around the neighborhood during the day, but at night Galloway locks them in their loft for protection.

Gnats swarmed around David Galloway's head as he held a baby pigeon in his hand. It was a tiny, fragile thing that twitched its newborn head nervously. The baby had tripled in size in the five days since it had hatched, and feathers had only just begun to spike out of its prickly pink skin.

"The reason you never see a baby pigeon is because you can't tell the difference between a 4-week-old bird and a full-grown one," Galloway said. "This one will look like the rest soon. They grow tremendously fast."

He put the baby bird back and reached into another nest in which a mother pigeon was sitting. She protectively slapped his hand with her wing.

Galloway, senior in pre-veterinary medicine, started raising homing pigeons as a hobby, but he's very serious about them.

He takes them to other towns and even other states and races them by timing how long it takes for them to get back home.

He said about 40 birds hang out in his loft. They come and go, he said, and his is only a small-time operation compared to others he's seen. That's OK with him. He knows each of his birds.

"That bird there's a good racer," he said, pointing to a larger gray pigeon perched on the top of the roost. "He's strictly for breeding purposes."

Half of Galloway's birds are strictly breeders. He would like to get up a team of around 20 good pigeons to race, he said.

Pigeons cost him a little, he said, but his greatest investment in the birds is time. He started out in the sport with 12 pigeons, half of which he lost by training them.

Galloway opened the coop's door to round up some pigeons to take out to the interstate, and his brown-spotted bird dog charged towards the coop, which spooked some of the birds.

"Get outta there," Galloway yelled, pinning the dog against the door. The birds were not kept in the coop and had free rein of the place during the day. Night was a different story.

"We've had a cat problem, so I have to lock them up at night," he had said earlier in the evening. "A cat got in here and killed a couple hundred dollars worth of birds."

Cats and dogs are about the only worries Galloway's pigeons have. They're fed well, and they're mostly predator-free, especially in flight, because they're too fast.

"They can make it back here from Houston, Texas, in about eight hours," said Todd Lowe, senior in marketing, who raises a few birds with Galloway. "If you calculate that out, well, that's really movin' it.

"They can fly about 50 miles per hour, cruise at about 60 and, with a good strong tailwind, can get up to 90," Lowe said. "We'll take them out to the interstate, and they'll be back before we will."

Both Galloway and Lowe said it's still a pretty big mystery as to how the birds are actually able to find their way home. Theories exist, but none have been proven. It may have to do with the Earth's magnetic field, it may be due to the sun or it may be both. But scientists just aren't sure, they said.

Upon return to the loft, the pigeons must enter through a small doorway to officially complete their trip home.

Lowe said in one particularly bizarre experiment, birds were taken up in an airplane, tied down to a turntable and spun around blindfolded. Then a battery pack was strapped to the pigeon's back that made the bird think the Earth's magnetic poles were switched, and the pigeon was released out the hatch of the airplane. After all that, the pigeons were still able to find their way back to their home.

"They're still not for sure how they do it," Lowe said.

Lowe said he bought some cheap birds to get back into raising them and laughed when he said he was hoping to get his birds trained to be faster than Galloway's more expensive birds.

"I told him I could beat him with these $5 birds," he said.

Galloway loaded the caged birds into the back of his Subaru. The pigeons seemed to know what was going on. After all they've flown back everywhere from Altuna, Kan., to Houston, Texas. Most of them have made it back.

"If they don't make it back, that's just weedin' out the weak," Lowe said.

Once Galloway and Lowe had the pigeons 10 miles out at the interstate, cars were zooming by with their passengers gawking out the windows at them from their captive seats.

Galloway hunched down to the small, homebuilt wooden cage he had gently put down on the side of the road. The six captive homing pigeons were pacing anxiously.

A flutter of wings filled the early evening sky as soon as Galloway opened the cage top. The pigeons were off like winged bullets and were a good clip south of their roost.

"They'll probably make it back before we will," Galloway said, shutting the cage. As he loaded the case back into his Subaru, the pigeons were well on their way home.

ABOVE: After the long flight home, the pigeons are quite thirsty, but they wait their turn at the water fountain in "pigeon holes."
LEFT: Galloway has air line measurements from the various start points across the country directly to his loft in central Manhattan. The pigeons race from as far away as Huntsville, Texas, a distance more than 500 miles.

Wildcats set to face Leathernecks

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

After two-a-day practices, scrimmages against teammates and conditioning in extreme heat, a feeling often comes over a football team that it needs to play a game in order to discover where it needs further improvement.

With as many as six freshmen and many untested players expected to see action, however, K-State coach Bill Snyder knows his Wildcat squad still has plenty of room for improvement and preparation.

"I don't think there's ever been a season go by that players and coaches alike haven't had that feeling that it's time to play," Snyder said. "Normally that comes about one week prior to your opening ballgame. I'm not at that point. But I think we're about at the right point. I feel comfortable with where we are right now."

The experience of a game brings to light many things that aren't apparent in practice. Snyder said that a lack of experience and of continuity can affect a team's opening-game performance.

"I think playing your first ballgame is always a precarious position to be in," Snyder said. "You never really know what to expect from your opponent and in particular you don't know what to expect from your own players.

"In a game like this, as in every game, I'm more concerned about what we do, more so than about our opponents," he said. "We've got a lot of young kids, and it's just tough to know what to expect from them."

The Western Illinois Leathernecks bring the experience of an earlier contest to the Wildcats' opener, an 18-11 loss to Arkansas-Monticello last Saturday.

Snyder doesn't think Western Illinois gained a great advantage over the Wildcats by playing a game already. He noted that the Leathernecks' loss to obscure Arkansas-Monticello may have been an embarrassment, which could cause them to come to their second game better prepared emotionally, looking to earn respect against a Big Eight school.

"It would be a great feather in their cap," Snyder said of a possible Leatherneck win Saturday.

Though some may question the caliber of Division I-AA Western Illinois, Snyder isn't about to take Saturday's opponent less seriously than a Big Eight rival.

"This is a school that some people may say isn't of the caliber to be on a Big Eight team's schedule," Snyder said. "We all know the dilemma of overlooking people or of not taking people seriously. We're not in a position to look at any team like that. There isn't anybody that somehow can't find a way to beat somebody on any given day."

Snyder doesn't consider the potential of a loss against a smaller division school something to fear, saying that K-State has just one objective — to improve.

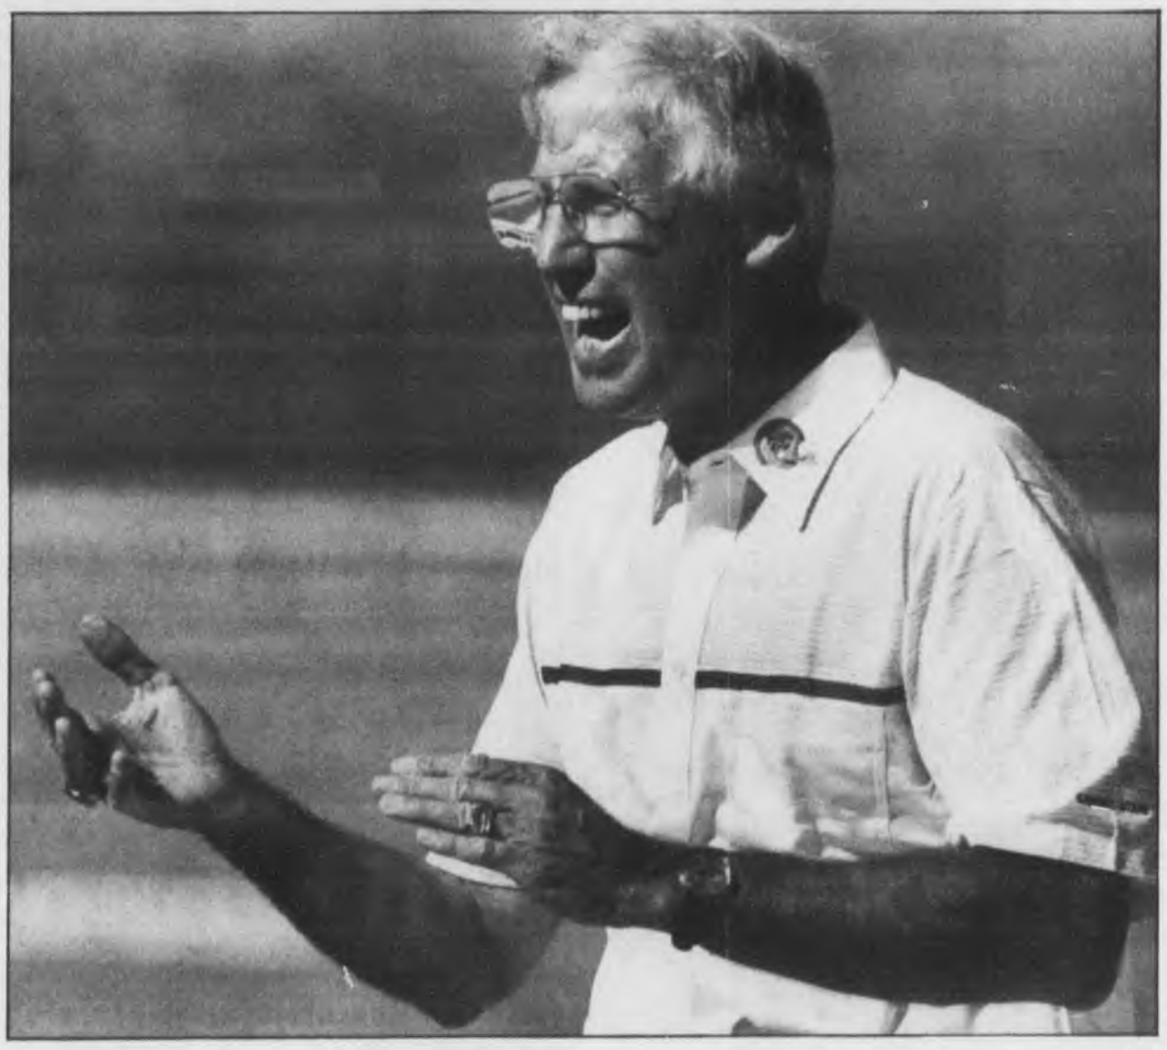
"If you lose to a Division II school or a I-AA school or someone that other people might not classify in your ability level, it has the potential to be somewhat damaging, I guess," Snyder said. "But I look at it maybe a little bit differently. What we're trying to do is get better, and if we do get better, we should win some games."

In the only previous meeting of the two teams, K-State defeated Western Illinois 35-7 at home in the opening game of the 1986 season, the last opening-game victory for the Wildcats.

Western Illinois coach Randy Ball is in his initial season, replacing Bruce Craddock, who died of cancer last February. The team slumped at mid-season last year when Craddock was stricken, and Snyder noted that the loss of their coach may have affected the team in its opening contest. Ball was frustrated by his offense's inability to capitalize upon opportunities produced by the defense.

The Wildcats are not emphasizing any phase of their offense for the opening game, and Snyder said he hopes to establish a balanced attack. He said the Leathernecks often pressure the quarterback with up to eight people.

In their opening game, Western Illinois blocked an extra point and two punts which resulted in a touchdown and a safety. Snyder mentioned defensive back Bryon Cox and defensive linemen John Dixon and Max Ford as Leathernecks who have received All-American attention.



Snyder said Western Illinois has several potential weapons on offense and looks for the Leathernecks to open up their offense Saturday.

"It could be they thought they would save some things for the game against us," Snyder said. "They are capable of a great deal."

The Leatherneck offense features senior running backs Mike Cox and Bernard Holloway, and physical quarterback Ron Reed. Lineman John Binkowski was particularly praised by Snyder as strong and talented.

Leavitt new to staff

Linebacker coach joins Snyder's rebuilding effort

IN FOCUS: K-State Football–New Assistant

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

New K-State linebacker coach Jim Leavitt is finally getting a chance to work alongside a man he's watched for many years.

"When (Bill Snyder) got the head coaching job here, I hoped that I would have the opportunity to come here," Leavitt said. "Here you're working for a man that was part of a big turnaround at Iowa.

"I always thought that Iowa's offense was tremendous. I was real impressed with what they were doing offensively, and I really thought Coach Snyder was a tremendous person anyway," Leavitt said. "I didn't know him a great deal, other than I was real impressed with the way he handled himself. He was obviously a key to that offense (at Iowa).

"I've been with two programs that hadn't won for many years, in Division III and Division II, but I hadn't been with a Division I program to help turn it around. So when I had the opportunity to come here, you can see why I was excited."

Leavitt is no stranger to the Big Eight. Having played at Missouri in the mid-70s, the former defensive back received second-team all-Big Eight honors, as well as being named MU's most valuable player in the 1977 season.

After graduating in 1978, Leavitt stayed on with the Tigers as a graduate assistant for two years before moving on.

"I left (Missouri) to become the defensive coordinator at the University of Dubuque, a Division III school in Iowa," Leavitt said. "About that same time, Hayden Fry's staff went to the University of Iowa, which is about an hour away. So I got to know the coaches at Iowa, and at Dubuque we happen to have built a program that was very poor to a national playoff (team)," said Leavitt.

"I left there to go up to Morningside College. They were in the same kind of situation as Dubuque," Leavitt said. "They hadn't had winning seasons for 28 years. We happen to have had two winning programs there and had a nationally ranked team, the first for many, many years.

"So, when I was at those two schools, those eight or nine years were the years Bill Snyder was at Iowa with Hayden Fry," Leavitt said. "I was going in the summer to the University of Iowa to keep working on my Ph.D., because I was the defensive coordinator at Morningside in the fall. That's how I got to know them, and I was very, very impressed with the way they pulled that program together."

With the programs Leavitt has helped turn around, the man who is a triathlete away from the field is expecting to take things in stride this season.

How to impress your friends, annoy those near you at game

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

Ah, just one more night.

Contrary to many beliefs around the country, football at K-State is played on a green field with goalposts at each end, just like it is at Miami, Fla., and Notre Dame.

And whether the team's previous season record was 1-10 or 10-1, the first game of another campaign always seems to be accompanied by a dose of anxiety and excitement.

You gotta love it.

If you think I'm conveying a rah-rah-rah and sis-boom-bah attitude toward Saturday's opener against the Western Illinois Leathernecks, give yourself a pat on the back. I'm about as giddy as a kid on Christmas Day when this time of year rolls around.

I hope most of you are, too.

For those of you who are, I've got a special treat today. I don't want you arriving at KSU Stadium tomorrow night empty-handed and clueless. My goal is to make you the life of your pre-game tailgate party — or perhaps, the nuisance.

I've always had a pet peeve when attending a sporting event — the know-it-all fan. He's the one who sits directly in front of you and can tell you what the third-string placekicker ate for breakfast three times a week while he was in junior high.

He'll also provide you with updated scores of the Vermont Prep-Central Maine JV matchup after he turns down his blaring transistor to announce his intentions. Even if you don't want his expertise, he'll give it to you — and everybody sitting 12 sections away.

I figure this breed of fan can't be stopped, so, to complete the adage, you might as well join 'em. If this column creates 42,000 of my pet peeves (the number represents seating capacity at KSU Stadium), then I've done my job.

So here's the lighter side of everything you need to know about the 1990 Wildcats and a potpourri of items I consider essential to tomorrow night's game.

■ K-State reserve defensive tackle Ekwensi Griffith lists chess and judo among his favorite hobbies. At 6-foot, 265 pounds, could you imagine the nerve it would take to checkmate this guy?

■ Another K-State heavyweight, nose tackle Evan Simpson, has a favorite television show. What is it? It should be obvious. His last name is a good hint.

■ Tight-end Russ Campbell earned a pair of trips to the Bahamas selling fire extinguishers for a company this past summer. This story might hold water at K-State, but I have a feeling if Campbell was a UNLV, Missouri or Southern Methodist player, an NCAA investigation would be called for possible recruiting violations.

Trio of teams on road this weekend

'Cat volleyball squad to compete in Southwest Missouri State event

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The K-State volleyball squad will be putting its 3-0 record up against stiff competition this weekend in the Southwest Missouri State September Classic at Springfield, Mo.

The spikers are off to their best start since 1988, and will begin tournament action Saturday at 11 a.m. against last year's Big Ten Conference runner-up, Minnesota.

"Minnesota is, for sure, one of the top teams in our region," Wildcat coach Scott Nelson said. "They tend to be very big and physical at the net offensively, and at blocking. So they're going to be our first opponent to present both sorts of strengths to us this year."

Nelson said the competition doesn't stop there, because the 'Cats will play SMSU in a 4 p.m. match.

"Southwest Missouri State is also, traditionally, one of the stronger teams in our region," Nelson said. "SMS has a nice homecourt advantage. They have a good, rowdy crowd, and that will be a good experience for us to enter into that sort of environment. It's probably fairly comparable to some of the Big Eight home courts."

The Bears' head coach, Linda Dollar, is the winningest coach in the country, sporting a record of 643-198-21, but has yet to win a match in the first three of the season.

"I think (SMS) has one of the top coaches in the country," Nelson said. "Southwest Missouri State is normally a team that does not make errors. They usually have good size, they run a good offense, they don't make errors, but they allow their opponents to take themselves out of matches.

"Minnesota may be a little more error-prone, but they also create lots of opportunities with their aggressivness," Nelson continued. "So both those teams are going to present a unique challenge."

So far the young spikers have made their marks in the Big Eight Conference statisic books.

Harriers open season with meet loaded with non-conference foes

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

The time has come to see whether the summer practices and two-a-day workouts for cross country have succeeded.

The men's and women's cross country teams will be traveling to Wichita State for the WSU Invitational beginning today at 6 p.m. for the women's race, and 6:30 p.m. for the men's.

Being the first meet of the season, and because of the extreme heat wave, the K-State harriers are keeping the meet low-key. However they will continue their rigorous training as to prepare for their later, more important races, such as the conference and national championships.

"We're going to have Wichita State, Drake, maybe Oklahoma State and a bunch of small schools, which is enough. I really don't care who is there," head coach John Capriotti said. "We are not adjusting our training, and we are not cutting back. I just want to see where we are at this time of the year."

Although the meet is not one of the highly touted meets of the season, Capriotti sees no reason why the team should not be competitive.

"The splits will mean nothing, but I want to see who responds in competition and how they respond," Capriotti said. "I am anxious to see certain individuals who have looked good in practice. It's one thing to look good in practice, and another thing to look good when the chips are down."

The men will be headed by David Warders, Ron Smith, Todd Trask and Phil Byrne, who will create better up-front runners than K-State has had in the past, Capriotti said.

Trask and Byrne are both junior college transfers to K-State this year, and Capriotti said he believes they will make an immediate impact on the team.

There are seven runners on the squad, with the top five scoring in the meets, making it essential to have backups for the top runners. For K-State, those runners are returners Pat

The K-State women's golf team will open the fall portion of its schedule at the Cyclone Classic in Ames, Iowa, today and Saturday.

The Wildcats will compete in a 10-team field that includes Big Eight powers Kansas and Nebraska, and tournament host Iowa State.

"We're looking for a top five finish," K-State golf coach Russ Bunker said. "That's the goal the girls and I have set for the first tournament."

Bunker expected the Jayhawks and Cornhuskers to be the frontrunners for the title.

K-State will be led by senior Chris Adams, junior Adena Hagedorn and sophomore Valerie Hahn. Hagedorn led the team with a stroke average of 82.3, while Adams and Hahn finished at 84.6 and 86 respectively.

Live performers to play at pre-game festivities

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Pre-game entertainment for K-State's football season opener Saturday at KSU Stadium includes free food, bands, disc jockeys and clowns from 1 to 6 p.m.

The action kicks off with "Cat Jam '90" at Triangle Park in Aggieville, where several bands will be playing until 5 p.m.

Roach Factory, Mantis and the Barn Burners are all scheduled to perform, said KSDB music director Jim Johnson, junior in journalism and mass communications. The bands range in styles from rock'n'roll and heavy metal to rock-a-billy.

"We're planning it as kind of a pre-game victory party," Johnson said. "We're going to try to have Willie the Wildcat and the K-State cheerleaders there."

The activities at KSU Stadium will begin about 4 p.m. with a DJ and two bands.

KQLA-FM will be on the east side of the stadium. Tom Nelson and Lucas Fox will be broadcasting live and playing whatever music the students want to hear, said KQLA-FM program director Mike Temaat.

KQLA-FM is backing the Wildcats, Temaat said.

"We're fully behind them, and they're going to have a great season," he said.

The bands Almost Live and Flint Hills Express will be playing on the west side of the stadium.

"We're ready to play," Almost Live member Scott Frerking said. "I hope it cools down, though."

The group sings along with pre-recorded music from the 1950s and 1960s, including some country-western and some Blues Brothers tunes.

"We're not totally live because we use pre-recorded music — but we're 'Almost Live,'" Frerking said.

Free tacos from Amigos restaurant will be served at the pre-game party until 6 p.m., when the music winds down in the stadium parking lot.

The stadium parking lots will also feature the antics of clowns before each home game this season — two K-State graduate students will be painting faces, walking on stilts and entertaining the crowd. The two spent the summer as professional clowns.

Kickoff for the game is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. and a free K-State license plate will be given with the purchase of each student season ticket until game time.

University sanctioned pre-game tailgate parties at KSU Stadium are being planned for the two-night games only.

K-State police will have uniformed officers at the pre-game activities at the stadium. The Kansas Highway Patrol and Riley County Police Department will aid K—State police with crowd and traffic control, said Robert Mellgren, campus police.

Practices in heat prepares band for 1st performance at game

By Susan Boos
Collegian Reporter

With K-State's home opener against Western Illinois fast approaching, the football team has spent hours practicing and preparing — but so has another team.

The K-State Marching Band, Pridettes and Color Guard have been practicing for Saturday's game since Aug. 22, and Jari Webber, Color Guard instructor, said they were excited to finally get to perform.

"We've been practicing for three weeks and are ready to go," Webber said.

The band practiced eight hours a day in the grueling heat during their first week of practice. Stan Finck, band director, said the heat made everyone uncomfortable, but no one suffered seriously from the hot conditions until the band's performance at Hardee's on Aug. 25.

"Six ended up in Lafene (Health Center) after the performance at Hardee's," Finck said. "If it stays this hot, we may have trouble at some of the games."

Darin Baldwin, senior in music, was one of the six to be treated at Lafene.

"I felt sick, but I knew I had to make it to the end of the concert," Baldwin said. "When it was over, I just sat down. Someone helped me up, and I didn't know I was going to Lafene until we got there."

Scott Johnson, Pridette sponsor, said the Pridettes have been lucky because they are able to practice in the shade.

"They just have to drink more and take more breaks to combat the heat," Johnson said.

In spite of the scorching weather, these groups are excited to support the team on Saturday.

"This Saturday we're just hoping to put on a good show for the pre-game and halftime," Finck said. "We want to cheer the team to victory."

The band supports the team as much as possible, Baldwin said.

"On Saturday, we'll be out there screaming and yelling to let the team know we're behind them," Baldwin said.

Johnson said they are looking forward to finally getting to perform and "show off a little bit."

Finck said he expects the Pridettes and the band to be exceptionally good this year.

"The quality and sound of the band is much stronger this year," Finck said. "The drum section is the largest and possibly the best it's ever been."

Six of the 20 Pridettes attended a five-day camp in San Marcos, Texas, this summer. Johnson said they learned a great deal and are eager to use the new routines they learned.

Hayden answers questions from a swarm of reporters following Bush's remarks at the fund-raising campaign luncheon Thursday.

Hayden

After the 20-minute speech, Bush left the building and rode back to Forbes Field. The president was in Kansas less than two hours before flying to his next stop in Tallahassee, Fla.

Hayden said he appreciated the president taking time to come to Kansas "and the solidity and unification an event like this brings to the Kansas Republican Party."

Hayden's campaign picked up the tab for the visit, but he was unsure exactly how much the final bill would be or how large an effect it would have on his campaign.

"A ballpark figure would be around $50,000," Hayden said.

Students pay about $2,000 to parking meters weekly

By Liz McElhaney
Collegian Reporter

About $30,000 in meter tickets was collected over the course of last year. In addition, an estimated $2,000 was brought in from the meters during one week.

K-State police officer Lt. Robert Mellgren said revenues vary each week depending on campus activity.

The meters were installed Labor Day weekend 1989 so parking would rotate among students, Mellgren said. For some students it is cheaper to feed the meter for a semester versus buying a permit, he said.

"The money goes back into the parking system and is still paying for the meters themselves," he said. "None of it goes to the police department with the exception of a few salaries for overhead."

Eventually a percentage of the revenue will go into maintenance and wages, he said.

Mellgren said the K-State Police Department had received some positive comments about the meters, but one negative comment was that the meters were not set for a sufficient amount of time.

Some students have suggested four hour meters. Some classes last two hours. If the timing is right, tickets can be written within a few minutes after the two hours are over, about the time it takes for people to walk to their cars, Mellgren said.

Meters are located in the Union parking lot, the north side of Fairchild Hall, the east side of Anderson Hall and the Farrell Library lot. More meters will be installed for visitor parking, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

"Visitor parking is one of our shortcomings," Lambert said. "One or two meters in several key building lots will be installed."

Mellgren said "people appreciate the fact that there is space to park when visiting for an hour or two."

Lambert said the meters are on order and will be installed upon arrival.

than half, had become independent, he said. All African nations except two have been colonies of other countries like England or France.

The African Student Union planned the awareness month last April, Neba said. The union does not plan to repeat the awareness month next year, but would rather see awareness become an on-going project, he said.

The purpose of the African Student Union is to promote interracial, intercultural and social relations, Neba said.

"In a sense, one can look at the union as a window to Africa or as a source of information," he said. "And that is why we decided to come up with this African Awareness Month. We wanted to share with Kansas State University, Manhattan and the surrounding communities some of the rich and diversified cultures of the African cultures."

As part of African Awareness Month, the recently released movie "Place of Weeping" will be shown at 8 p.m. in Little Theatre, Neba said. The film is an educational work about South African apartheid.

Neba said one important event during the month is an art display Monday in Little Theatre. Displays will include African carvings, instruments and clothing.

The month will end Sept. 29 with a closing party in the Union Ballroom.

The following day, several of the council members reported that they too had been visited by the company's men. That evening, a worker for the company was taken to a hill, beaten severely and left there.

It was at this point the council members started to pack up and leave Guatemala.

Luis stayed for awhile, but did not return home to his family. In October 1989, Luis fled Guatemala for his own protection.

He crossed the border into Mexico, but was detained for a while in Mexico City because the border police did not believe his story.

After travelling across northern Mexico, Luis swam the Rio Grande into Texas.

While traveling through Texas en route to Houston, he was caught by U.S. Immigration authorities. Luis was held at a detention center in Brownsville, Tex., for several months.

Through efforts of people he met while in the detention center, he was able to come to Manhattan via the Overground Railroad.

Luis has been in Manhattan since early July and is awaiting permission to enter Canada as a political refugee.

K-State football fans consume beverages at a pregame party between the football offices and the parking lot at KSU Stadium Saturday. Numerous areas around the stadium, including this one, were designated for alchohol consumption at the traditionally alchohol-free stadium area.

Alcohol prevalent at game

By Steve Franzen
Campus Editor

Tradition abounded at K-State's home football opener Saturday.

Cars clustered in the KSU Stadium's parking lots early in the afternoon sun for pregame tailgate parties which are prevalent every season.

Sounds of the K-State Marching Band mixed with the smell of outdoor grills, as the University President Jon Wefald addressed an alumni meal and shook hands.

And an old but uninvited guest made its way across the asphalt parking lot, just as it always has.

Alcoholic beverages, prohibited in the parking lots and the stadium, were present in both.

"I foresee problems everyday now," said Charles Beckom, K-State Police Chief. "Alcohol is one of the biggest problems on this campus now."

Beckom said the problem is more than just the drinking of alcoholic beverages, but also the inability of 13 or 14 police officers to watch 25,000 fans on Saturday afternoons.

This problem was evident, as the only campus police officer visible in the west parking lot between 5 and 6:30 p.m. was directing cars into the VIP gate.

"The rules are there, but it is awful hard for the officers to enforce the law," he said.

Those rules, prohibiting alcoholic consumption except in specified areas on the campus, are common sense policy, Wefald said. Wefald was exiting a President's Club pregame meal where alcohol beverages were served, in a predesignated drinking area, to alumni and University friends.

"I think it (the policy) is a good idea," he said. "We want excitement going into the game, but not pandemonium."

Wefald's sentiment was not shared by those tailgaters in the stadium's west parking lot, which is specifically designated as a non-alcoholic area.

"We used to drink and have a lot of fun before the games," said Mike Relihan, head of the Wichita Catbackers Club. "Any self-respecting college student should be smart enough to stay out of trouble."

Despite being outlawed, alcohol was present at the majority of the tailgate get-togethers. The Kansas City Catbackers Club tailgate party provided fans with dinner, T-shirts and beer.

The coordinator of the Kansas City club decided to speak in anonymity when he was informed that alcohol was prohibited in the lot.

"We received no notice one way or another," he said.

The drinking of alcohol was not limited to the Catbacker clubs though; it also extended to students, fans and even the judges of the tailgate parties sponsored by the department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Craig Renfro, assistant director of Intercollegiate Athletics, and Steve Bietau, tennis coach, both accepted a can of beer from the North Central Catbackers Club after leaving the golf cart they were using to judge the tailgate parties. Renfro said they had been talked into having a beer by the catbackers. A can of beer also sat in the dashboard of the golf cart.

"As long as people do it (drink) discreetly, we have no problems," Renfro said.

All of the alcohol in the parking lots and the stadium enters through monitored gates where student organizations help collect a parking fee. Beckom said those gate attendants are told to be on the lookout for alcohol.

"We were not instructed at all about it. People are drinking as they drive in, and some have even offered us a beer," said Greg Laddish, a pitcher for K-State's baseball team and gate attendant.

Student attendants at all other gates said they had received no instruction pertaining to alcoholic policies prior to working the gates.

Two persons were arrested and over 20 containers of alcoholic beverages were confiscated during the game, Beckom said.

Bush, Gorbachev discuss Kuwait

Leaders condemn use of Iraqi force, seek end to crisis

By The Associated Press

HELSINKI, Finland — President Bush and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev joined Sunday in a joint condemnation of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and said they agreed in seven hours of summit talks that "aggression cannot and will not pay."

Gorbachev emphasized the need for a political solution, insisting that his former ally, Saddam Hussein, is headed "into a dead end" by struggling to hold Kuwait against stiff international sanctions.

Bush held out the possibility of using force if the embargo is not effective, but Gorbachev pointedly refrained from saying the Soviet Union would support a military move against Iraq.

Yet the Soviet president said he hoped to make it "quite clear to Saddam Hussein that if Iraq were to provoke military action, then the result would be a tragedy first and foremost for the Iraqi people themselves, for the whole of the region and for the whole of the world."

The leaders spoke with reporters following the release of their joint summit declaration which said, "We are united in the belief that Iraq's aggression must not be tolerated. No peaceful international order is possible if larger states can devour their smaller neighbors ...

"Our preference is to resolve the (Persian Gulf) crisis peacefully, and we will be united against Iraq's aggression as long as the crisis exists," they declared.

The statement stood in unprecedented contrast to Cold War bickering that accompanied crises during the past four decades.

The statement also said that once Iraq withdraws from Kuwait, the two countries will work with nations in the region to develop regional security structures and measures to promote peace and stability.

Bush said Soviet support for anti-Iraq sanctions "gets me inclined to recommend as close cooperation in the economic field as possible."

He said there had been a "good long discussion" on Soviet requests for economic assistance and that he would address the topic when he makes a nationally televised speech to Congress Tuesday night.

The possibility that sanctions will not succeed against Iraq prompted the most significant differences between Bush and Gorbachev.

Without elaboration their joint statement said, "if the current steps fail to end it, we are prepared to consider additional ones" consistent with the United Nations charter.

"I did not say that if Iraq does not withdraw peacefully, we're going to have recourse to military methods. ... I do not state that," Gorbachev said.

"We may have a difference on that," Bush said.

He refused to discuss U.S. options if Iraq continues to defy the U.N. resolution.

Designated drivers rewarded by taverns

Local bars are supporting "I'm Driving," a new program designed to promote the use of designated drivers.

From 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday and all day Friday and Saturday, some Aggieville bars will reward designated drivers with free non-alcoholic beverages and occasionally with coupons for discounted food and drink for a later visit.

Drivers will receive a special hand stamp and a "I'm Driving" sticker or button when the groups arrive.

The bars participating in this program are Aggie Lounge, Auntie Mae's Parlor, Baystreet, Bowinkles, Bushwackers, Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, the Fish Bowl, Kite's Bar and Grill, Rusty's Last Chance, Rock-A-Belly Deli, Snookies and the Spot.

This campaign is sponsored by Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, Anheuser Busch, Student Governing Association and the City of Manhattan. It originated in SGA's Student Affairs and Social Services Committee.

The committee was formed after a speaker came to Student Senate and proposed the plan to make Aggieville safer, said David McIntyre, senior in electrical engineering and member of the committee.

The committee went to Campbell Distributors to coordinate the program. The company provided materials, including posters, banners, stickers and buttons.

"Campbell Distributors will back any type of responsible drinking effort," said Blake Brownell, an employee of the company.

McIntyre said bar owners have

Instructors take unique approach

By Candace Plett

Students are always advised about how to be better students, but in the College of Agriculture, a special committee is helping teachers excel at teaching.

"We help long-time faculty members plan fresh approaches to their teaching and assist new members in developing their own unique teaching programs," said Curtis Kastner, professor of animal sciences and industry and committee chairman.

The committee consists of a representative from each department and each interdepartmental curriculum in agriculture.

Members meet to develop educational programs for teachers, produce an informative newsletter and encourage the flow of ideas, said David Mugler, associate dean and director of agriculture resident instruction.

At a recent seminar, a panel of agricultural graduates evaluated and answered questions about their experiences at K-State, Mugler said.

"It was very successful," he said. "It was held during the summer, and turnout was excellent.

Roch Gaussoin, assistant professor of horticulture, helped coordinate the seminar.

"Basically, all of the teachers were really positive about it," Gaussoin said. "The panel consisted of members with a variety of professional goals and experience.

"Personally, the most positive aspect for me was that the seminar was thought-provoking," Gaussoin said. "I found out some things about what graduates need in the industry that encouraged me to restructure some of my teaching approaches."

Another of the committee's aims is to recognize quality teaching.

According to a study by Andrew Barkley, professor of agricultural economics, K-State graduates of agriculture are highly satisfied with their current jobs overall. He surveyed 1978-88 graduates and found they report job mobility, high promotion rates and rewarding pay.

Kastner said the dedication by agriculture faculty members is helping graduates get good jobs.

"Instructors stay in tune with what the trends and niches are, what skills are required and provide graduates with the flexibility they need to meet future changes in our industry," Kastner said.

"I have never been to an institution where the faculty is rewarded so well for quality teaching and advising," Gaussoin said.

Hayden, Finney square off

Property tax relief, abortion dominate themes of debate

CAMPAIGN 1990

Joan Finney (D)
Mike Hayden (R)
Gubernatorial Race

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

Property tax relief and abortion stood out as dominant issues as the two major-party candidates for governor exchanged barbs and one-liners at a debate in Hutchinson Saturday.

A crowd of 2,500 jeered and yelled during the hour-long debate between Republican incumbent Mike Hayden and Democratic challenger Joan Finney. It was the first face-to-face confrontation between the two candidates.

Independent candidate Christina Campbell-Cline was present at the debate but was not invited to take part.

In answer to the debate's first question, Finney outlined her four-year plan to relieve what she called "the Hayden reappraisal and classification program."

She said there are 56 groups that are now exempt from sales tax. Finney proposed that 52 of those groups should have to pay a 1 percent sales tax. The other four groups, which include pharmaceuticals and food stamps, would still be exempt.

Finney said this 1 percent sales tax would raise an additional $800 million that could be used to relieve the tax burden on small businesses and homeowners. Then, over the next few years, she proposes to start taking the sales tax off some items until there is "a fair and equitable tax base."

Although Hayden never proposed his own tax-relief program, he did find faults in Finney's proposal and called it foolishness.

"During the primary, Mrs. Finney called that the Carlin tax plan," Hayden said. "What Mrs. Finney has just said is she is going to create 52 new taxes. '52 Finney' is what we should call her."

He said Finney's proposal will hurt the farmers because it will tax "their feed, their seed, their fertilizer, and their fuel." Hayden also said she will put a sales tax on utilities and the component airplane parts, which could hurt the airplane industry in the Wichita area.

While Hayden was replying to the question, members of the audience interrupted him several times yelling, "What are you going do?"

A question about abortion asked whether the issue would be a deciding factor during the race and what the opinions of the two candidates are.

Hayden said the issues of the campaign would be decided by the voters and not the politicians, but he said he thought the abortion question would be one the voters will want to be informed on.

Hayden said he was pro-choice. He said it is a personal and private decision that women should make without the interference of politicians.

Finney expressed her anti-abortion view by saying that abortions are allowed to the ninth month in Kansas, and there are many five-month infants born.

"I will not initiate, but I will sign any bill that restricts abortions in Kansas," she said. "I put a high value on human life."

Hayden said in his rebuttal that he too puts a high value on human life, but he believes in the right of women to choose for themselves.

Their views on the death penalty also contrasted.

Finney said she could not support a death-penalty bill but would be willing to put the question before the voters.

She said Hayden had four years to get a bill passed, but didn't.

Hayden said he supported the death penalty, and when he introduced a bill to the Legislature, it was the Democrats who changed their votes and didn't approve the legislation.

Hayden, while answering a question about the use of taxes on cigarettes and alcohol for use in health and education programs, said he supports a tax increase on cigarettes to fund the third year of the Margin of Excellence.

He also said it makes sense to increase sin taxes for better health and prevention programs.

Finney said she has declared a moritorium on taxes until the reassessment and classification mess is solved "because Kansans are being taxed to death."

She said the MOE could have been funded by monies from the Kansas Lottery, but those funds are spread out over too many different programs

Iran, Iraq discuss embargo

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iraq's foreign minister Sunday made his government's first official visit since the outbreak of the Iran-Iraq war, reportedly seeking to circumvent the U.N. trade embargo over the occupation of Kuwait.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz met with his Iranian counterpart, Ali Akbar Velayati, amid unconfirmed reports that rice and flour shipments already were coming across Iraq's northeastern border from Iran.

Aziz told reporters the 2½ -hour meeting was constructive.

While Velayati reiterated Iranian condemnation of Iraq's seizure of Kuwait last month, he also criticized the presence of U.S. and other foreign forces building up in the Persian Gulf, according to Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

Rebels capture Liberian leader

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — A rebel faction shot Liberian President Samuel Doe in both legs and captured him Sunday during a battle in that nation's capital, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported.

More than 60 people, including dozens of Doe's bodyguards, were killed in the fighting between Doe loyalists and rebels led by Prince Johnson, the BBC said. It said the battle took place outside the headquarters of a West African task force in Monrovia, Liberia.

Doe had left his fortified seaside mansion to pay an unscheduled visit to the commander of the West African task force, Lt. Gen Arnold Quainoo of Ghana, the BBC's correspondent in Monrovia reported.

Johnson and some of his fighters followed Doe, and a quarrel erupted, the BBC report said. The two sides then started battling with rifles, machine guns and grenades.

Johnson's rebels wounded Doe in both legs and carried him off to their base camp, the report said.

PLO forces claim victory

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — PLO forces claimed victory Sunday in their battle for control of refugee camps in south Lebanon after storming fortified tunnels holding the remnants of troops loyal to terrorist leader Abu Nidal.

Police report at least 75 people killed and more than 200 wounded during the Palestine Liberation Organization's three-day offensive to oust Abu Nidal guerrillas from Sidon and nearby refugee camps.

"We have established undisputed control over all the refugee camps in Sidon and the rest of south Lebanon," Younis Awad, a senior aide to PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, said in the Ein el-Hilweh shantytown, site of the 12-hour battle in the tunnels.

Diver survives shark attack

JENNER, Calif. (AP) — A shark grabbed a diver by his head but was driven off when the man smacked it several times with his spear gun, according to deputies.

"It picked him up, then just let go and sank back down," Bill Davenport said after his diving partner, Rodney Orr was attacked Saturday.

Orr, 49, of Santa Rosa was able to reach his dive board and paddle for 20 minutes back to shore. He was treated for cuts on his nose, cheek and neck.

The two were diving for abalone in about 40 feet of water in the ocean north of here.

Woman uses nose to get help

DENVER (AP) — A woman saved herself by dialing for help with her nose after an intruder tied her up, turned on the gas in her stove and left a candle burning, apparently in hope of triggering an explosion, authorities said.

Police said they were hunting for the person who attacked the 37-year-old woman early Thursday and seemed to want to make certain she died.

"He shut the windows when he left, and he shut the door behind him when he left. And he did light a candle in the living room, where the victim was," said Detective Alan Keiser.

Police did not release the victim's name.

After breaking into the woman's home, the man tied her hands in back of her and fastened to a chair, police said. He then ransacked the house, turned on the gas in the oven without lighting it, closed the windows, lit the candle and left.

But the victim was able to tip her chair over to the floor, grab the telephone with her teeth and dial 911 with her nose, police said.

Williams to run for Senate

TOPEKA — Kansas Democrats nominated Dick Williams of Wichita on Sunday to challenge incumbent Republican Nancy Kassebaum in her bid for a third six-year term in the U.S. Senate.

Members of the Democratic State Committee voted 72-17 for Williams, choosing him over Fred Phelps Sr. of Topeka, who finished third in the party's governor nomination race in the Aug. 7 primary election.

Williams, 56, is an educator and former businessman who now teaches English as a second language at Wichita State University.

Manhattan woman found dead

Topeka police are investigating the death of a Manhattan woman whose body was found Sunday in the trunk of a vehicle parked at the intersection of 22nd and Western in Topeka.

Sherryl L. Crowder, 39, died as a result of a severe beating, said Lt. Dave McClimans, third-shift watch commander for the Topeka Police Department.

Career day offers job contacts

Students have the opportunity to make job contacts at the Business Career Day sponsored by the Marketing Club this week.

The career day provides students with an excellent opportunity to make contacts for future reference, said David Donnelly, interim dean in College of Business Administration.

"Businesses from all over Kansas attend the career day, and some are from out of state," Donnelly said. "We try to invite the ones that recruit here on campus, and then we also invite a few more. We are always trying to get new businesses to attend."

Donnelly said there will be over 50 businesses at the career day ranging from accounting firms, oil firms and utilities.

The College of Business tries to get different businesses to visit so that each student has a company that they are interested in talking to, Donnelly said.

Business Career Day will be Tuesday, Sept. 11 in the K-State Ballroom.

Groups inform, recruit at carnival

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

Enthusiasm and interest ran high among those attending the 33rd Annual Activities Carnival Sunday evening at the K-State Union.

The carnival, from 5 to 8 p.m., gave 99 organizations registered with the University Activities Board a chance to inform people about their purpose and recruit new members.

Amy Hoch, chairwoman for the Union Program Council Special Events Committee, said she was pleased with the results of the hard work put in by the committee.

"Groups had a chance to publicize themselves and students had a chance to find out how to get involved," Hoch said. "It is good to see these things go well. It makes the people who work hard at putting this on feel like they really got a chance to serve the students."

The efforts of those involved with the carnival were rewarded by an increase in attendance from last year. Event coordinators estimated that 800-900 people attended the carnival. Gary Blanck, event coordinator and junior in marketing and management, said he was impressed with the turnout.

"It is great that there are enough organizations on campus who want to showcase what they have to offer and enough students who want to be involved in those organizations," Blanck said.

Stacey Simms, event coordinator and junior in business, said she believes that the variety of organizations offered was a key factor in the increased attendance.

"I was very amazed at the diversity," Simms said. "It is good to see people get involved in something they never knew was around."

The carnival is also a means for new organizations to get some recognition on campus.

Poll gives Finney 13 percent lead

Republican voters turn to challenger

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Democratic challenger and State Treasurer Joan Finney was leading Gov. Mike Hayden 48 percent to 35 percent in a poll released in Sunday's editions of the Topeka Capital-Journal.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said:

■ Nearly half of Finney's support would come from voters who say they are specifically and purposefully voting against the Republican governor.

■ More than one-third of respondents who said they would vote for Finney called themselves Republicans.

■ Finney would beat Hayden in every congressional district except Hayden's home 1st District of western Kansas. But even there, Hayden's lead fell within the poll's margin of error — plus or minus 4.4 percent.

Central Research Corp., a Topeka market research and consulting firm, conducted the Kansas Poll for the Capital-Journal between Sept. 3-5 through telephone interviews.

Individual respondents were selected by a computer-assisted random selection process, but the statewide sample comprises a proportional number of respondents from each of the state's five congressional districts.

Statewide results, which are based on the total sample of 500 voting age Kansans, should have a margin of error that will rarely vary by more than 4.4 percent plus or minus from the result of polling every voting-age Kansan.

Estimates based on smaller subsamples, such as a single congressional district, are subject to larger estimating errors.

Hayden is popular among the youngest bracket of voters polled, those 18 to 29 years old, the poll said. But younger people historically have not voted in as large numbers as older people.

Finney's wide margins of favor among voters in the 30-44, 45-64 and over-65 age groups represent most of the electorate.

A question asked whether people consider their vote a positive one for a candidate, or a negative vote against a candidate.

Forty-six percent of those who said they would vote for Finney said they would do so to cast a ballot against Hayden. Only 10 percent of Hayden supporters said they wanted to vote against Finney.

Thirty-four percent of respondents who consider themselves Republicans said they would support Finney.

Another 5 percent of Republican respondents say they weren't sure but were leaning toward voting for Finney.

Finney's lead in the poll is a sharp reversal from a Kansas Poll conducted in March. It showed Finney as the third-best choice for Democrats to nominate against Hayden.

It indicated that former Gov. John Carlin stood the best chance of beating Hayden, that 2nd District Rep. Jim Slattery held the second-best chance. The early poll said Finney would be a 32 percent to 38 percent underdog to Hayden.

Incidents in restrooms nothing to laugh about

Women have been terrorized the last few weeks by a young man who exposes himself in women's restrooms on campus.

What he may not know is that he's made himself a laughingstock on campus. It's difficult to control a snicker when discussing the man's choice of location to commit his indecent act.

The situation, however, is not humorous. And it's almost certain his victims did not think he was so funny.

It's terrifying to think of how far he may go, what he may do besides exposing himself. No one has been physically harmed yet, but the longer it takes police to capture the culprit, the larger — and scarier — the situation can become.

It's time for the campus to realize what kind of person it's dealing with. Who can guess when his exposures might turn dangerous? Who knows when his actions may encourage copy cats to join in the 'fun' and to scare unsuspecting women?

This man obviously needs psychological help. The only thing we can do is wait. Wait for him to strike again. Wait for someone to identify him. Wait for the police to track him down.

We also have to wait for students to stop joking and do something. His exposures shouldn't be belittled with a list of nicknames.

For two weeks, we have allowed him to act. Now it is time for us to take action and stop laughing.

Stereotypes perpetuate banning of homosexuals

In keeping with the Department of Defense's ban on homosexuals, the commander of the Navy's surface Atlantic fleet called upon his officers to remove all lesbian personnel from service, even though they are generally among the best sailors.

In a message to his officers, Vice Adm. Joseph S. Donnell said lesbian sailors are generally "hard-working, career-oriented, willing to put in long hours and among the command's top performers."

But, Donnell said, the presence of lesbian sailors might have an adverse effect because they may create a predatory environment, making aggressive sexual advances on on their young, often vulnerable, female colleagues and intimidating other sailors who might turn them in.

Donnell's message exemplifies the hypocritical and backward attitude of the Department of Defense toward homosexuals. Unable to find fault with their job performance, the department must rely on stereotypes and myths about homosexuals to prop up the claim that their presence damages the ability of the armed forces.

Sexual preference has nothing to do with job performance, even if that job is defending the country. Donnell's memorandum to his officers acknowledges this. The use of gay and lesbian stereotypes to explain and perpetuate the ban on homosexuals recalls the racist stereotypes used to keep the armed forces segregated until after World War II.

The military's policy to force homosexuals out of its ranks is ridiculous. Keeping this policy in place reflects the ignorance and intolerance of homosexuality that, unfortunately, is still prevalent in American culture. In any job, top performers should be rewarded, not expelled because of discrimination and prejudice.

Happiness not end goal

Kevin Zwink

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Happiness. The pursuit of happiness. As individuals thrown into a world with so much pain and strife from the sufferings of personal hardships to the recent international developments that pose the possibility of war, we naturally tend toward an antithesis to all the unpleasantness. We tend toward a point labeled happiness. This is a goal, that, when reached, would expose a world where adversity is non-existent and joy is the sole ruler. It is an achievable end in one's life where all circumstances of struggle and suffering are erased. But frustrations begin to mount when this end goal, happiness, seems to keep getting farther away rather than closer, even as society's guidelines to happiness are met. We seem unable to reach that period in our life when we can say "Now, I have happiness."

Our problem is that we believe happiness is an end goal. As an end goal it is impossible to attain. By changing our attitudes and perspectives about what we think happiness is, we can possibly dissolve our self-limitations and free ourselves from a great many unnecessary anxieties.

Happiness is achieved only in our capacity to suffer what we would rather not, and the ability to release time of its incestual intrusion on our only true mode of existing, the present. The only perspective the past or the future can be seen through is the present.

The first step in acquiring a healthy perspective on what happiness is is to release ourselves from the belief that society's definition of happiness is correct. It is evident that many of us have embarked as self-empowered individuals. We define ourselves by our actions and attitudes. There is no reason why we shouldn't define our own happiness rather than accepting the unrealistic criteria of society.

I'm not ignorant to the fact that we live as a community and that the personality of the community, society, is inevitable, and also that in a great many ways society is necessary and in fact extremely beneficial to individuals aspiring for self-actualization. But American society imposes a set of criteria that must be met before someone can say, "Now, I have happiness." If we try to live up to society's standards of happiness we will certainly fail, and miserably.

Society's standards of happiness are familiar to us all. They're drilled into us, from all sides, beginning at an early age. Ads, fellow employees, friends and parents all reinforce society's standards of happiness. The amount of money one makes, the job one holds, fame and reputation, recognition, obtaining material things like the nicest house, car and the clothes one wears are all part of society's standards. We strive and achieve, strive and achieve, strive and achieve, and then retire, and it still seems we are not happy, according to societal standards.

Of course, goals concerning work and about the kind of life we want to live are important in the self-actualization process, and all of our achievements can add to our self-fulfillments, but when we compare our achievements to society's standards we never have enough. Not enough money, not the best job, not the best house, car, clothes, and on, and on, it never stops, and, according to the standards, we're not happy.

So how does one define happiness if not by societal criterion. As self-defining individuals we can only live by our own ethically sound standards of happiness. If we accept that happiness isn't an end goal, and also that happiness doesn't mean all adversity and struggle will disappear, then what does it mean? Happiness in a state of completion is impossible, but as an attitude and modality, it is exceedingly simple.

Let us imagine a moment in our life in which we could point and say, "Then, I was truly happy." If we think hard it's obvious that our life, at that moment, wasn't completely void of adversity. The enlightening thing is the awareness of our attitude towards our own life during that moment, or during those moments.

Happiness is a modality, a way of looking at things, a certain attitude toward everything in our past and in our future, but most especially in our present. Happiness is the ability to inhale all that is temporary and the ability to exhale all that is temporary. It's learning how to say good-bye. It's learning to forget. It's learning how to laugh. It's the realization that changes don't always invalidate past feelings. It is the fulfillment of becoming a self-actualized individual with the awareness that those fulfillments don't come from goals that are to be reached at a future time but because of the attitudes we hold about everything in the present.

System is a joke

Editor,

This is my first full semester at K-State, and in less than two weeks the system here has made me seriously question the integrity of this university.

First, enrollment was nothing less than a joke. Was it too much to ask for some kind of ventilation system? If the budget does not allow for one, then do us all a favor next fall and hold enrollment outside where it was at least 20 degrees cooler and there was at least a breeze.

Once inside of Ahearn Field House, my journey began. A loan that had been paid off three weeks before had not been put into the computer, causing my enrollment to be postponed — "Line 2, please," where one girl was handling all of the delinquencies. "Line 4, please," "Sorry we do not handle that — Line 3, please." After two hours in Ahearn, I was ready to do something drastic like the women who burned their bras for equal rights. After the runaround I got, I felt I had the right to burn Ahearn down.

Then I entered the "financial-aid triangle," formerly known as the Bermuda Triangle. Paperwork needed in May was suddenly not needed in June — but urgent in July — and was supplied in August, only to find out it was just put into the computer yesterday. Then I found out my loan application of three weeks ago was put on a list. List? What list? I was told a couple of weeks ago it would be a couple of weeks.

The emergency loan I got at enrollment to get my books had to be put into my Wildcat Card account to use at the K-State Union Bookstore. I had no problem with that, but I did have a problem with them not having half of the books I needed to start class. So I got the books at Varney's Book Store and then found out I could not get the money back out of the account to pay for the books I had to get elsewhere.

This isn't a system. This is a joke.

I put a lot of time into considering and deciding to come to K-State. Now I would like to ask K-State to consider the students and to decide it is time to make some changes.

America not free

Editor,

For years, Americans have enjoyed many basic freedoms. This country is a mix of people from all different walks of life, all trying to achieve "The American Dream." Now with the countries of Eastern Europe opening up to democracy, it seems that everyone everywhere will feel the joys of democracy.

It makes me proud that America has been on the leading edge of democracy and freedom for over 200 years. It's also one tremendous feeling knowing that our country ensures all the basic freedoms that every single individual should be allowed to enjoy — unless you are in a black rap group whose album has been declared illegal in Florida. No problem.

We'll say the lyrics are too sexual, so let's not worry about a few black rap artists.

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless I'm swimming or tanning on a Florida beach that does not allow certain bathing suits. No problem.

We'll say that the bathing suits are showing "anal cleft," so let's not worry about a few swimmers or sunbathers.

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless I'm a black golfer that wants membership in a white-dominated country club. No problem.

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless Bush's Supreme Court overturns a 1973 decision and makes a woman's choice concerning her own body illegal. No problem.

We'll go back to clothes hangers in back alleys, so let's not worry about the women.

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless I enjoy adult movies or my own satellite dish. No problem.

We'll forget that they have lock-boxes and only play from 12 to 4:30 a.m., so let's not worry about a few satellite dish owners.

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless I burn a piece of cloth that resembles an American flag. No problem.

We'll make it into a symbol of anti-Americanism so lets not worry about a few "American Haters."

I'm still one tremendously proud American that enjoys our basic freedoms — unless the government keeps restricting and censoring every single individual's rights that are supposed to be guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. No problem.

We'll just defect to the countries of Eastern Europe that allow individuals to express themselves freely and openly, so let's not worry about the government's censorship.

'Wild At Heart' pumped with good time

'Wizard of Oz' theme underlies main plot

By Richard Jones
Collegian Reviewer

"Wild at Heart," the new David Lynch-directed film, runs wild with colorful characters, random emotions and a thought-provoking storyline.

In the opening scene, Sailor, played by Nicolas Cage, is forced to defend himself from a would-be assassin. The result is a manslaughter charge that lands him in prison — away from his girlfriend Lula, played by Laura Dern.

After his release, Sailor breaks his parole and departs with Lula for California. As they begin their journey, Lula's mother sends hit men to kill Sailor and bring her daughter home.

To leave the plot at that would undermine the other more-engaging aspects of the film, not the least of which are the visual effects.

A "Wizard of Oz" theme underlies the main plot. For example, Lula's mother appears in the form of the Wicked Witch of the West. Other references to the film are an occasional crystal ball, mentions of Toto and the yellow brick road, an appearance by Glenda the Good Witch and, most disagreeably, Lula's attempt to go home by clicking her heels.

These effects aren't necessarily bad when taken with the movie as a whole. The "Oz" references are funny, if not helpful to the film.

Another image, that of Santa Claus, takes on a comic side never before imagined through a lunatic performance by Crispin Glover. These fairy tales and their unattainability from the confines of real life seem to be the downfall of Lula more than once.

Maybe that observation was a little deeper than some people may care to go with this film, but I do contend that laughter cannot carry you through every scene. There's an undeniable element of truth that makes you think in the breaks between your laughter.

COLLEGIAN Report Card
"WILD AT HEART"
A-

Another such scene arises when Lula is unable to find anything other than depressing news segments on the radio. She obviously has trouble adjusting to the reality of the world. Why should she? She didn't get the world into this mess in the first place. That seems to be her idea, if not the anthem of her character.

There are scenes and images in the film that have no obvious connection to the plot, but by the end, you'll either be glad they were included or unbothered by their addition. For instance, when Sailor and Lula stumble across a car accident and a dying woman, the film seems to be taking on a new direction. It's not. These scenes prevent the audience from being trapped in one mood through the whole film.

Isabella Rossellini and Willem Dafoe pop up rather unexpectedly, especially as far as Rossellini is concerned. Their parts aren't major, but it's still interesting trying to find them. When you do, their appearance may be a surprise.

Aside from theme of disillusioned youth living life without fairy tales for the first time, "Wild at Heart" is basically a good-time film with enough punch to carry you through both hours of it without fidgeting in your seat.

SPORTS MONDAY

'Cats grab early lead, win 27-6

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

The goalposts came down as an afterthought.

Following an anti-climatic finish to a one-sided game, it took the K-State football crowd several indecisive minutes Saturday night to descend upon the field and disassemble the facilities.

The game wasn't in doubt after the first quarter. But it just didn't seem right for the Wildcats and their fans, who haven't had much practice responding to victories — much less blowouts — to leave the stadium with more wins than uprights still standing.

The 27-6 win was the widest margin of victory for K-State since it opened the 1986 season against Western Illinois with a 35-7 runaway. A shutout seemed likely until Leatherneck receiver Bret Velde got behind the Wildcat secondary and scored on a 40-yard pass play with 6:45 remaining. The Wildcats' last shutout was against Wichita State in 1976.

Winning big allowed the Wildcats to look back on the game in an unfamiliar way, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"It allows you to sit back and reflect on what you didn't do so well with a different frame of mind," Snyder said. "Obviously, we have a long way to go. But it's a good feeling for the kids to understand that they've won by the margin that they did, and it's a lot easier to look back at all those things you need to improve having come out on top."

Wide receivers Michael Smith and Frank Hernandez, facing single coverage for much of the game, sparked the offense with big receptions. Each wideout recorded more than 100 yards receiving for the game, the first time two K-State receivers have reached that mark in the same contest.

Big plays produced by both the offense and defense were what pleased Snyder most in the win. Both Smith and Hernandez caught passes for more than 50 yards, longer than any pass play of last season.

"A year ago, we did not create big plays on offense," Snyder said following the game. "That is one of the things that we have made a great emphasis that we need to improve upon. A year ago, we had just 13 snaps that went for over 25 yards. That's for a whole season."

The defense stopped Leatherneck drives by recovering two fumbles and intercepting four passes. Snyder said the ability to come up with turnovers was something the defense didn't display last season.

"That's something that we worked on all spring, and we're a lot more aggressive and are going to come up and make some big hits," said defensive captain Brooks Barta, who picked off a pass to kill a Leatherneck threat to close the first half. "That's something you've got to have. I don't think we played as well as we can play, but we showed that we can be a pretty good defense."

One Wildcat takeaway led directly to a first-quarter touchdown. Defensive end Elijah Alexander recovered a fumbled handoff at the Western Illinois eight, setting up a Carl Straw scoring strike to Patrick Jackson.

Just minutes before, K-State had taken the early lead when Straw sneaked around the right end for a touchdown on fourth-and-goal on the one. The Wildcat drive covered 80 yards, but the last one was the toughest. Straw scored only after the Leathernecks stuffed two attempts from the one for no gain.

"That is probably as discouraging as anything that we did," Snyder said of the three attempts to finish off the drive. "When you get it down there on the goal line, hopefully we can become a physical football team to knock it in. Tonight, we didn't do it.

"Give credit to Western Illinois because they played extremely hard down there," Snyder said. "It's a two-sided coin, but I'm not happy that we didn't punch it in."

A poor Western Illinois punt snap at midfield in the third quarter allowed K-State to pressure the punter into a desperate attempt to kick on the run, and the ball was recovered by lineman Eric Clayton seven yards behind the line of scrimmage.

The ensuing 43-yard drive ended with quarterback Paul Watson diving in from one yard out. Watson had replaced Straw, who suffered a sprained ankle, midway through the third quarter.

Hernandez went over the 100-yard mark early in the fourth quarter when he hauled in a Watson pass behind the Leatherneck defense and sprinted to the end zone. The 44-yard play finished the scoring for K-State and gave Hernandez a career-high 137 yards on 5 receptions.

With a 27-0 lead in the fourth quarter, the Wildcat offense stalled, and the defense lost its bid for a shutout as several inexperienced players were inserted into the lineup. Lack of continuity and fundamental errors plagued the final seven minutes.

"I was unhappy about that, but there were young kids in the game, and you have to learn from that," Snyder said. "If we started the game with young kids, we finished it with infants.

"We were not a good football team in the latter part of the second half, which was a bit distressing, but then again you have to understand that a lot of those kids are low on our depth chart and therefore lacked continuity," he said.

K-State's James Enin-Okut leaps over C.J. Masters in pursuit of Western Illinois player Bret Velde during the first half of Saturday night's game between the two schools. K-State took an early lead and never trailed, taking the season-opening win, 27-6.

Smith, Hernandez have record-setting game

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Michael Smith hopes the reputations of K-State receivers have changed after the Wildcats' 27-6 win over Western Illinois Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"A lot of people classify you as a possession receiver, or classify your offense as a possession-type, where you take a little bit at a time," Smith said. "Now, I think they have to respect us because we showed we could go deep on people. It's a great feeling."

Smith and Frank Hernandez wreaked havoc on both sides of the Leatherneck secondary. Hernandez had five receptions for 137 yards and a touchdown, while Smith posted five receptions for 107 yards, the fourth 100-plus yard game of his career.

It was the first time in K-State history that two receivers accomplished the feat in the same game.

"I wasn't keeping track of anything like that," Hernandez said. "I was just watching the clock, hoping we'd stay on top of them and not lose it."

Thanks to the big play, the 'Cats had little trouble holding off the Leathernecks. Quarterback Carl Straw hooked up with Smith on a 24-yard completion on K-State's second drive to set up its first touchdown. Tight end Al Jones made a diving catch on a deflected pass for 15 yards during the drive.

On the next drive, Straw found Hernandez over the middle, and the senior split end spun away from a defender for a 53-yard gain for the 'Cats' longest play of the night. Smith added a 52-yard reception in the third quarter, and Straw hooked up with tight end Russ Campbell for 30 yards on the opening drive of the second half.

Smith said that most of K-State's completions did not come easy. On one failed attempt, the junior was leveled by Western Illinois nickel back Bryan Cox while stretching to catch a pass from Straw. Smith walked off the field under his own power, but collapsed after reaching the sideline.

"I can't say that I was open the whole night. They did a pretty good job for the most part," Smith said. "Cox hit me as hard as I've ever been hit before."

K-State managed to score twice via the pass, as Straw hit Patrick Jackson in the left corner of the end zone for the 'Cats' second touchdown. In the fourth quarter, reserve quarterback Paul Watson audibled then found Hernandez over the middle on a 44-yard pass for a 27-0 K-State lead.

K-State quarterbacks completed 18-of-36 passes for 309 yards for the game.

"A year ago, we did not create big plays on offense," K-State Coach Bill Snyder said. "I counted where we had only 13 snaps last year that went for 25 yards or more. We need to have some runs and passes that go for 20 to 25 yards to be successful."

Behavior of few fans spoils night of fun

Tearing down goal posts childish, irresponsible

David Svoboda
SPORTS EDITOR

The Wildcat football team appears to be learning how to win.

Let's hope a few immature Wildcat fans can learn right along with their team.

If Saturday night's post-game spectator performance was a hint of things to come, I'd just as soon make a quick exit from KSU Stadium as the final gun sounds.

Come on, you scattered juveniles, grow up! You tore down the goal posts, but what did it prove?

Bill Snyder's team is making strides toward making winning a habit, not a surprise, and if the team continues to venture forward, K-State fans may have a justified cause for celebration.

But Saturday night's win wasn't good enough reason to tear down $5,000 worth of athletic department merchandise and carry it from the field.

This wasn't a win over Nebraska for the Big Eight title, it was a win over Western Illinois. This wasn't a streak-ending win, it was a season-opening win for a team that will likely win a few more games before all is said and done in 1990.

And the failure of a few overzealous fans to realize these facts put a damper on an otherwise great evening.

Like K-State athletic director Steve Miller, I was heartened by the enthusiasm shown by the Wildcat fans during the contest. It's great to hear the roar of the crowd in the stadium once again.

But, also like Miller, I was greatly dismayed that a few fans — most of which, it must be said, appeared to be under college age — had to participate in such disturbing behavior.

"This was hooliganism, plain and simple," Miller said. "It's a show of lack of restraint and lack of class on some of our people's part."

The key word in that quote from Miller was "our."

This is our University, it's our team, it's our ridiculousness that is splashed all over the country for all to see. That's not the legacy I think we want to be leaving.

It would be easy to sit back and blast all Wildcat fans for the actions of an isolated few. That's not Miller's intent, nor is it mine. But those not taking part in this type of behavior can make a difference.

Cheer, and cheer loudly, during the game. If the 'Cats win, remain in your seats and make so much noise that they hear you all the way up I-70 at the flaw on the Kaw (that's KU, by the way). Party responsibly all night with friends in celebration.

But don't do damage to property — and possibly yourself — in the process.

"I've got a tremendous fear that someone is going to get hurt," Miller said of the process of tearing down the goal posts.

Miller is not alone in having that fear. That fear should be inside everyone who was anywhere near either post as it came to the turf Saturday. If they didn't feel the fear, maybe they should stop to contemplate why.

This type of behavior at K-State is the result of three things, Miller said.

First, there is the familiarity of the fans with the team's lack of previous success.

Second, there is an unbridled enthusiasm that sometimes is hard to keep in check.

And, finally, the athletic department may not be doing enough to prevent these incidents.

Rest assured, the athletic department — and Miller in particular — are taking steps to make sure the final point can be removed in the near future.

If the goalposts come down again, smile, boys and girls, you'll be on Candid Camera, K-State style.

And if your mug is caught on film, you'll be paying for your offenses.

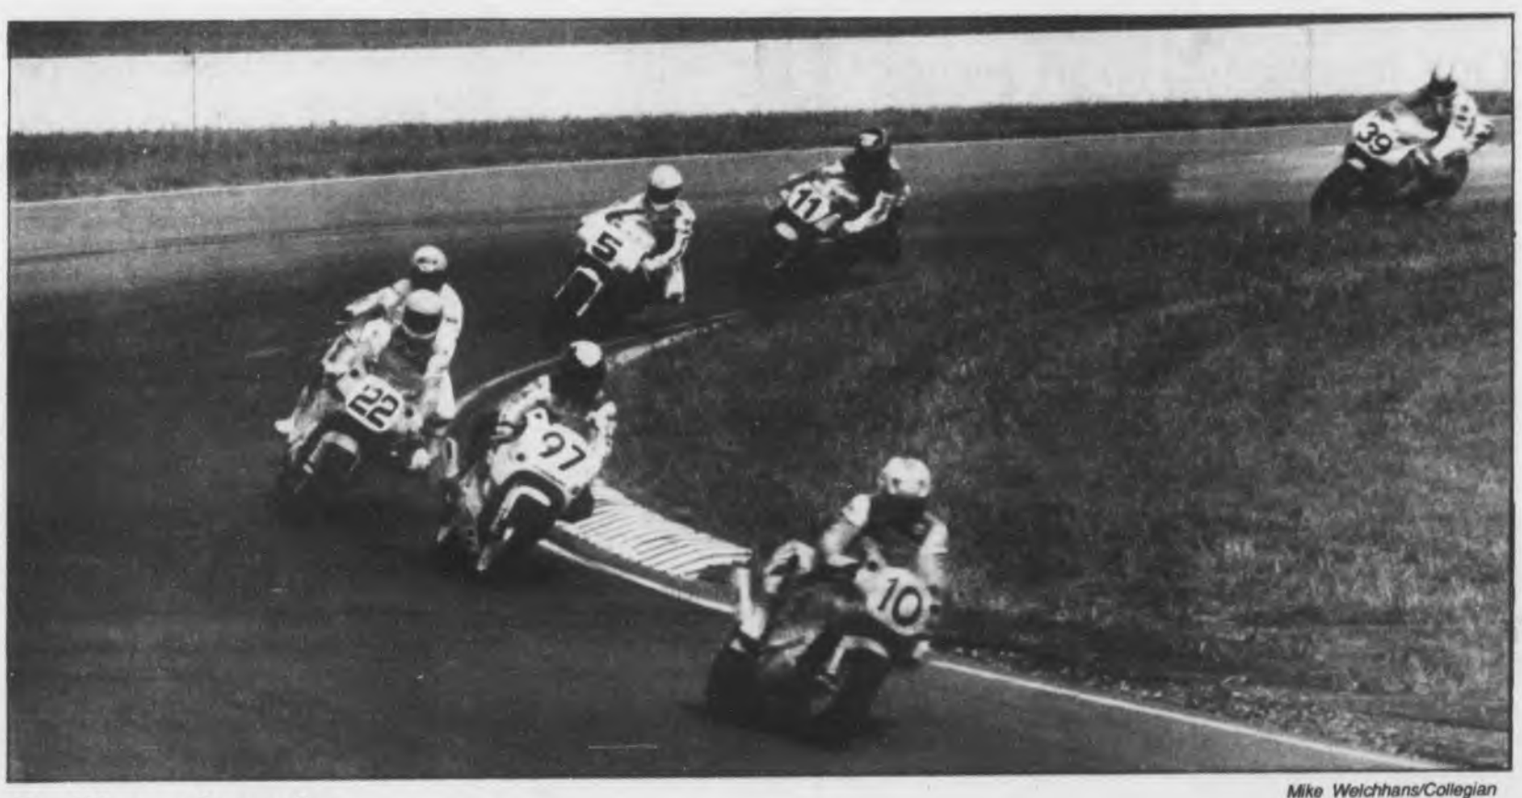
It is disturbing that a minority of fans can spoil what several others had made possible. It was a fun night, the team won, and prospects are high for the future.

It can only be hoped that in KSU Stadium — like Bramlage Coliseum — fan behavior will be such that K-State can be proud of its tradition of excellence instead of embarrassed by its tradition of ridiculousness.

To the hooligans in the minority, it's your choice. Embarrass us, or let us win with dignity.

We'd appreciate the chance to be looked upon as trendsetters, not trend followers.

"I know there is a concern nationally and internationally about fan behavior," Miller said.



Let's remove that concern from K-State as quickly as Snyder appears to be removing the weight of failure from his players' shoulders.

Everyone involved deserves at least that much.

The K-State women's golf team met its goal at the Cyclone Classic in Ames, Iowa, but returned home Saturday still wondering what might have been.

The Wildcats finished fifth in the 10-team, two-day event that was the season opener for Coach Russ Bunker's squad. K-State's total of 665 finished seven shots behind second-place Northern Illinois. Tournament host Iowa State outdistanced the field by 23 shots with a 635.

"I was a little surprised with the outcome," Bunker said. "We were really close to an outstanding finish, but we didn't play all that well."

Still, the 'Cats managed to post a couple of milestones at the tournament. For the first time in school history, K-State defeated Big Eight foe Nebraska, as well as Gateway Conference member Southern Illinois.

"That's a step in the right direction," Bunker said. "When you look at it from that perspective, I'm pleased with what we accomplished, especially because I know the women are capable of shooting even lower."

K-State battled back after a rough opening nine holes on Saturday to post the second-best score at 330. Iowa State used its knowledge of the Venker Memorial Golf Course to shoot 321 on Friday and 314 Saturday.

"I think knowing where the rough spots are on that course makes more of a difference up there than at a lot of other courses in the country," Bunker said. "It's not very forgiving in that if you hit a bad shot, you're looking at double or triple bogey very easily."

Adena Hagedorn led K-State with rounds of 80-81 for a 161. The junior placed fifth individually, five strokes behind tournament medalist Maurie Rousher of Iowa State.

Bunker was pleased with the performance of Teresa Coyle, whose rounds of 81-84 for a 165 earned 12th place. It was her best tournament finish at K-State.

"Teresa was, without question, the bright spot for us," Bunker said. "She has worked really hard, and it showed this weekend. She had seven three-putt greens, or it might have been even better."

Valerie Hahn had two rounds of 84 to finish at 168. Senior Chris Adams, who was among the top finishers for the 'Cats in several events last year, struggled with an 89 Friday, but responded with an 82 Saturday for a 171.

Denise Pottle and Julie White shot 183 and 185 respectively playing in K-State's bottom two spots.

"I think everyone found where they could have taken off seven strokes during the two rounds to make our finish higher," Bunker said. "Now, they're a little bit hungrier, and my expectations are a little bit higher."

Cross country teams win openers

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

It's satisfying any time an individual can accomplish something that has been ellusive for some time, especially when it comes in the context of a team victory.

That's how it was for K-State cross-country standout Janet Haskin Friday as she finally downed a personal rival and lifted the women's team to a victory in the process.

Both Haskin's teammates and the men's squad were victorious at the Wichita State Invitational, successfully kicking off the 1990 season.

Haskin's nemesis, 1989 Big Eight Cross Country Champion Heather Garrett of Oklahoma State, fell victim to a strong effort by the K-State All-American for the first time since the two started competing.

And that win did not escape Coach John Capriotti, who praised Haskin's accomplishment.

"I was really happy for Janet," he said of Haskin, who covered the course in 16 minutes, 37.37 seconds. "Garrett's an outstanding runner with a great background. I was glad to see Janet finally get her."

In addition to Haskin's effort, the effort of another Janet — Treiber — was possibly even more noteworthy, Capriotti said.

Treiber finished just under 10 seconds behind Garrett to place third in 16:56.26.

"Getting that kind of effort out of Treiber was a real plus," Capriotti said. "She's never been able to keep pace with Garrett before, and she ran with Janet (Haskin) and Garrett for most of the race."

Following the two experienced runners, K-State's women's kiddie corps of freshmen and sophomores allowed the Wildcats to put four more runners in the top 10.

Paulette Staats finished sixth, Amy Marx seventh, Jennifer Hillier eighth and Janet Magner 10th as K-State scored 18 points to runner-up Wichita State's 67.

The performance of the second group of four made Capriotti happy.

"We've got a lot more depth than what I expected looking at it over the summer," he said. "These girls are really ready now, and they're anxious to compete."

In the men's competition, Capriotti saw his team win, but wasn't particularly pleased with how they did it.

"With the men, I had mixed emotions," Capriotti said. "We went there to run a team race, but I was somewhat disappointed with (Ron) Smith and (Phil) Byrne."

Capriotti's displeasure with his Nos. 3 and 4 runners — which he said resulted from a feeling both competitors had that they were flat going into the meet — was more than made up for by the top two K-State men.

David Warders was the top runner participating as a member of a team, posting a time of 24:39.81. Two unattached runners posted better times than Warders.

Right behind Warders was teammate Todd Trask, who posted a time of 24:49.54. The effort of the duo allowed K-State to score 40 points to second-place Drake's 73.

Though disappointing Capriotti, Smith and Byrne finished in the top 10 of the runners representing teams, with Smith taking seventh and Byrne ninth.

"I was pleased with the job Warders and Trask did," Capriotti said. "They went out at a pretty decent pace, and both of them ran good, smooth races."

Capriotti said the meet was a good gauge as to his team's progress thus far this fall.

"We wanted to see where kids were at conditioning-wise," he said. "It went pretty well. We haven't done anything fast yet in training, so we're not going to be running all that fast.

"From a standpoint of what we've done in training, and under the weather conditions we faced last week in practice, it was great."

Tigers blow lead late, lose

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With victories coming so few and far between, Missouri can scarcely afford to give one away.

But the Tigers did just that Saturday, blowing a game to Texas Christian that they should have won.

"It was shocking," Missouri receiver Linzy Collins said of the 20-19 loss. "That's the only way to describe it."

In other Big Eight games, No. 23 Oklahoma beat No. 19 UCLA 34-14, No. 10 Nebraska overpowered Northern Illinois 60-14, Kansas beat Oregon State 38-12, Iowa State defeated Northern Iowa 35-6 and Oklahoma State took a 50-7 beating from Florida.

Texas Christian quarterback Leon Clay came off the bench in the fourth quarter to throw three touchdown passes to stun the Tigers.

Clay had been benched after throwing two interceptions in last week's 21-3 loss to Washington State.

"What can you say about Leon Clay?" Coach Jim Wacker said. "To come off the bench and do the job he did is just incredible. I wonder what all of those people who were booing him last week have to say about this."

Collins had caught two touchdown passes from Missouri quarterback Kent Kiefer. Niu Sale ran 52 yards to score on a punt return as the Tigers built a 19-0 lead before losing their opener for the first time since 1985.

Missouri tried to run the clock out late in the game, but Kiefer was intercepted. Clay took the Horned Frogs on a 52-yard drive and got the victory when Stephen Shipley got behind the defense in the end zone with 1:03 left.

"Our offense was playing pretty well for three quarters, then it just stopped," linebacker Travis Condict said.

Have to punt? Make sure Tony Levy is on your team.

Oklahoma's Levy recovered two fumbled UCLA punts and both led to touchdowns as the Sooners celebrated their return to national television with a victory over the Bruins.

Steve Collins scored twice for Oklahoma, which had been banned from television last year as part of an NCAA probation.

Nebraska's Mickey Joseph filled in for injured quarterback Mike Grant by running for one score and throwing for another.

Joseph rushed for 75 yards on 11 carries and completed 4-of-11 passes for 103 yards.

Volleyball team drops 2

The K-State volleyball squad dropped both of its matches this weekend in the Southwest Missouri State September Classic.

The 'Cats started off the tournament by winning their first game 15-8 to 1989 Big Ten Conference runner-up Minnesota. Then the spikers could not put the Golden Gophers away in the second game when they had them down 14-11, going on to lose 16-14. K-State fell in the other two games of the match 15-6 and 15-12.

"We played the 20th-ranked team in the nation very tough. I think we could have won the match," Coach Scott Nelson said. "We had an opportunity to take control after winning the first game. We played well enough to give us a chance.

"We had several unforced errors and let Minnesota win game two, and we didn't recover as quickly as we needed," Nelson said.

K-State was smothered by host squad SMSU in their afternoon match, 15-3, 15-8 and 15-4, making their record 3-2.

Chiefs open with win, 24-21

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Steve DeBerg, throwing to wide-open receivers, ripped off gains of 20 and 16 yards in a 78-yard, fourth-quarter touchdown drive Sunday that carried Kansas City past the Minnesota Vikings 24-21.

Christian Okoye, the 1989 NFL rushing champion who generally had been outplayed all day by Minnesota counterpart Herschel Walker, climaxed the go-ahead drive with a 2-yard plunge with 9:35 left. The Vikings then failed on a fourth-and-2 with 2:14 left, giving the Chiefs the ball at the Minnesota 31.

On the winning drive, DeBerg found Bill Jones alone in the flat for a 16-yard gain on first down. He then connected with Robb Thomas, who also was uncovered, for 20 yards. Okoye set up the score with an 11-yard run around left end.

Sampras wins U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Teen-ager Pete Sampras drove Andre Agassi absolutely batty Sunday to become the youngest U.S. Open champion in history.

Sampras, 19, aced Agassi 13 times and hit 12 service winners with serves up to 124 mph in a 6-4, 6-3, 6-2 slaughter on stadium court.

Agassi lacked the power and accuracy he showed in beating Boris Becker in the semifinals, but he was simply overwhelmed by Sampras's huge serves, deep groundstrokes and acrobatic play at the net.

Advance tickets go on sale

Musicals, dance, orchestras slated for theater season

By Jerry Sapp
Collegian Reporter

The stage is set and the curtains are rising for another season of theater at K-State — and students can save money by buying subscription tickets for the 1990-91 season.

"You save 20 percent off of the original price of an individual ticket when you buy a subscription," said Marci Maullar, theater program management coordinator.

There are other advantages to buying a subscription compared to individual tickets for the season's seven programs.

"When you buy a subscription, you get a chance at the best seats in the house before anyone else," Maullar said. "Plus, if you want to exchange your tickets for a different night, you can. Individual ticket buyers can't."

The upcoming theater season will offer a wide variety of entertainment beginning with the country musical, "Pump Boys and Dinettes," which runs from Oct. 10-20 in Nichols Theatre.

The series continues with "Amadeus," playing Nov. 8-17 in Nichols Theatre. "Amadeus," a Tony-award winner and Broadway hit by Peter Shaffer, reveals the last days of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart as seen through the eyes of rival composer Antonio Salieri.

Jazz, modern and classical styles of dance will be featured Dec. 7-8 at Nichols Theatre. The K-State Repertory Dance Company will perform "An Intimate Evening of Dance" featuring original choreography by K-State faculty.

The theater season kicks off spring semester of 1991 with "Steel Magnolias." This comedy about women, men and relationships will appear Jan. 31 through Feb. 9 in Nichols Theatre.

Dance and orchestral music are also represented. The K-State Department of Dance performs "Spring dance '91" on March 1 and 2 in McCain Auditorium. The K-State Orchestra will perform the music for Mozart's "The Magic Flute," on April 4-6.

The season finale will feature

Innovative ideas, diversity integral to leadership skills

By Mary Skinner
Collegian Reporter

About 100 K-State students gathered in the K-State Union Saturday for the day-long "Leadership Network" where they discussed innovative ideas about diversity and leadership skills.

The meeting was the first leadership network of its type hosted at K-State, said Clint Riley, senior in chemical science, in which the issue of diversity is incorporated into a leadership conference on campus.

"The end result of this leadership network is what is important," Riley said. "K-State is open to diversity in leaders and also leaders are sensitive towards diversity." Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, welcomed the crowd while explaining the objectives for the day.

He said he expected those gathered for the leadership network to examine the context of leadership and how a better understanding of that context will make better leaders. He also emphasized the importance of working toward developing leadership skills, improving communication skills and examining the values and ethics of leadership.

Krause stressed to the group that commonalities exist in effective leaders. Qualities such as having a vision or purpose for their group, being able to delegate responsibility and knowing themselves while being a leader are instrumental in learning that there are no shortcuts in becoming a leader, he said.

"You affect the quality of education at K-State. Whatever you do affects the campus," Krause said.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, agreed.

"K-State leaders today and throughout the years have made a significant difference in what K-State is about and few colleges and universities can say that," he said.

The leadership network was composed of nine sessions, which allowed each person to attend three sessions throughout the morning.

Accreditation awarded to administration program

Quality stressed in public service

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's Masters in Public Administration program received accreditation from the National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration this summer.

Krishna Tummala, director of K-State's program, said the NASPAA, which is the parent body of more than 200 schools, reviews and accredits the programs.

"Basically, the accreditation assures us we are doing what the national standards are," Tummala said.

Tummala said the program will be up for reaccreditation in 1997, which gives the department time to concentrate on curriculum and not worry about regulations.

Carla Campbell, graduate student in public administration, said she expects the accreditation to help her find a job once she has graduated.

"The accreditation was a big morale booster," Campbell said. "I was really excited when I heard that we have been accredited."

Campbell was one of the graduate students involved in the accreditation process.

"We had lunch with the accreditation team and told them what we thought of the program," Campbell said. "They asked us what we like about the program and why we were here."

The program has more than 30 students.

"We are looking for quality rather than quantity (of students)," Tummala said. "We want students who have a commitment to public service."

Tummala said there are two types of students in the program: people who have already had some kind of employment and students who are working towards a degree in public service.

"The program is basically designed to send students into public service," Tummala said.

The Public Administration program has had nearly a 100 percent success rate concerning graduate employment and has been competitive with other programs across the nation, Tummala said.

Campbell said she decided to complete her graduate work in public administration so she could use it as a tool to upgrade her education and add to her undergraduate degrees.

One unique part of the program is the opportunity to compete for a position as the Presidential Management Intern. The program places interns with federal agencies and is the only program like this in the world, Tummala said.

Each year, nearly 400 MPA's are selected nationally for this program. Helaine Hermina Keele, one of the students in K-State's program, is working as an PMI intern.

Similar to the PMI, K-State has two students, Kristy Koscielny and Patrick Higgins, graduates in public administration, selected for Governor's Fellowships.

"With accreditation, the MPA program acquires national stature," Tummala said.

State workers file suit for pay

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Some state employees may be eligible for overtime pay and not be aware of it.

The Kansas Association of Public Employees announced Tuesday it will file a lawsuit to get past-due overtime compensation for state workers, many of whom were not aware they were eligible for overtime pay.

"If a worker's pay can be docked, whether he is a salaried worker or not, he is considered an hourly employee and is subject to overtime," said Maxey Erwin, KAPE spokesperson. "Many salaried employees aren't aware of this and are not receiving the right compensation."

The issue surfaced with a complaint filed by Brad Avery, KAPE staff counsel, against the U.S. Department of Labor on behalf of the maintenance workers in the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services who were not receiving compensation for overtime work.

While researching for that case, Avery discovered that almost every agency in the state government was in violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act in their practice of compensation of overtime to salaried workers, Erwin said.

The Department of Labor was found to be violating the Fair Labor Standards Act, and the laborers were compensated with back overtime pay.

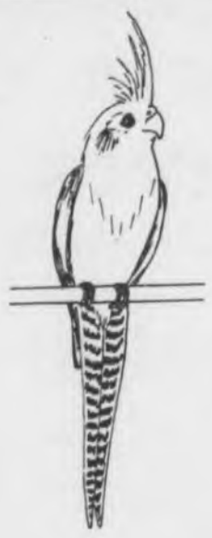
KAPE plans to file a complaint within 30 days against the state to get back pay for state employees who may affected by a possible violation of the act.

But, legal restrictions prevent KAPE from filing the lawsuit as a class action, Erwin said.

A class action is a lawsuit brought for a specific person and all other persons in the same situation. The plaintiff must convince the court there are too many persons in the class or group to make them all individually a part of the lawsuit and must convince the court that the plaintiff can adequately represent the group's needs.

"Each and every state employee will have to be specifically named on the complaint in order for them to receive compensation," he said.

Erwin said both classified and unclassified employees could be affected, but the majority will be salaried workers.



"We estimate there will be around 5,000 actual plaintiffs for the complaint, and about $50 million dollars in back overtime involved," he said.

Jamesina Evans, an official at the state division of personnel services, said overtime is not always compensated with money. She said compensation is often given as time off.

"That makes it really hard to come up with even an estimated total of overtime," Evans said.

President of KAPE Chapter 11 John Province said the service and maintenance employees at K-State are in the process of approving a new contract.

MHS political luncheons planned

Student initiates idea to promote government interest; 5 area candidates invited

By The Collegian Staff

A Manhattan High School student hopes to raise students' political awareness by inviting several candidates to lunch.

Aaron Otto, a sophomore at Manhattan High School, said he thought of the idea of inviting local political figures to the high school.

Rep. Katha Hurt, D-Manhattan, and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, will eat lunch at the high school Tuesday, Sept. 18.

On Tuesday, Sept. 25, candidates Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, and Stan Hoerman, R-Manhattan, will be at the high school. Governor hopeful Joan Finney, a 1942 graduate of MHS, will return to her alma mater on Thursday, Sept. 27.

Mickey Bogart, social studies department head, said the candidates will appear during regular lunch period at the high school from 11:15 a.m. to noon. The idea is for the students to informally talk and ask questions of the candidates in a relaxed atmosphere.

"The candidates were very agreeable in coming to lunch," he said. "They are interested in cultivating interest in potential voters, and I think the kids enjoy that type of respect."

Otto has been working on the lunches since the middle of August.

Bogart and Brenda Pirtle, student council sponsor, have helped Otto.

"We've been the support group for Aaron. We're also here to lend a little credibility," Bogart said.

Otto's interest in politics sparked the idea.

"My grandpa was into politics, and my great-grandpa was a democratic state legislator during the Kennedy Era. So I've always had an interest in politics," Otto said.

Otto tried to start a political club last year but it failed.

"Out of 1,700 students, I thought it might work but it flopped," he said. "But I might try again next year."

Bogart referred to the lunches as a trial run to see if there is an interest in politics at MHS.

"It depends on the students' interest. When the kids are exposed to the candidates, maybe we can get some interest generated," Bogart said.

Farm crisis hotline provides aid; serves as mediator in foreclosures

Goal of FACTS to help farmers

By Shannon Meyers
Collegian Reporter

FACTS, Farmers Assistance Counseling and Training Service, was established in 1985 by the Legislature. The office on campus, opened July 1, 1985, has logged more than 6,500 calls.

"FACTS is a farm-crisis hotline that was developed in reaction to the farming crisis in the eighties," said Charlie Griffin, assistant director for FACTS. "Our primary goal is to help people keep a successful farming operation or to stay in farming. When that is not possible, we help people make a transition into a different lifestyle and cope with the necessary changes."

These changes include job training programs or returning to school, Griffin added.

The program is administered through the Kansas Board of Agriculture in cooperation with the K-State Extension Cooperative Service.

"This unique partnership between the state and the University allows us to more easily utilize all available resources," Griffin said. "Being located on the K-State campus has provided extra resources in the areas of farm management and connections with county-extension services. The biggest asset that our office has is the statewide network which we have built."

The office, which receives about 30 calls per day, has a staff of nine people. Callers are promised anonymity.

"Anonymity allows people to ask questions that they normally couldn't or would not want to," Griffin said.

The hotline is a toll-free number. The caller may talk to an attorney, financial specialist, farm-management specialist or family therapist in the office or may be referred to someone in their local area who can help them, Griffin said.

"Our work is very dependent on referrals across the state," he said.

"One of the best things we do is to provide people in rural areas with information and resources," said Char Henton, family-needs specialist. "Many times people are not aware of the services that are available to them."

K-State regional home for Stock Market Game

By Charlie Gatschet
Collegian Reporter

Stock market transactions are taking place among the academic activities in Bluemont Hall.

K-State's Center for Economic Education has been selected as a regional processing center for a program called The Stock Market Game sponsored by the Securities Industry Association (SIA), a trade association for brokerage firms.

The game gives students from grade school through college the opportunity to invest $100,000 of make-believe money in the stock market by putting together stock portfolios and following their progress for a 10-week period.

"We chose K-State as a regional processing center because they have been involved in the game for quite some time and they did a quality job," said Shari Saia, SIA director of economic education.

The Center for Economic Education is the second of only four regional processing centers in the nation, and is responsible for processing over 20,000 entries per year, representing almost 100,000 students from nine states. For the past 11 years the center has participated in the game as state coordinator handling all the entries from Kansas schools.

Saia, a K-State graduate, worked with the center on the game from 1980 to 1985 while attending K-State. She said New York, which has the most entries in the nation (over 10,000), requested K-State to process their entries because they were not satisfied with their previous processor.

Regional centers are being set up to standardize the game which was played in 40 states last year. Previously, each state had its own headquarters for the game, but the growing number of participants has made regional centers a necessity, Saia said.

The center received a $40,000 grant this year from SIA to offset the cost of processing the entries, and budgets some of its own money for the game. It is money well-spent, said Elizabeth Simons, director of the regional processing center at K-State.

"We get a lot of publicity nationwide. Every portfolio sent to students has Kansas State University on it," Simons said. "We get (high school) students to come by whose only trip to the University was for the Stock Market Game banquet."

While the game involves the buying and selling of stock, the emphasis is not on money.

"It's not to teach kids how to buy and sell stocks," Simons said. "The purpose of the game is to teach economic principles and to (observe) the interaction of global markets and their effects on the U.S. economy."

One game is played each semester, but participation is higher in the spring semester because high school and junior high teachers often use the first semester to prepare students to play. Teams buy stock by researching and selecting companies they think will be profitable, and then follow the progress of their portfolios by reading newspapers and weekly updates sent by the regional processing center.

"Kids tend to buy into things that affect their lives," Simons said.

Fast food restaurants and toy stores are popular investments for younger participants, while high school students lean towards large, well-known corporations.

The majority of participants are from junior high and high school, but Simons would like to see an increase in participation from colleges.

"We really want to encourage more college students to play," Simons said.

Winners of the game are determined by the amount of money their portfolios increase by over the 10-week period. An essay contest is included in the contest to emphasize the economic education aspect of the game, Simons said.

Kansas winners are invited to a banquet every spring in the K-State Union where they receive cash prizes and trophies. A national winner is declared for the essay contest, but not for portfolios.

The cost for entering is $15 per team and is usually paid for by the school. Saia said she believes the game benefits both K-State and the students who participate.

Student joins Singers

Love of Christ communicated in music

By Shannon Heim
Collegian Reporter

While most K-State students spend the fall semester in classrooms, Jodi Moherman, senior in music, will be traveling in the northwest United States and Europe.

Moherman leaves Sept. 10 to begin a fall tour with the Continental Singers, a non-denominational religious organization.

Moherman said she has wanted to be a member of the Singers since she was a sophomore at Manhattan High School, but it was not until she recently contacted the main office in Thousand Oaks, Calif., that she decided to tour with the group this fall.

"I'm extremely excited," Moherman said. "I'm really looking forward to spreading the gospel to people through music."

Although she has only one semester left to complete her degree, Moherman said she chose to tour now to help fill the organization's immediate need for a synthesizer player.

Continental Singers must be between the ages of 16 and 28 and are required to submit a demo tape. Once they are accepted, members must raise expense money, which averages about $4,000 per participant.

Members choose what part of the world they wish to tour and organizers try to book at least one concert per day. Most performances are in churches, but groups also visit schools and county fairs. The groups travel in chartered buses and stay with host families each night.

Two other K-State students, Stacey Grecian, sophomore in early childhood education, and Grant Boyd, senior in agricultural economics, toured with the Singers this summer.

Grecian first heard of Continental Singers through a music instructor in her hometown of Palco. After attending several concerts, Grecian applied and was accepted to sing with a group of 25 singers and a nine-piece band.

Grecian said she wrote letters to merchants and friends and held two car washes to raise the $4,200 she needed. She said sponsors were willing to donate and that she raised the money sooner than she had expected.

On June 4, Grecian flew to Los Angeles where she met other singers. She then went to Westmont College in Santa Barbara, Calif., for a nine-day rehearsal camp before her tour began.

After the concerts, performers often visited with audience members in small groups. "It was a really neat experience. One thing we tried to stress is that we were communicators, not performers. We tried to share the love of Christ," Grecian said.

Boyd toured with the Singers as a sound technician after hearing about the group from a friend at Manhattan Christian College where he is enrolled part-time.

Ousted Pakistani party faces numerous charges

Critics try to kill Bhutto politically

By The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Her opponents are determined to have Benazir Bhutto remembered as the disgraced leader of Pakistan's most corrupt and incompetent government, not as a martyr for democracy.

When she was dismissed last month after 20 months in office, they set out to destroy what some called the myth — that only a Bhutto could govern Pakistan.

In removing the prime minister and her democratically elected government Aug. 6, President Ghulam Ishaq Khan cited a long list of complaints ranging from corruption and ineptitude to abuse of power.

Bhutto called it a constitutional coup by the Establishment, a reference to the generals who formerly ruled Pakistan and still have enormous influence.

A caretaker government made up largely of defected allies and bitter critics of Bhutto has hurled charge after charge to an effort to discredit her Pakistan People's Party, which was founded by her father. Some say her enemies are trying to force her out of politics.

Three former Cabinet ministers have been charged in special courts set up to handle corruption cases and to disqualify candidates from elections called for Oct. 24, three years ahead of schedule.

The new government has said at least half a dozen more cases will be filed, possibly against Bhutto.

Many Pakistanis see the tribunals as "kangaroo courts" evoking memories of the process her father, Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, underwent 13 years ago after Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq overthrew him. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was hanged two years later.

"There are glaring similarities with 1977, but there also are differences," Bhutto said in a recent interview at her fortress-like home in Karachi. "The wind of democracy has come across the world. There is a new future ahead, and it will not be easy for them to drag Pakistan backward."

Opponents have not presented concrete evidence to support their charges, and the family name still carries much of its old magic for many. Wherever she goes, Bhutto draws large crowds that chant "Benazir, Benazir is innocent!"

Since its creation as a Moslem homeland 43 years ago, when the Indian subcontinent became independent of Britain, Pakistan has endured three wars, three internal insurgencies and three military dictators.

Two prime ministers, a president, several high-ranking generals and countless politicians and religious leaders have been assassinated. Thirteen governments have been dismissed and three constitutions written.

"Many are wondering whether there is something sick, something terminal festering deep down in the political soul of Pakistan," said political analyst Akbar Ahmed. "It is a cycle of despair, military rule and terror, civilian rule and anarchy."

Nobody said it would be easy to lead this volatile country of 110 million out of the social and economic problems a decade of martial law created, but never was such a legacy of admiration and goodwill squandered so swiftly.

Bhutto — just 37 years old, inexperienced and Western-educated — pursued a policy of confrontation rather than compromise. Opponents considered her arrogant and vindictive, and spared no effort to bring her down.

In her eagerness to become prime minister, she promised to share power with the president and the army chief of staff, Gen. Mirza Aslam Beg. She tried to play one against the other, but they united against her.

She infuriated Beg by meddling in army promotions, something she promised not to do. Her policy on Kashmir was unclear and her public statements of support for militant Moslems in the disputed territory antagonized India, Pakistan's hostile neighbor.

She displayed only nominal interest in finding a peaceful settlement to the 12-year-old civil war in neighboring Afghanistan and helping nearly 4 million Afghan refugees return home from Pakistan.

Debate

to be useful.

In his rebuttal time, Hayden asked, "Where was Joan Finney?"

Hayden said Finney was part of the Democratic platform committee in 1978, 1982 and 1986. In all of those years, the platform supported the classification amendment as a major plank.

Fort Riley expansion was one of the few subjects the candidates had similar views. Both candidates said they feel they need a guarantee that the 1st Infantry Division will stay at the fort before they will support expansion.

Both candidates said the fort was too big of an economical asset to loose, but without a guarantee, the rights of the farmers should be protected.

After the debate, both candidates claimed victory.

Hayden said the debate was successful because it pointed out several of Finney's flaws.

He said she was weak on the issues, refering to one point in the debate where Finney said the issue of taxing the pensions of veterans had already been decided by the courts and the governor wouldn't have control over it. Hayden, during his time to answer the question, corrected her and said the governor could enact legislation even after the decision was made.

"We got to make the points we wanted to make," Hayden said. "She is anti-abortion, anti-death penalty and her tax plan is a disaster."

Finney said the debate showed the voters the differences between herself and her opponent.

"I feel very confident about it, and I think it was good for Kansans because it certainly gives them a clear choice," she said. "We're very, very different and if they want to continue down the same path they're going, then they should vote for the governor, but if they want a change, then they should go with me."

Leadership

The session topics ranged from student motivation to leadership in a multicultural world. One session entitled "Judge or Be Judged" demonstrated how people make preconceptions, or label, people that they are not accustomed to being around.

The luncheon speaker, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, challenged the crowd to be open-minded about diversity and to put away their preconceived notions and labels.

"The world we live in is changing," Franklin said. "We need to reach a multicultural community or campus and be genuinely dedicated to a diverse, sensitive, open-minded and responsive environment."

Franklin said we need to be open-minded about diversity because in the year 2000 one-half of the working population will be non-white. Currently, 20 percent of all children in the U.S. are non-white and, by the year 2020, the number will rise to 30 percent.

Franklin urged the crowd to take a look at the organizations that K-Staters are involved in and to find ways to diversify them. If diversification is impossible, then students should make a stand and reconsider membership in those organizations if the organization does not respond, he said.

Marvin Peck, junior in business administration and employee at Rusty's Last Chance, said the bar already enforces the idea behind "I'm Driving" by giving designated drivers free sodas.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, programs such as this help save lives. A 1989 Gallup poll reported the number of persons killed in auto crashes decreased 15 percent between the years 1980 through 1989 as a result of programs such as "I'm Driving."

One U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the two leaders had not settled any of the issues blocking agreement on either accord.

second year of participating in the carnival. Marvin Peterson, president of OCA and sophomore in political science, said the association is re-establishing itself as a campus organization.

OCA participated in the carnival to seek out those students living off-campus who want to get involved in activities that the organized living groups participate in, such as Homecoming, intramurals and camping out for basketball tickets.

"At the Activities Carnival, we try to find a base group of people to join our club and grow from there," Peterson said.

Teachers to vote on reorganization plan

SHAPING THE FUTURE

Faculty Senate will decide on endorsement

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Faculty Senate will vote at 4 p.m. today in the Big Eight Room on whether or not to endorse the preparation of a University-wide reorganization plan with Faculty Senate input, Senate President Wayne Nafziger said.

President Jon Wefald offers his arguments for reorganization at 3 p.m. today in Forum Hall when he delivers a State of the University address.

Reorganization could lead to the merging or elimination of departments, programs and faculty positions.

Plans to incorporate the reorganization into the University's strategic plan are expected to cause lively debate in Senate, Nafziger said.

"I think a lot of debate will center on the question of which colleges and departments will be hurt," Nafziger said. "There is also the question of will the Legislature let us keep funds released by reorganization. The administration hopes if the Legislature is serious about having agencies reorganize internally, they won't penalize the one agency that has taken on this restructuring."

During his address, Wefald will also outline steps administrators and faculty leaders would take in drafting a proposal for reoganization.

Wefald and Provost James Coffman will answer questions in Forum Hall after Wefald's speech. Coffman will attend the Senate meeting.

"This is the president's first opportunity to say to the entire campus community, 'this is why we need reorganization,'" said John Fairman, assistant vice president for University relations. "He has talked about it with faculty leadership but never with the whole University."

Wefald said, earlier this semester, that loss of funding for the third year of the Margin of Excellence and the loss of enrollment adjustment monies have increased the immediate need for reorganization.

"There is anxiety among even tenured faculty members," Nafziger said. "There is a lot of concern about being tenured in a department with a truncated mission and reduced numbers. I think a reorganization draft plan will reduce anxiety."

"This is scary," said Leo Schell, professor of curriculum and instruction. "I have a broad view of what higher education is, and I can see this turning K-State into a technical school for jobs in business and industry."

Schell said he is afraid reorganization will place particular emphasis on courses of study that prepare students for direct employment after graduation. Classes providing an uplifting approach to education, such as music and art, will suffer and the vision of the University will become too narrow.

Jon Wefald

3 p.m. today in Forum Hall: President Jon Wefald will call for University reorganization during his State of the University Address.
Wefald and Provost James Coffman will answer questions in Forum Hall after the speech.
4 p.m. today in the Big Eight Room: Faculty Senate will vote on whether or not to endorse the preparation of a reorganization plan with Faculty Senate input. Coffman will attend the Senate meeting.

Administrators are hoping to free up about $2 million by eliminating or consolidating weak programs. The intention being to strengthen already successful programs by redistributing University funds.

"Since (reorganization) is political, it is a power struggle," Schell said. "They take from the weak and give it to the strong. There are some departments so strong that they don't need to get any stronger. We're not in this for a profit."

Coffman said he understands that many faculty members are concerned about reorganization procedures, but as the process unfolds much of the concern will be abated.

"The provost and the president feel the state we are in isn't satisfactory, and they want to take steps to change things," said Donald Hoyt, assistant provost of planning and evaluation services. "They want to be sure that others agree. The provost and the president are hesitant to push ahead without the approval of the faculty. There's a lot of dicussion that will take place."

Hoyt said there isn't much known and little should be known about specific changes until the idea of reorganization has been endorsed.

Administrators stress that no decisions have been made at this point, and they will simply present the need to draft a reorganization plan during the address today.

Over the last two years, as part of the strategic-planning process, colleges have developed goals to guide the reallocation of resources, Fairman said. These programs haven't been implemented yet and need to be fine-tuned.

"I feel fairly confident in saying that no tenured faculty will lose their positions." Fairman said. "Tenured faculty will have a position at K-State."

With the larger-than-normal number of faculty approaching retirement in the next five years and the normal number of faculty lost to other universities, industry and government, Fairman said he believes the number of non-tenured faculty losing positons due to reorganization will be relatively small.

"We're reorganizing and cutting back on our budgets before we've been asked to, I don't see the other schools in Kansas doing that," said Dave Swenson, associate professor of mechanical engineering. "I'm looking for why we are doing it and jumping out in front of everyone else. I'd like to see K-State be more aggressive in the state."

If Faculty Senate endorses reorganization, administrators say they hope to have a draft plan ready by mid-November.

Fee to raise $245,000 to help fund fine arts

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

K-State is hoping to re-enter the world of quality fine arts this semester with a shopping excursion funded by the new fine arts fee.

The $7.40 fee charged to full-time students this fall is intended to raise the quality of the arts brought to campus and expose more students to excellence in the fine arts.

Approximate allocations of the funds in the Student Senate bill are still awaiting a final vote by the Fine Arts Council, but enrollment this fall is expected to generate about $245,000.

The new monies will be distributed as follows: the speech department budget will be raised from $26,140 to $58,000; the music department budget from $19,487 to $46,550; and the art department budget from $4,595 to $26,950 — an increase of 486 percent.

McCain Auditorium will receive 36 percent of the fee money and will use the new funds solely to lower student-ticket prices. The remaining ten percent will go to an "other" category, which will fund events like summer activities and arts in the park.

Gary Woodward, head of the art department, said the fine arts fee will be an improvement for the entire University — not just the art, music, or theater departments.

The art department has already begun to use their portion of the fee money for the second exhibit at the Union Gallery. The new exhibit is unlike previous shows because it was curated by museum people, making the exhibit more of a concept or a collection rather than simply an individual artist's work.

The show scheduled for Sept. 10 at the Union Gallery was rented from the Mid-America Arts Alliance in Kansas City, something the art department would never have considered before this semester. The art department has also instituted upscale invitations, brochures, publications, and advertisements to promote these new quality shows and to interest more student organizations.

"I'm really committed to this money being turned back to the students in services," Woodward said.

He plans to use part of the money to supplement trips to exhibits both in Kansas and out of state. The first of these excursions will be a trip to Lucas and the Salina Arts Center at the end of September. The American Drawings exhibit from the New York City Cooper Hewett Museum will be in Salina and local folk art in the Garden of Eden will be on display in Lucas.

The music department plans to use their portion of the arts fee in much the same way as the art department. It will be returned to students in the form of services through guest musicians, clinicians for the Central

K-State 38th nationally for educational expenses

By Elvyn Jones
Staff Reporter

Students at K-State are getting a bargain.

An article in the Fall 1990 issue of Money Magazine's Money Guide rated the top 200 American public and private schools by quality relative to price. K-State ranked 38th among public schools.

The magazine calculated what each school should be expected to cost, based on 17 measures of academic performance, and then compared that figure to the actual cost.

Some of those measures were the graduation rate, the student/faculty ratio, the number of books in the library and the SAT scores and class rank of incoming freshmen.

Out-of-state tuition costs were used in determining the cost for public schools, so in-state students are getting an even better bargain, according to the article.

K-State was the highest-ranked school in the Big Eight. Other Big Eight schools ranked in the top 100 were the University of Kansas, 47th; the University of Missouri, 48th; Iowa State University, 64th; and the University of Colorado, 98th.

K-State was also ranked ahead of its five peer universities. The peer universitites are North Carolina State, Colorado State, Oregon State, Iowa State and Oklahoma State.

K-State President Jon Wefald said it was gratifying to see Money magazine recognize the value of K-State.

"Since I've been at K-State, we have concentrated on attracting high-quality students," Wefald said. "I think Money magazine recognized that."

Wefald said that funding for the first two years of the Margin of Excellence and other work has put K-State in the position for this recognition and that a continued focus on strategic planning, such as the University reorganization Wefald will address today, will keep it there.

The highest-rated school in the article was Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art, a private university in New York City.

Volunteers help center

Shelter provides victims comfort, self-confidence

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

"The most dangerous place in America for a woman is the home," said Sandy Barnett, client services coordinator of the Crisis Center, Inc., addressing 42 volunteers Saturday during volunteer training.

The center provides a telephone hot line and a shelter for victims of domestic violence or sexual assault 24 hours a day, 365 days a year for Geary, Riley, Pottawatomie, Clay and Marshall counties and Fort Riley.

"We usually think of women being battered by men because that's the case in 98 percent of the reported incidents of domestic violence," said Kim Blubaugh, executive director for the Crisis Center, Inc. "But men, lesbians and gay men may be victims as well."

"The fears never leave you, but now I am not alone," said Lee Baldwin, once a victim, now a volunteer trainee. "Now I can say 'you can do it.' I know the fears — the biggest is the fear of the unknown even if the known is very bad."

Victims of domestic violence do not know their options or the resources available to them, instructors told the volunteers. That's where the crisis center comes in.

The center's mission is to help the victim define the problem, their role in it and how to get out of it, said Crisis Center, Inc. intern Cindy Barriga, graduate student in social work.

"Why don't they just leave?" is a common question, Barriga said. Understanding why someone stays in a violent relationship is central to the training of volunteers, she said.

A victim will stay in an abusive relationship because a battering relationship is a controlling relationship, Barriga said. Every move the victim makes is controlled either directly or indirectly by the abuser, she said.

Barriga said victims feel fear because of threats that the batterer will find them and kill them or take the children away if they leave. Victims feel economically dependent, especially when there are children involved, because they do not know of resources available. Victims feel shame because of their low self-esteem and their belief they are at fault. And victims feel helpless because they have learned to be helpless and often are isolated.

There is a strong emotional attachment, the dichotomy of a love/hate relationship, which may be the hardest thing to deal with, Barriga said.

An understanding of the dynamics of domestic violence is necessary for volunteers to be effective, and volunteers may sometimes be the only ones that will listen.

"We may be the first person to understand them — believe them," said Linda Bracket, a volunteer for two years.

Victims do not always have to show signs of physical abuse to be victims of physical abuse, Barriga said.

"Physical abuse includes shoving, kicking or hair-pulling," she said. Sexual abuse occurs any time someone forces another into a sexual situation, she said.

"Emotional abuse occurs when a victim is terrorized by the threat of violence," Barriga said. "This kind of abuse takes a long time to heal because it's in your mind."

Environmental abuse occurs when family or friends reinforce the victim with a "you made your bed, now lie in it" mentality, Barriga said.

This violence occurs in a cycle that has been identified by Dr. Lenore Walker, Barriga said. There are three phases in the cycle: tension building,

Soviets aid German economy

EAST BERLIN (AP) — German officials on Monday announced a deal to help troubled East German farmers supply shortage-plagued Soviets with food and cigarettes.

The contract, estimated at $636 million, will allow East Germans to rid their packed storehouses and processing plants of millions of tons in unsold fish, livestock, butter, milk and flour.

East German stores for the past several months have been spurning homegrown goods in favor of Western products, and the nation's farm sector has been reeling to the point of collapse. Farmers have been the most restive section of the workforce.

About 255,000 tons of meat, 60,000 tons of butter, 5,000 tons of fish and more than 1 million eggs are included in the contract, officials said.

Iran, Iraq resume relations

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said Monday it has agreed to restore full diplomatic relations with its former adversary Iraq, which is hoping to break out of its international isolation and coax support from other countries.

But it was not clear whether Tehran, by reopening embassies and exchanging diplomats with Baghdad for the first time since the Iran-Iraq war, has agreed to allow Iraq to ship in food and medicine through Iran to bypass U.N.-imposed economic sanctions for Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

Middle East analyst Hans-Heino Kopietz noted diplomatic relations between Iran and Iraq never officially were severed despite the two countries' bloody 1980-88 war. They closed their embassies in 1986 and their diplomats returned home, but there was no formal declaration breaking relations.

Cambodia leaders plan peace

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Cambodia's Vietnamese-backed government and leaders of rebel factions agreed Monday to a U.N. peace plan that calls for power-sharing and free elections.

Cambodia Premier Hun Sen said a date for a cease-fire had not been worked out, but all sides appeared optimistic following two days of talks to end the 11-year-old civil war.

"We have not reached peace yet ... but we have the framework," said Son Sann, former Cambodian premier and leader of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, part of the three-party guerrilla force.

Gulf sent non-alcoholic beer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A brewer has found a way around Saudi Arabia's prohibition: It's sending non-alcoholic beer to thirsty U.S. troops in the Mideast.

Anheuser-Busch Inc. announced Monday it will donate 22,000 cases of O'Doul's non-alcoholic beer to U.S. military personnel serving in Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf.

The shipment will give each serviceman or woman on duty an average of a six-pack.

The beer is expected to arrive in about two weeks, said Mike Roarty, executive vice president of the brewery. It is being brewed and packaged at the company's plant in Tampa, Fla., before being trucked to Charleston, S.C., for loading aboard a ship.

Cameras considered in courts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans soon could be getting their first televised glimpse of federal court proceedings.

A five-judge study committee is recommending a three-year experiment that would allow cameras and radio equipment to record civil trials in federal courtrooms.

The U.S. Judicial Conference, the policy-making arm of the federal courts, will meet Wednesday to consider the proposal. If the conference agrees, a handful of courtrooms could be open to cameras by July.

The plan envisions a variety of uses for the cameras, including airing the highlights of testimony on the evening news or the full trial on cable TV.

College fighting for survival

DODGE CITY (AP) — St. Mary of the Plains College may have to go to court if the federal government tries to force it to refund $80 million in student aid, an amount about 10 times its annual budget, its president says.

"Obviously, the college does not have that kind of money or access to that kind of money," Frank Kerins, interim president of the 1,100-student southwest Kansas school said Monday.

A southeast Kansas newspaper, The Independence Reporter, published a story Sunday based on a memo from a regional U.S. Department of Education official.

In the memo, William Allen, regional inspector general in Kansas City, Mo., outlined findings and recommended to Leonard Haynes III, an assistant secretary of education, that the college be ordered to refund the estimated $80 million.

Topekan threatens President

TOPEKA (AP) — Federal authorities have ordered a psychiatric examination for a man accused of threatening to kill President George Bush.

James Earl Bartlow, 44, no address available, was ordered to undergo the exam Monday by a federal magistrate in Topeka.

Authorities allege Bartlow last Friday told a security guard at the Eisenhower Museum in Abilene that he would "blow away" Bush. The alleged threat came one day after Bush made a stop in Topeka to stump for Gov. Mike Hayden.

Bartlow repeatedly interrupted the court proceedings Monday and was ultimately ordered gagged during the rest of the hearing.

Speaker suggests resolution

Foreign students worry Iraq won't depart Kuwait

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

The Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait by Iraq is a watershed, said Michael Suleiman, professor of political science.

Suleiman was the guest speaker Sept. 10 at this month's International Activities Luncheon.

"The gypsy is out of the bottle, and it will be difficult to return the region to what it was before," he said.

Suleiman said the political map of the Middle East has changed drastically.

"The taboo of one Arab country invading another has been broken, and Saddam Hussein is to blame," he said. "There is a fear and concern that other countries in the region will be encouraged to do the same."

The legitimacy of the countries in the region has been challenged and undermined, and they will never again be able to continue in the way they were, he said.

The United States needs to take advantage of its position, Suleiman said, with international support and try to find a graceful way for Iraq to get out of this situation.

Mustafa Ibrahim, senior in civil engineering, said he thinks that with the way the Iraqis are backing themselves, they are in Kuwait to stay.

"There is no way they are leaving," Ibrahim said. "There are too many of them, and the United States is building its forces in Saudi Arabia to protect the oil that is there."

Ibrahim is from Kuwait and was there this summer visiting his family at the time of the invasion. He said his family is not in danger.

"The invasion is an Arab problem which needs to be solved by Arabs," he said. "The United States needs to get out of there and let the people in the Middle East solve the Middle Eastern problems."

Suleiman said dangers would indeed be immense if a graceful solution to the problem is not found.

War would be the worse scenario, he said. A large number of people would be killed, including civilians and Americans.

"As bombs begin to fall on Iraq, they would also fall on Arabs," he said.

Suleiman said a war would cause a major political fallout with the Soviet Union distancing itself from the United States.

"The United States should begin to stop and think we are no longer in the cold war," he said. "We are no longer one of the two superpowers; we are indeed the superpower of the world."

A superpower does not merely exercise military options to protect international interests, he said, but thinks through a post-war situation in which democracy and redistribution of income will have to tackled.

"We must think in terms in introducing pressures on our allies to begin to involve interaction and activity by their own people in running their own countries," Suleiman said.

Families will no longer be able to control whole countries, he said. Legitimacy of a royal family has been undermined because Arab wealth has not only been squandered on investments overseas, but also on the pleasures of individuals.

"The regimes in the area are going to have to do something about democracy," he said. "They are going to have to start spending their wealth of the country in the interest of the people."

Ibrahim said the only leaders that now support a royal family are the those in the gulf who hold investments by the royal family.

"Even before the invasion, the Kuwaiti people were not satisfied with their government," he said. "There were demonstrations for democracy to take its way into the government."

Mohanad Al-Koubaisi, senior in architectural engineering, is from Iraq and said he fears a solution is not in the near future.

"Since America has the 'big hand,' this might take a long time," Al-Koubaisi said.

He said a peaceful solution would be admitting Iraq's right to keep Kuwait as a state of Iraq.

The invasion of Kuwait was an act of anger, and anger is temporary madness, Suleiman said.

Pledges told history at sorority meeting

By Ryan Finney
Collegian Reporter

Officials of the Sigma Kappa sorority gave a presentation to more than 300 people Sept. 10 in the Union's Forum Hall.

K-State's newest sorority wanted to inform pledge candidates about the history and tradition of their chapter.

"We already have a chapter at the University of Kansas, and we're very interested in having a second chapter in the state," said Phyllis Markley, national president of Sigma Kappa.

"Sigma Kappa tries to do a very good job of looking at the United States and balancing out our chapters and making sure they have sister chapters in their area," Markley said.

K-State will have sister chapters at KU and at the University of Missouri-Columbia.

More than 115 years ago, five young women were enrolled at Colby College in Waterville, Maine — the first females to be admitted to the New England college. In 1874, they started Sigma Kappa sorority, according to a brochure on Sigma Kappa.

There are now more than 115 collegiate chapters across the nation, and there are over 150 alumnae chapters and clubs in 40 states and the District of Columbia. Nationally, membership in Sigma Kappa exceeds 95,000.

Michele Anderson, graduate of the University of Illinois, will stay at K-State as chapter consultant.

Anderson's job will include directing chapter meetings, aiding with the chapters' traditions and teaching its history to the new pledges.

"I think sisterhood is very important, and it really comes out in our colony because it's a group that is able to establish traditions and their own history," Anderson said.

One of the unique features of a new chapter is that it will begin with no active members, Anderson said.

Laws need to regulate surrogate motherhood

Many women have a great desire to have a child of their own flesh and blood. Surrogate mothers have fulfilled that dream for many women who can conceive a child but cannot endure the rigors of a pregnancy for medical reasons.

Until there are laws regulating surrogate motherhood, however, it will continue to be an emotional controversy where it is hard to determine right or wrong, but exploitation is obvious.

Mark and Cris Calvert, a California couple in their mid-30s, wanted to have a baby. Cris had a hysterectomy because of uterine tumors — she could furnish an ovum, but could not endure a pregnancy.

Anna Johnson, 29 and single, was interested in becoming a surrogate mother and was introduced to the Calverts by a colleague.

After psychological and medical evaluations, Johnson decided to bear the Calverts' baby for them for $10,000 — a standard sum for surrogates.

Ova surgically removed from Cris were fertilized with Mark's sperm in a laboratory dish and placed in Johnson's uterus Jan. 19. The growing child in Johnson that is not expected to be born for another week is already caught in the middle of a lawsuit filed by Johnson for custody of the child, child-support payments and damages for emotional stress.

A child conceived out of love by the Calverts is now being exploited by the woman who agreed to carry the child for money. Johnson claims the Calverts were late with their payments, didn't offer her enough life insurance and didn't visit her enough when she was hospitalized for nausea.

The Calverts contend they made their payments early and did visit Johnson in the hospital.

Johnson's monetary demands, threats to end the pregnancy early and insistence on keeping the baby show just how little Johnson cares for the child she is carrying.

Now the courts are once again left to decide who the real mother is.

Johnson has less legal claim to this baby than Mary Beth Whitehead of the Baby M case. She has no blood ties to this baby, who genetically is the Calverts'.

If the court handles it as a custody case, acting in the best interest of the child, it would seem that the Calverts, being married and financially stable, would be preferable to a single mother.

Already a mother herself, Johnson agreed to this knowing what to expect in a pregnancy. She should have been able to empathize with the Calverts and their desire for a child.

Johnson has exploited the Calverts and their desire to have a child of their own and the courts should not allow it.

Johnson wants the baby — and a lot of money.

The Calverts just want their baby, and are willing to pay any amount of money.

It may be her body, and many would argue that she has the right to do with it what she wants, but she agreed to use her body to bring some joy and love into the Calverts' life. Instead, all she has brought them is grief.

Toys solution to problems

Karin Dell'Antonia

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Silly Putty is the answer to all of the world's problems. You may have thought it was just a kid's toy, but I'm here to tell you that the little red egg has powers and abilities beyond those of mortal man.

You can do so much more with Silly Putty than just copy cartoons and stretch them out (which works great with the Collegian, by the way, only the putty turns black). It bounces, it makes a nifty snap if you pull it just right and you can make an air bubble with it that goes "pop" when you squash it. You can make swell fake noses and Vulcan ears with it, and it won't stick in your hair. But best of all, you can just squish it. Anywhere, anytime, for hours on end, you can just squish it. I love that.

But I still feel waves of skepticism from the crowd. How, you ask, could such a silly sticky substance solve anything? Why, it isn't even nuclear (although it is now available in neon colors). But I insist that it's true. With a well-planned trip to Toys R Us and the help of Federal Express, we could nip endless political crises (plural of crisis, discovered with the help of Webster's, because when I have more than one crisis, I don't tend to write about it) right in the bud.

For starters, we send crates of Silly Putty along for every arms negotiation conference. All the ambassadors can squash and squish their frustrations right out on the table. And when there's a translation problem, the speaker can make a little model of whatever he's talking about and show it to everyone. If it's a big concept, some of the others will just have to share their Silly Putty. I imagine it will be good for them. Of course, if all the Putty popping and Silly snapping noises get out of hand, some rules will just have to be made. But after all, rule making is what they're there for.

To solve the Middle East crisis, I vote we give all of the countries involved some cap guns and some black and white cowboy hats and let them fight it out like real boys. Obviously Hussein didn't get to play like that as a kid. Otherwise someone would have said "No, no, Saddy, musn't take the nice oil out of the other country's yard. You play with your own toys."

With any luck, they'll get so involved with whether or not the imaginary bullets hit home that they'll forget to raise oil prices. After all, who wants to grub around in dirty old oil when you can play with your shiny new cap gun and stick horse?

Now here at home, I believe we could resolve Dwayne Lively's pet crisis, censorship, without much trouble or expense. The only reason I can fathom for the irrational behavior of Jesse Helmes and his Florida friends is jealousy, plain and simple. Those folks wanna play in a rock band! A toy tamborine, a baby piano, little guitars and some mini drums ought to make them perfectly happy. Then they can scream out their own indistinguishable lyrics and glory in the noise.

As for poor Jesse, a more frustrated art critic I have never seen. I'd suggest some paper and crayons, but since Jesse likes limits on his art, I have a better idea. We'd better send him an Etch-a-Sketch.

Locally, we face more complicated problems. I suggest we send our budget-cutting State Senate a set of paper dolls. But we'd better send safety scissors, too. I don't want anyone else to get hurt. Maybe if we gave them a Barbie Dream House, they'd be less excited about sending up other people's property taxes. We'd also better send some picture books and little toy desks with magnetic letters. Maybe if they learned how much fun education can be, they wouldn't be so anxious to cut our funding.

And for anyone who's ever attended any kind of committee or group meeting, on-campus or off, I strongly encourage the purchase of a Chatty Kathy doll. She'd fit right in at the meetings I attend. She says the same thing over and over.

For Hayden and Finney, I'd suggest they duel it out over a Monopoly board. It would take at least as long as the election, and that way they'd only spend play money. It would probably take a week for the two parties to clarify the political signifigance of whether to be the little dog or the top hat. Let the best woman win! (That is a subtle hint as to my political feelings in this particular election.)

Just imagine the Senate floor if we started resolving debates by who could work a paddle ball the longest? Or committee chairs could tell the Senate of their conclusions by drawing pictures on a big easel. Partisan contests could be decided by big Family Feud games. "Senator Kassebaum, what are the top five feelings that voters have about trade regulations." Finally people might actually watch that one channel where they show Senate and House proceedings all the time.

Yes, the powers of a toy store are endless. But Silly Putty is still my favorite. You can stick things to walls with it, you can make little Mr. Bills out of it, and you can take out endless frustrations with the squish of a finger. But best of all, if you use it to take a print of Eric Henry's face when he writes a column, you can make him look like Mr. Ed. Or Elmer Fudd. Or Bart Simpson. Or Zippy. But now I'm out of space, and besides, my Silly Putty is all black. All that fun for just a buck—thirty—nine.

Surveys senseless

Editor,

I sometimes wonder which is more senseless, some of the surveys which are taken in this country or some of the information which ends up in our newspapers as "news." Put the two together, and you have the likes of the national newsbrief "Survey shows sex ignorance" in the Sept. 6 Collegian.

The article, written by the Associated Press and datelined New York, referred to a survey conducted by the Kinsey Institute about Americans' sexual knowledge. The 18 questions in the poll supposedly represented facts which "people need to know for both their physical and mental health," according to Kinsey director June Reinisch. Now, keeping this purpose in mind, consider one of the survey results: Only 25 percent of the respondents knew that the typical American first has intercourse at age 16 to 17. I ask you, thinking people, what in the world does the age in which the typical American (whoever that would be), first has intercourse have to do with one's "physical and mental health"? Or, again, what is educational for my physical and mental health in knowing that, according to the Kinsey Institute, 30 to 40 percent of married men have had an extramarital affair? According to the results, only 25 percent of those polled knew this healthy, significant fact.

Think of how much healthier our country would be if more people knew such enlightening facts. The overall punch of the article and the survey itself is to show that Americans, while preoccupied with sex, actually know little about it. Well, I hope that if knowing such juicy statistics is what it takes to understand human sexuality, we would take solace in being ignorant.

I would maintain that human sexuality is a good thing and that we need to be informed about how our bodies function. Indeed, one cannot be ignorant for long about such details. However, sex, like surveys and news reporting, can be used in such ways that are not sensible. In fact, misuse of sex can be rather devastating to an individual or family. Perhaps the "typical" American does have intercourse at age 16 or 17. Does that make it OK? And so what if 30 to 40 percent of married men have extramarital affairs? Are there any negative effects from such affairs? You bet there are. So what's so healthy about knowing some fact which might cause me to justify behavior which could ultimately destroy significant relationships I have with my wife and children?

The University is a great place to think. I encourage you to do so. Beware of polls and surveys which convey insignificant data, question the tactics of news reporting (even within the Collegian) and consider your own sexuality and that of others as something good but potentially dangerous.

Crowd loses

Editor,

I would first like to congratulate the football team on their season opening win. I was proud to be a Wildcat fan until the middle of the fourth quarter when part of the student body decided to celebrate by throwing cups containing ice, pop and liquor onto other fans who were trying to enjoy the game. This action is something I thought people outgrew in grade school.

Second, there was the conduct of the fans tearing down the goal posts. If you can't figure it out, the repair or replacement of the posts is not free, so someone has to pay. Consider this; the cost of the goal posts range from $3,000 to $6,500. Now, if you think about the $15 increase in our fees to the Athletic Department, it would take 200 to 433 people paying fees to compensate for the repair or replacement of the goal posts every time they get torn down. Are you still wondering where our money goes? If so, just think, you may have bought part of a goal post.

So, although the team won the game, the crowd lost the sportsmanship. Fans, let's help make it so that everyone can enjoy the game and be proud to be a Wildcat fan. Good luck to both the football team and the crowd against our next foe, New Mexico State. Let's make it 2-0 for the team and 1-1 for the crowd.

Army chooses K-State to train chaplains for oversea counseling

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

When troops are sent to an area of trouble such as the Persian Gulf in times of crisis, it's easy to get caught up in the events and neglect some of the consequences — families who are separated for a long time.

To address this situation, the Chief of Chaplains Office in the Pentagon developed a program to help military families deal with the changes associated with military life.

"The Army has recognized that they need to support the families of the people that serve," said Stephan Bollman, who heads the K-State program and is director of the KSU Family Center.

Each year, five Army chaplains are selected from around the world to participate in the graduate program that trains them in the areas of marriage and family therapy and family-life education. One of the reasons K-State was selected as the site for the program was its proximity to Fort Riley, Bollman said.

The 14-month program is offered within the College of Human Ecology's human development and family studies department and in conjunction with the Chaplain Family Life Ministry and Training Center at Fort Riley. The program can be compared to earning about 48 credit hours during 14 months, Bollman said.

Bollman, who was instrumental in bringing the program to K-State, said 21 chaplains have graduated since the program was implemented in 1985.

After graduating from the program, the chaplains begin a three-year term as directors of Army family-life centers throughout the world, Bollman said. The centers serve about 800,000 Army personnel and their families.

The program requires study in the areas of family stress, therapy principles, human sexuality and transition to adulthood. Training also includes 10 hours a week at the Family Life Center at Fort Riley, Bollman said.

Chaplain David Roberts, director of the Chaplain Family Life Ministry and Training Center at Fort Riley, said a chaplain comforts and counsels when changes such as a major troop deployment occur.

"We try to make them (the family) aware of certain kinds of problems that emerge both when the spouses are separated and when they reunite," Roberts said. "Just knowing what to expect can help them to adjust."

Roberts said the counseling provided by the program can be beneficial to a separated couple.

More work-study aid available

Money released for students' use

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Students have the opportunity to receive more money from an unused portion of work-study funds from the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

K-State students receiving financial assistance may file an appeal to receive more work-study money, said Christine Crenshaw, associate director of Student Financial Assistance.

Work study is awarded on the assumption that students will work approximately the same number of hours as the year before. In the 1989-90 school year, however, the students receiving work study did not work as many hours as expected, which left allotted funds unspent, she said.

The unused funds totalling about $200,000 were recently made available to disperse.

"We have already awarded about 50 students, and we have enough money left to award about 50 more," she said.

Students interested in receiving work-study money must already be eligible for financial aid which is determined by completing a family financial statement. If students are eligible for aid, they need to file an appeal with the financial assistance office.

"We will not make any changes in a student's aid package unless

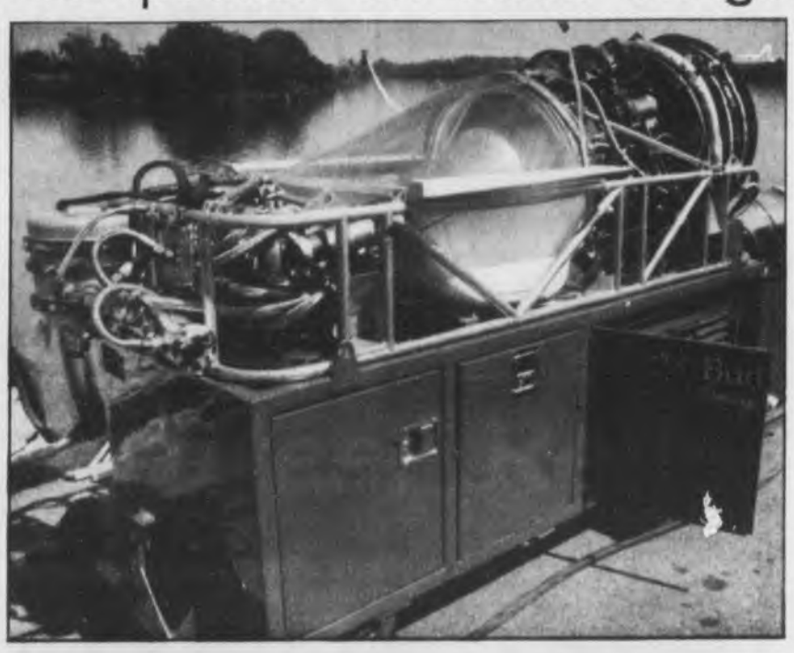
Miss Budweiser dominates Hydrofest



Before the start of each race, a large crane lifted the boat off the trailer and into the water for competition.

Competition on water brings large crowds to Kansas City

Miss Budweiser won the 1st Annual Pringles Family Hydrofest at Longview Lake in Kansas City this weekend. About 60,000 people saw the final race.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The roar of the home crowd is easy to be a part of, but last weekend more than 60,000 people witnessed something not usually seen in this area.

Unlimited hydroplane racing made a stop in Kansas City for the Pringles Family Hydrofest at Longview Lake.

Hydroplane racing boats glided atop the water powered by turbine or Rolls Royce V-12 engines and reached speeds up to 200 mph.

Performing for the spectators at Longview Lake were the drivers of all the top hydroplanes, including Miss Budweiser, Circus Circus, Mr. Pringles, Winston-Eagle and Oh Boy! Oberto.

Miss Budweiser and Circus Circus were the two top contenders and are the current national point leaders, respectively. Miss Budweiser has won four consecutive world championships and Circus Circus sported the 1989 world champion driver in Chip Hanauer.

The field was all set to put on a spectacular show. And that they did. The crowd was left in awe as the boats' jet engines screamed past, spraying water 100 feet in the air behind them.

In the finale Sunday, qualifying heats and a final race pitted the best against the best to see who would claim the $117,000 total purse, Miss Budweiser or Circus Circus.

As the boats skimmed into the second lap, Circus Circus went off the course, leaving Miss Budweiser to cruise through the remaining laps for the gold trophy.

"I knew it was going to be a hell of a boat race when you put those two drivers together," said Bernie Little, owner of Miss Budweiser. "Our work was cut in half for us when Circus Circus went off."

Little, however, was feeling quite confident prior to the race as the owner of the fastest boat in the world. The Miss Budweiser boat is the current holder of the water speed record.

"This is our turbine three boat, which is the fastest boat in the water," Little said. "I was very confident because we had five miles per hour on them. The boat scares the hell out of me, the crew and the driver, but it has the speed."

The victory was a welcome one for Miss Budweiser, which had a previous hot start in the engine and had to drop out of a qualifying heat, allowing Circus Circus to come within 170 points in the national standings. It was the first time the Bud boat did not start, and the problem created about $40,000 damage.

But the faithful Bud crew team was able to replace the engine in about 20 minutes with one of the other eight engines to ready the boat for the final race. John Rheinberger, crew member, said the team replaces an engine after only one heat or race.

"The key to almost any race is the start. I wanted him (Hanauer) to think I would take the outside, but I took the inside," said Tom D'Eath, driver of Miss Budweiser. "We put our bullet in there and I just punched it by him."

Most of the hydroplanes are switching to turbine engines, which run all of the top ranked hydros, over the V-12 engines. Turbine engines will add almost 20 mph to the speed of the boats.

Mark Tate, driver of Oh Boy! Oberto switched to the turbine engine after four races and is now is fifth in the national standings.

Irish new No. 1

By The Associated Press

Brigham Young's upset of top-ranked Miami caused a major shakeup in the Associated Press college football poll on Monday, lifting Notre Dame to No. 1, catapulting BYU to No. 5 and plunging Miami to No. 10.

Notre Dame, which opens its season Saturday against Michigan, received 37 first-place votes and 1,451 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. The Fighting Irish were No. 2 last week.

"It doesn't matter who's ranked No. 1 through the season," Notre Dame linebacker Michael Stonebreaker said. "The only thing that matters is who's ranked No. 1 at the end of the season."

Fakes key to K.C. win

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — When he's through playing football, Christian Okoye might give Hollywood a try.

Nobody in the NFL, says Steve DeBerg, is a better actor.

"Christian's the best faker that I've ever seen," DeBerg said. "Not only is he a great ball carrier, but he convinces the defense that he has the ball even when he doesn't."

The ability to confound Minnesota's highly regarded defense may have had as much to do with Kansas City's 24-21 victory over the Vikings Sunday as Okoye's 92 yards rushing.

With DeBerg and Okoye executing the play-action fake to perfection, Kansas City receivers seemed to be wide open all day. In the 12-play, 78-yard touchdown drive that spelled the difference in the fourth quarter, DeBerg ripped two long-gainers to uncovered receivers.

"It wasn't breakdowns by the defense," said DeBerg. "When we play-action fake, usually a team does get a little out of whack. They're trying to stop Christian with all the guys they can, and all of a sudden I have the ball going the other way. It's a great weapon for our offense to utilize."

Okoye, the 1989 NFL rushing champion, outrushed Minnesota counterpart Herschel Walker, who had 68 yards on 14 carriers. But the Vikings indicated they have figured out how to use the multi-talented Walker when he also caught five passes for 70 yards, including two short touchdown plays.

"I can do a lot of things," Walker said. "I have the talent to play two positions. We spread it out to throw the defense off. It keeps people off guard."

The Vikings will no doubt spend practice time this week on the play-action pass. But Coach Jerry Burns said they had not exactly ignored the concept while preparing for the Chiefs.

"We practiced against that bootleg, but we didn't stop it very well," Burns said.

Triathlon contested

By The Collegian Staff

This past weekend, 156 people braved the heat to put their body to the ultimate test of fitness in the form of the KSU Wildcat Triathlon.

The race consisted of a .3 mile swim, 10.2 mile bike race and a 3.1 mile run held at the River Pond area at Tuttle Creek State Park.

Tracy Anderson emerged as the overall men's champion, covering the course in 49 minutes, 57.42 seconds. The women's victory went to Katie Williams in 59:32.74.

Each participant received a T-shirt for their entry, and every winner in each of the eight age groups captured a plaque. Along with the plaque, the overall men's and women's champions were awarded a Columbia sports jacket.

A's, Red Sox, Pirates, Reds playoff bound

Scott Paske
SPORTS REPORTER

The bandwagons are pulling out of the station. Throw on your A's, Red Sox, Reds or Pirates hat and hop aboard.

As Major League Baseball pennant races enter the final three weeks of the regular season, these four teams have risen to the top of their respective divisions. Should things stay the way they are, it will be a repeat of the 1975 playoffs, which ended with a Cincinnati victory over Boston in a seven-game World Series.

Defending World Series-champion Oakland has the highest view from its perch, leading upstart Chicago by 9½ games in the American League West heading into Monday's action.

The only race that has two teams trading legitimate punches at each other for a title is the National League East, where Pittsburgh was holding off the New York Mets by 3½ games heading into Monday night.

Save Oakland, defending division champs are seeing their hopes of repeating fading day by day. San Francisco's season-long struggle to field a healthy pitching staff has knocked them down, but not completely out. The Giants trail Cincinnati by 7½ games.

Pitching woes, namely that to injured stopper Mitch Williams, have the Chicago Cubs looking to 1991. The games that Don Zimmer's boys were pulling out of the hat last season are blowing up in their faces, as the Cubs are deeply embedded in fourth place in the NL East.

A recent hot streak has kept defending AL East champ Toronto in its race with Boston, but the Blue Jays have fallen flat in head-to-head meetings with the Red Sox, and face a 4½ -game climb.

Meanwhile, the richest keep getting richer.

While the other 25 teams in the majors carried hopes of winning a pennant into this season — and have either watched it blossom or fade — the Athletics have always seemed to know exactly where they stood. For the past two months, their race with the White Sox has been a cat-and-mouse game, with Oakland establishing dominance exactly when it needs to.

And that doesn't necessarily mean on the field.

On Aug. 29, Oakland general manager Sandy Alderson dangled lures in front of Texas and St. Louis and came away with prize catches. The Athletics worked a deal for designated hitter Harold Baines from the Rangers and sent Felix Jose and two minor leaguers to the Cardinals for Willie McGee.

I have a feeling they sent in their order for world championship rings the same day.

The addition of Baines to Tony La Russa's lineup card makes an already deadly hitting team even more deadly. If there was a weakness in Oakland's order, it was the platooning of Terry Steinbach and Ron Hassey in the DH spot. Baines has helped plug that gap already.

With McGee, the Athletics have the possibility of being the first team in Major League history to have two league batting champions on the same team. McGee had a .333 batting average at St. Louis and has enough plate appearances to qualify for the NL title, despite the trade.

And if McGee's batting prowess isn't enough, he is one of the league's fastest baserunners. Opposing pitchers that allow McGee and Oakland speedster Rickey Henderson on the basepaths in the same game may find psychiatric help a necessity.

Mathematically, the other races will probably continue until the final week. The Reds appear to be ready to put the final nails in the NL West coffin, mainly because Los Angeles and San Francisco have exhausted themselves trying to catch up.

Lou Pinella swears his team has won because of pitching and defense, but the offensive punch provided by stars Eric Davis and Barry Larkin has been difficult to overlook.

The Pirates were expected to be a frontrunner in 1989, but a seemingly endless disabled list resulted in a disappointing 74-88 record. There have been several weeks this season when Pittsburgh has been the only team without a player on the DL, and it has shown in the standings. The play of outfielders Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla has kept the threats of New York and Montreal in check so far.

Five remaining head-to-head meetings, including two this week at Shea Stadium, will determine whether the Pirates or Mets are playing after Oct. 3.

The Red Sox have received what critics said they wouldn't have at the beginning of the season — good starting pitching from someone other than Roger Clemens. Despite recent shoulder problems, Clemens has been brilliant all year long, and staff members Greg Harris and Dana Kiecker have come on in the past month to keep the Fenway Park fans from booing throughout entire games.

I've never been one with bold predictions, and I've never been one with accurate predictions, either. But expect a deja vu of 1975, with the other two teams getting their shot in the World Series — Oakland and Pittsburgh. And expect the A's to pop the bubbly after Game Six.

"The Army has recognized that they need to support the families of the people that serve," said Stephan Bollman, who heads the K-State program and is director of the KSU Family Center.

Each year, five Army chaplains are selected from around the world to participate in the graduate program that trains them in the areas of marriage and family therapy and family-life education. One of the reasons K-State was selected as the site for the program was its proximity to Fort Riley, Bollman said.

The 14-month program is offered within the College of Human Ecology's human development and family studies department and in conjunction with the Chaplain Family Life Ministry and Training Center at Fort Riley. The program can be compared to earning about 48 credit hours during 14 months, Bollman said.

Bollman, who was instrumental in bringing the program to K-State, said 21 chaplains have graduated since the program was implemented in 1985.

After graduating from the program, the chaplains begin a three-year term as directors of Army family-life centers throughout the world, Bollman said. The centers serve about 800,000 Army personnel and their families.

The program requires study in the areas of family stress, therapy principles, human sexuality and transition to adulthood. Training also includes 10 hours a week at the Family Life Center at Fort Riley, Bollman said.

Chaplain David Roberts, director of the Chaplain Family Life Ministry and Training Center at Fort Riley, said a chaplain comforts and counsels when changes such as a major troop deployment occur.

"We try to make them (the family) aware of certain kinds of problems that emerge both when the spouses are separated and when they reunite," Roberts said. "Just knowing what to expect can help them to adjust."

Roberts said the counseling provided by the program can be beneficial to a separated couple.

More work-study aid available

Money released for students' use

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Students have the opportunity to receive more money from an unused portion of work-study funds from the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

K-State students receiving financial assistance may file an appeal to receive more work-study money, said Christine Crenshaw, associate director of Student Financial Assistance.

Work study is awarded on the assumption that students will work approximately the same number of hours as the year before. In the 1989-90 school year, however, the students receiving work study did not work as many hours as expected, which left allotted funds unspent, she said.

The unused funds totalling about $200,000 were recently made available to disperse.

"We have already awarded about 50 students, and we have enough money left to award about 50 more," she said.

Students interested in receiving work-study money must already be eligible for financial aid which is determined by completing a family financial statement. If students are eligible for aid, they need to file an appeal with the financial assistance office.

"We will not make any changes in a student's aid package unless

The Birthplace
Why do more mothers choose Memorial Hospital's Birthplace for their child's birthday? For some, it's because The Birthplace staff is skilled, experienced, and understanding. For others, it's because The Birthplace is the only area hospital with the special resources of our Level II Neonatal Intensive Care Nursery. Some mothers choose The Birthplace just because they find our soft shades of blue and mauve so serene and peaceful. Some choose it because they like the way we pamper our new mothers and babies with extra touches like baby's first T-shirt, a roomy diaper bag, and a gift basket of tempting goodies to take home. We also offer a full range of classes, including early prenatal classes, childbirth, sibling classes and prenatal exercise classes, plus home visits and extensive one-on-one teaching. When you're ready to choose your maternity care, you can choose Memorial Hospital's Birthplace with confidence. We know how to celebrate birthdays!

Program helps parents teach children at home

By The Collegian Staff

Teaching new parents how to educate and care for their children is the purpose of a new program offered by Manhattan schools.

Cathy Flinchbaugh, Manhattan coordinator for the Parents as Teachers Program, said parents have many questions regarding the proper way to raise children.

To answer parental questions and assist in support groups, Manhattan Unified School District 383 applied for a grant from the Kansas Legislature to establish a Parents as Teachers Program in Manhattan.

USD 383 and 30 other school districts received grants from the Legislature. These grants will be applied toward the development of the program and must be equally matched by the receiving school district.

Nancy Thompson, director of elementary education at the Robinson Educational Center, said, "The program is designed to improve parental skills from the time of pregnancy, to when the child is 3 years old."

The Parents as Teachers Program is intended to be helpful to young parents, first-time parents and single-parent families.

The program will coordinate with several existing agencies in the community to better serve and meet the needs of its clientele.

The program will be able to assist or refer parents with any problem that might occur. The program will form support groups so other parents with the same age infants will be together to share in their experiences.

There will also be one-on-one counseling with the parents and the parent educator as well as home visits. These meetings will take place once a month, while the support groups can meet whenever needed.

"Our goal for the Parents as Teachers Program is for parents to become more knowledgeable about child-rearing practices and development," Flinchbaugh said.

The program is set to begin in 2-3 weeks and will consist of seven part-time staff members. Flinchbaugh is currently conducting interviews to fill six of the positions.

"There is no right or wrong way to parent, but there are some ways that are better than others," Flinchbaugh said.

"What we want to do at the (program) is to teach parents how to have better parental skills, how to develop their kids with positive self-images and to present them with different alternatives in child-raising techniques," Flinchbaugh said.

Track manager suspended

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Delbert Reed, manager of the Wichita Greyhound Park, was suspended Sunday for allegedly allowing a professional gambler to use the track's fax machine for betting purposes.

State Racing Commission judges at the track ordered the suspension after an emergency hearing. Reed was suspended pending an administrative hearing before the Racing Commission.

He declined comment.

But track president Cal McMillan said there was no evidence against Reed. McMillan admitted some betting information was sent to the gambler at the park on the fax machine. But he said Reed didn't see it.

"We don't have any control over what is faxed into our operation," McMillan said. "Our fax numbers are at the bottom of our stationery, and anybody that wants to fax something into the track can do that."

Dan Hamer, executive director of the Racing Commission, said he wouldn't speculate on possible criminal charges. But he said Reed's alleged actions violate state and federal laws.

The commission is scheduled to meet Friday. But Hamer said he doubted the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's inquiry into the allegations would be completed by then.

Reed is accused of loaning money to a professional gambler who wanted to make a large bet Aug. 31.

The fax contained suggested bets that could have been bets placed by off-track gamblers or simply betting tips, officials said.

A third allegation is that Reed acted improperly in helping the gambler cash a winning Pic-Six ticket for $35,000 the next day.

Magnet school teaches using hands-on approach

Summer program gives students new experiences

By Mary Skinner
Collegian Reporter

Students at Marlatt Elementary School discovered hands-on learning this summer at Manhattan's science, math and technology magnet school.

The magnet school, along with a professional development center, is centered on the idea of making summer school fun for the teachers and students by using hands-on learning techniques instead of books and worksheets.

The school program was also designed to make long-lasting impressions of science, math and technology on the 125 students and the 24 teachers that might not have otherwise happened during the regular school year by allowing them to do different activities.

This summer students had an overnight zoo trip and a visit to a NASA space shuttle display on campus.

"The magnet school was divided into four different themes, with a different one each week," said Donna Erpelding, director of the program.

Themes included the Earth Below, which dealt with insects and their habitat. The World Around Us dealt with reflections and wind. The last two themes included the Sky Above, about aeronautics, and Touching the Future, which focuses on how technology affects our lives and decision-making in the future.

The magnet school is for students in kindergarten through sixth grade, but age groups are divided for specific activities according to grade levels, Erpelding said.

"The activities would get more advanced for the older kids, and every week they would have an open activity or a field trip that would relate to what they were studying," she said.

The original grant of $88,000 came from the Kansas State Department of Education and the school district.

"The grant from KSDE is an enhancement grant. In order to receive it, we had to come up with a program that didn't exist in our district. A fine arts summer magnet school was started the year before, but the science, math and technology school was new," Erpelding said.

The $88,000 grant covered everything from supplies and salaries to the extensive training the teachers underwent at K-State.

The grant included training 24 teachers, 17 of which took a six-hour course last spring from Dr. Gail Shroyer at the Center for Science Education at K-State. The other seven joined the project in May for the actual planning and preparation.

The K-State program was designed to show the teachers how to teach without books but with science-process skills and hands-on and action-based learning.

"I enjoyed it because I was able to go through all four sessions with the same group of kids," said Chris McCammond, a teacher in the program. "The kids were presented with so much material in so many ways that I could enjoy it with them."

The second year of the magnet school is funded by a $20,000 grant from the KSDE and the school district. This year's funding will go towards supplies and salaries for next summer, a K-12 science fair, science clubs at the schools and an outdoor education site around Manhattan to assist with the classroom learning.

The main reason for the grant's renewal came from the evaluation and the fact that the teachers who were trained for the magnet school are going back into the classrooms, said Teresa Northern, coordinator of the program.

"The magnet school was to have a long-lasting effect, and with the kids still talking about it and a 100 percent positive response from parents and the school board, it got us another year of funding," Northern said.

Professor enjoys summer in homeland

Working trip helps to improve class structure

J. Kyle Wyatt/Collegian

Krishna Tummala, director of the Masters in Public Administration program at K-State, teaches a course in the political science department using research gained in India this past summer. Tummala went to India through the Senior Fulbright Fellowship program.

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

Krishna Tummala, director of the Masters in Public Administration program, spent his summer in India lecturing and researching.

Tummala's trip to his homeland was part of the Senior Fulbright Fellowship program. He lectured at Kakatiya University in Warangal, India, on such topics as public budgeting, personnel management and comparative administration. Tummala did research and worked on his book "Public Administration in India."

Tummala's research emphasizes minorities in public administration. He also spent the summer two years ago in India researching.

"India has had the longest experience in terms of 'reservations' in service," Tummala said. "It dates back to 1947."

Reservations are a quota system for minorities in public service. In contrast, the U.S. Affirmitative Action program deals only with goals, Tummala said.

India reserves 22.5 percent of all public administration jobs to scheduled castes and scheduled tribes. Tummala said that tribes are native to India and that the castes are similar to the U.S. class system.

"These (jobs) aren't just at the entry level," Tummala said. "They are also promotional."

This summer, however, India changed some of the ways it deals with minorities.

A study by the Mandal Commission reported that 52 percent of India's population fit into a socially "backward" class, which, according to the report, should consequently have a 27 percent quota in governmental positions.

The study concerned Indian government, Tummala said.

"Now 59.5 percent of the positions would be in quota, and another 10 percent would be reserved for the economically 'backward,'" Tummala said.

> "India has had the longest experience in terms of 'reservations' in service."
> —Krishna Tummala
> director of the Masters
> in Public Administration program

Tummala explained the "forward" class in India is irritated by the percentages because only about 40 percent of the positions are left for open competition. This leaves India as one of the countries with the highest quota system at the federal level.

This high quota for the "backward" class at the federal level is not mentioned in India's constitution, Tummala said.

Similarly, India's Supreme Court has a standing regulation in which only 49 percent of the positions may be reserved for minorities.

Tummala is offering a class — POLSC 791: Topics in Public Administration — that deals with the information he has gained through his research.

"We will draw a comparative picture of countries on the same lines (of public administation)," Tummala said. "We will also deal with the United States civilized movements."

The class is offered on Mondays from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

Tummala feels India's minorities are better off than American minorities because "they are guaranteed a number of positions once they meet the minimum requirements for the job."

they tell us to and we will only reduce loans starting with the least attractive one," Crenshaw said.

Students who are interested need to fill out an appeal form available in the lobby of the financial assistance office as soon as possible, she said.

"I'd recommend work study for two reasons. First, you don't have to borrow as much money, and second, it gives you valuable work experience," said Shirlyn Henry, senior in theater.

There are three main advantages to the work study program, Crenshaw said. First, work study will reduce the amount of loan obligation to the student in the long term.

"This won't matter as much now, but it will matter when the student graduates," she said.

Second, according to studies, students who are employed on campus have a better chance of graduating. These students are more integrated into the entire campus. They have multiple contacts, and if one part of their life isn't going quite right they have other involvements, she said.

Finally, college work study earnings never show up on financial aid statements, which has a direct connection to the amount the student is awarded the next year.

Students earning $3,000 which is non-work study would reduce their financial aid the next year by about $1,700, she said.

"We expect to have all the money awarded within the next ten days," Crenshaw said.

the acute incident and the honeymoon phase.

The tension-building phase may be described as "walking on eggshells." The acute-incident phase is where a "fight" occurs. The honeymoon phase is when the batterer is remorseful, sends flowers and promises it will never happen again.

Barriga said that in long-term relationships the tension phase gets shorter, the acute incident more severe, and the honeymoon phase very short.

"When you present this cycle to a victim, they recognize it immediately," Barriga said. "An abused person learns how to prolong the tension-building phase to avoid getting beaten, or shorten it to get it over with. It takes strong coping skills to live in that situation, and it is very important for victims to realize they have survival skills."

Chase ends in arrest

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A Manhattan man faces various charges after a car chase Monday afternoon ended in an accident, authorities said.

Marx J. Hankinson, 22, was being held without bond in the Shawnee County Jail late Monday, a jail official said.

Hankinson was arrested on Kentucky warrants charging him with theft by deception, a parole violation and escape from custody, the official said. He also was arrested Monday in connection with one felony count each of theft and obstruction of legal process, the official said.

Authorities said Hankinson was driving a truck that had been reported stolen in Manhattan when he crashed about 4 p.m. after an 18-minute chase.

Officers said the 6-foot-3, 230-pound Hankinson struggled with them, broke a pair of leg cuffs and was zapped with a stun gun before they got him under control.

Hankinson refused medical treatment.

Letter to the Editor:

The allegations that Manhattan gasoline prices rise when the KSU students return is simply not true. Our records show that this year's price increase, at enrollment time, is the first in 5 years. They also show we have typically decreased the price at the beginning of the 2nd semester. The records further indicate that the 1st price change after the end of the school year generally has been an increase.

The chart below indicates competition for the students business does influence gasoline prices. Gasoline retailers do not sell gasoline only and they want to sell their other merchandise to the students.

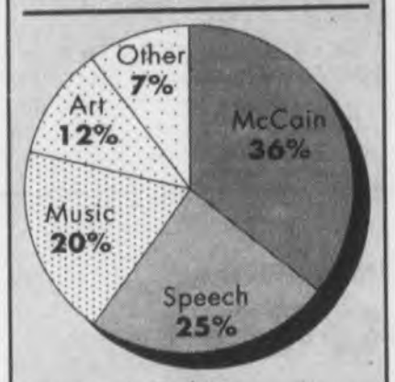
States Jazz Festival and soloists for the wind ensemble.

KSU Band Director Stan Finck said he will be able to purchase music this year because the budgets for the concert bands and jazz ensembles have doubled.

"Last year I didn't purchase any music for the concert band," Finck said.

The high quality of fine arts around the university will best serve those students who take advantage of the new services, Finck said.



"It's definitely a blessing," said John Uthoff, scene shop manager for the theater department. "We haven't had a budget increase since prior to 1976. These new fees got us up to '76 in terms of purchasing power. We're definitely very thankful."

Uthoff said it will be much easier to prepare for productions and maintain the production schedule.

The new fees will allow the dance department to make costumes and hire a pianist for dance rehearsals, which has never been done before.

"The new fee has allowed us to avoid having students use their own costumes in productions," said Harold Nichols, head of the theater department.

The department is planning larger productions for next year so students will be given more opportunities for roles.

"They are lighter weight and produce more horsepower. When you accelerate, there is always power, and the V-12 sometimes has a big lag," Tate said. "They initially cost more, but in the long run they are a lot cheaper to operate and maintain."

Tate also tried to describe the feeling of gliding across the top of the water with the boat able to flip at any time.

"It is almost impossible to describe because you are concentrating on so many other things around you," Tate said. "But it is by far not a joy ride. When the water is calm, the ride is pretty smooth, but when it gets rough you can feel the boat start to jump around."

The next stop on the circuit will be on Mission Bay in San Diego for the Budweiser Thunderboat Race on Sept. 16.

Faculty Senate accepts idea

Wefald says need for reorganizatior intensified because of budget cuts

SHAPING THE FUTURE

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

University reorganization crossed the first hurdle of approval Tuesday as Faculty Senate voted to approve a resolution endorsing the development of a draft plan.

The vote came after President Jon Wefald outlined the need for reorganization during his State of the University address Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

The Senate resolution supports the process of drafting a reorganization plan. It did not give actual approval of the final reorganization, said James Koelliker, past president of Faculty Senate.

Senators attached an amendment to the resolution to ensure appropiate faculty input and discussion is solicited concerning the final proposal.

"I want this University to take more responsibility for its own future," Wefald said. "Taking control of our own future is what strategic planning is all about at Kansas State University."

The University began fiscal year 1991 with about $5 million less than administrators anticipated at this time last year because of cuts in enrollment adjustment funds and across-the-board budget cuts made by the Legislature.

These unexpected cuts have increased the immediate need for reorganization, Wefald said.

"As a University, we are funded far below the level of our peers, not because of the action of one legislative session," Wefald said. "Our funding problem results from years of inadequate state support."

After Wefald's address, Provost James Coffman presented a timeline that calls for administrators and faculty leaders to present a reorganization draft to the public by Nov. 1. The proposed draft will outline cuts in specific departments and mergers and restructuring of weak programs.

Coffman said the University starts annually with a $30 million deficit in comparison to peer institutions. For this reason, various academic and support departments are not funded at a level adequate to sustain credibility.

He said with the current fiscal condition of the state, the University can't depend on needed funds to be allocated by the Legislature.

Coffman said the state budget is under-funded by $145 million for fiscal year 1991. A substantial budget cut, tax increase or a combination of the two will have to occur to balance the budget. In coming years, most budget increases will be lost due to inflation.

"I must reiterate what I have said repeatedly for the past year: in terms of purchasing power, the current budget contains all of the real-dollar-resources we are likely to have in the forseeable future," Coffman said.

Funds freed up in the reorganization process would be reallocated to increase faculty salaries, upgrade academic equipment and resources, strengthen the College of Arts and Sciences and support strategic planning initiatives.

In the process of strengthening targeted programs, other University programs and faculty positions may be consolidated or eliminated.

"I've spent a lot of time thinking about this idea or that idea and how we might better our position with respect to talents, resources and commitments," Coffman said. "I've spent some time in the budget book assessing the impact of this idea or that idea. No one has taken the next step to sit down and systematically bring ideas together into a plan. That is the purpose for the present undertaking."

The drafting process will undergo three stages. The first draft will be put together by administrators, college deans and Faculty Senate leaders by early October. A second draft will be presented informally to Board of Regents officials in the middle of October to ensure the retention of internally freed funds. The third draft will be presented to the public. The draft would then be submitted for approval by Faculty Senate committees, the Council of Deans, the Strategic Planning Committee and students.

"This process involves deans and faculty initially and throughout and ensures faculty leadership oversight of process." Coffman said. "It involves each dean one-on-one so as to get his or her analysis as well as point of view. It allows for the development of a comprehensive proposal rather than a collection of piecemeal possibilities."

Debate in Faculty Senate on the resolution to endorse the preparation of a reorganization plan focused on the issue of faculty participation.

The debate started when Tahlat Rahman, arts and sciences senator, proposed an amendment to the endorsement resolution calling for the submission of the final draft plan to the entire faculty.

Coffman said that submitting the plan to the entire faculty could prove unwieldy.

In response to a question, Coffman said he expected Faculty Senate committees participating in the drafting of the proposal would report to the entire Senate. He said that some changes may not require the Senate's approval.

Topeka police question suspects in murder of Manhattan woman

Wamego students cope with death

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Police have begun questioning possible suspects in the murder of a Manhattan woman whose body was found in Topeka Sunday morning.

Lt. Bud Brooks, director of community service for the Topeka Police Department, said the body of Sherryl L. Crowder, 39, was found in the trunk of her car at 22nd Street and Western Avenue about 8:30 a.m.

Police were called to the scene by residents in the area who reported a suspicious car parked in the neighborhood for an extended period of time.

Brooks said Crowder was apparently beaten to death. Police are also looking into the possibility of sexual assault because Crowder's body was found partially nude.

A coroner's report determining the actual cause of death will be released soon.

Brooks said Crowder was last seen leaving Sneakers, a Topeka nightclub, by herself about 11 p.m. Friday.

No suspects have been arrested. However, Brooks said investigators are questioning Crowder's exhusband, relatives and friends.

"Everyone is a suspect until we eliminate the possibility," Brooks said. "We're trying to come to some conclusions."

Crowder was a sixth grade teacher at West Elementary School in Wamego. Superintendent Norris Wika said despite a feeling of tremendous loss, students and faculty alike are coping fine under the circumstances.

"I have many times referred to the atmosphere in our schools as being that of a family," he said. "She has been a teacher here since August of 1982, and her loss is the loss of a family member."

Wika said four counselors have been available to visit with students over the last two days to help them deal with their thoughts and emotions.

Most faculty members in the Wamego school district received word of Crowder's death late Sunday evening, Wika said.

"We had word of it on Sunday afternoon, which was not long after the law enforcement authorities had been notified," he said. We were not at liberty to say anything until about 7 p.m. that night."

Wika said the district is waiting for notification about Crowder's funeral services.

The nightclub Crowder attended Friday night is located in an area known as College Hill, which is often frequented by students attending Washburn University.

Brooks said he considers the area to be safe and could not recall any criminal incidents taking place there on a regular basis.

Bush vows Hussein will fail

President cites international unity in address to Congress

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, reporting to Congress and the nation on the Persian Gulf crisis, vowed Tuesday night that "Saddam Hussein will fail" in his conquest of Kuwait. He said the Iraqi dictator could not persevere in the face of "a new partnership of nations."

Bush also acknowledged the U.S. military could be deployed in the Saudi Arabian desert indefinitely.

"I cannot predict just how long it will take to convince Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait," Bush said in a nationally broadcast address before a joint session of Congress.

He said U.N.-approved sanctions would take time to squeeze Iraq and that the United States would continue reviewing options with allies. "But let it be clear: we will not let this aggression stand," Bush said.

Fresh from his summit with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, Bush said a new partnership of nations stands aligned against Iraq's aggression and that the superpowers are working together on this crisis.

"Clearly, no longer can a dictator count on East-West confrontation to stymie concerted U.N. action against aggression," the president said.

"The crisis in the Persian Gulf, as grave as it is, also offers a rare opportunity to move toward an historic period of cooperation," Bush said.

Bush said a new world order may emerge from the crisis in which the world is "freer from the threat of terror, stronger in the pursuit of justice and more secure in the quest for peace — an era in which the nations of the world, East and West, North and South, can prosper and live in harmony."

Bush offered no new initiatives to resolve the gulf crisis, and repeated many of his past declarations condemning Hussein.

But the point of the speech was to bring Americans up to date on the crisis and call for them to stand united as the stalemate lingers on.

"If ever there was a time to put country before self and patriotism before party, that time is now," Bush said.

Ivins delivers lecture

Columnist says politics con game

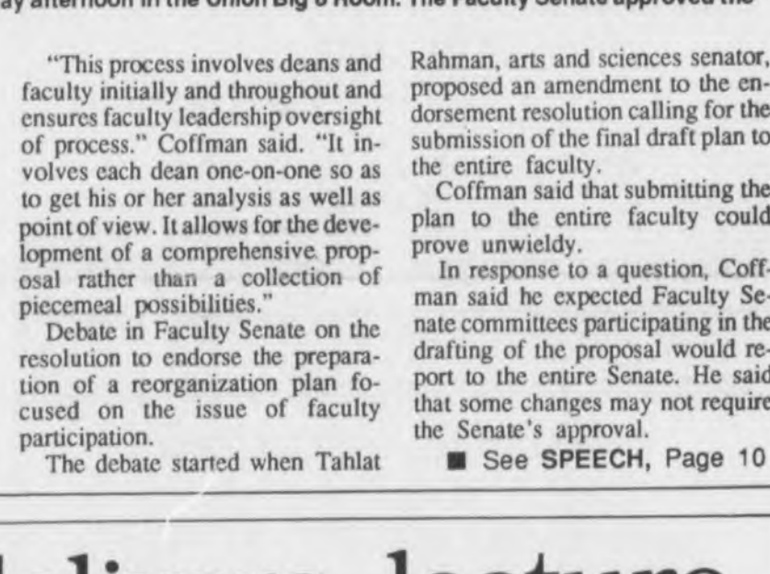
LOU DOUGLAS LECTURE
Molly Ivins: "The Media, Politics and Other Forms of Insanity."

By Cindy Jeffrey
Collegian Reporter

The current state of politics and the media in America was the topic of the first Lou Douglas Lecture given by Molly Ivins, a columnist for the Dallas Times Herald.

"She (Ivins) gives you something to think about, but with such humor — a lot of people try, but she does it effectively," said Marjorie Morse, retired county commissioner.

Ivins said the tragedy in America is the collapse of the idea of the citizen because the connection between the government and the people has broken down.



"It's a garrison state, controlled by military spending, forever at war and easily controlled by the few," Ivins said.

Politics is a con game, she said. Ivins used the National Endowment for the Arts and the Savings and Loan bailout as an example.

She said Jesse Helms has caused an uproar over dirty art and the NEA is under attack. Ivins said that only 63 cents per person a year goes toward NEA and only 2 percent of what the NEA funds is controversial. By contrast each U.S. citizen will pay $5,000 to bail out the Savings and Loan institutions. Helms voted for deregulation of the S&L's.

"The best possible training for politics is motherhood," Ivins said. "All good mothers know what to do when you have two kids and one cookie, and both kids say the other one hit first."

All political problems are variations of two kids/one cookie and who hit who first, she said.

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

Molly Ivins, a columnist for the Dallas Times Herald, speaks at the first Lou Douglas Lecture of the fall semester in Union Forum Hall Tuesday night. Ivins spoke about the relationship between the media and politics.

Ivins suggested three steps which would begin to change the current political situation.

The first proposed change would be to alter the means and methods by which campaigns are financed. Secondly, no candidate should be allowed to buy space or time in the media. Finally, there should be a campaign time limit of six weeks with a daily debate on television and nothing more.

"The editors, networks and advertisers would never stand for that," said Carol Fitzgerald, an area author. "They would lose too much money."

Ivins said the press has missed such stories as Iran-Contra, S&L, HUD and homelessness in the past 10 years.

"Homelessness is one of those rare issues that's not complex, cut $15 billion out of low-income housing — results — homelessness," she said.

Ivins recommended a more partisan press to tell all people's stories and not just those who seek the media.

Boat capsizes in Mahava River

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A boat carrying about 175 people capsized Tuesday in the Mahava river in northern India, killing at least 60 of the passengers, Press Trust of India reported.

Another 9[illegible]ple were missing and presumed drowned after the accident near Sehatwar village, 125 miles southeast of New Delhi in Uttar Pradesh state, PTI said. It was not immediately known where the boat was traveling.

PTI said the boat was overloaded, but did not say what its capacity was.

Transport unions walk out

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Thousands of stranded Athenians tried to hitch rides Tuesday as public transport unions staged a six-hour walkout to protest the government's cost-cutting policies.

It was part of a wave of strikes this week protesting a government austerity plan aimed at overhauling state-run health and pension plans. The governing conservatives want to reduce the number of social insurance funds in operation, increase contributions by individuals, tighten eligibility requirements and raise the pension age.

The national trade union federation has called a general strike for Thursday amid separate walkouts by teachers and power, construction, telecommunications and post office workers.

The general strike will be the fifth this year.

Some environmentalist groups have criticized the ban, saying it will backfire by attracting more motorists with the prospect of less congested streets.

Police enforce parking rules

PARIS (AP) — A ban on parking along 17 miles of major Paris streets went into effect Tuesday, part of a campaign to ease severe traffic congestion.

The restrictions prohibit parking at any time along a series of designated "red roads" that form the major east-west and north-south routes. A special force of 120 police and traffic officers was assigned to enforce the new rules.

On Tuesday, they limited themselves to verbal warnings, but starting Thursday will tow away the cars of offending motorists. Violators face fines of $85.

The affected routes include some of Paris' best-known streets, such as the Rue du Rivoli and the Boulevard Saint Michel. Even delivery trucks are barred from stopping in some areas.

Judge drops NRA challenge

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — In a case closely watched by both gun-control advocates and opponents, a federal judge dismissed a challenge by the National Rifle Association on California's ban on automatic weapons.

U.S. District Judge Edward Dean Price said Monday that the Second Amendment, which gives citizens the right to bear arms, does not apply to laws passed by state governments, as the NRA contended in their case.

Prison board halts dog fights

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The practice of inmates wrestling and fighting with tracking dogs at the end of training exercises was temporarily halted Tuesday by the state prison board.

Members of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice unanimously approved the recommendations of a board subcommittee that the contact practice be suspended until inmates have more protective gear and policies are in place to ensure that only volunteers are used for the exercise.

Inmates still would be used in other aspects of dog training.

Until now, an inmate would be given a head start and go into hiding or climb a tree, and then, when the inmate was located by the dog, he would briefly fight with the animal.

Several prison board members said there was no evidence that the dog training exercises had been conducted improperly.

Pope Michael's fame growing

BELVUE (AP) — The man who calls himself Pope Michael I hasn't attracted enough followers to hold church services yet, but word is starting to get out about his election last July, his mother says.

David Bawden, 30, is answering telephone calls, granting personal interviews and mailing written sermons from his small office in this community of about 200 between Topeka and Manhattan.

"Things are reasonably quiet at this time," said Clara Bawden. "We're getting some mail — about 50-50 for and against our actions. The word is getting out about the election and we don't expect anything soon. It's like starting from square one."

Bawden was one of the five followers who voted last summer to elect her son as pope of what they call the "world-wide Catholic Church."

Art of storytelling marks play

Held-over production uses changing roles in portraying radio's magic

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Turn off that TV. You still have an opportunity to see "The Voice of the Prairie," the only one of the three Summer Repertory shows to be held over to open the 1990-1991 season of the K-State Players. The final performances for this show will be at 8 p.m. tonight through Friday in Nichols Theatre.

"The Voice of the Prairie" is a completely entertaining and thought-provoking romance which deals directly with the complex relationships of real people. Using the ancient art of storytelling, the cast succeeds remarkably well at entertaining an audience reared on television.

The play tells one big story by telling many smaller stories, spanning a time period from the post-Civil War era to the Roaring '20s.

Three performers bring to life more than six different characters in John Olive's story of the magic of radio. The multiple characters portrayed by the players add to the storytelling feeling because more of what we need to understand is left up to our imagination. We must believe that the same actor is now a new character even though only a coat or an apron has changed them.

Kevin Kelly, sophomore in theater, plays both David Quinn and Poppy, David's father. First, he masters an Irish brogue for a character at least thirty years his senior. Later, he plays his own son, an eccentric storyteller from Nebraska.

James Smith, senior in theater, plays David Quinn as a child and Leon Schwab, the New York businessman and radio pioneer. His New York accent and mannerisms create a very strong and entertaining Schwab character. Smith also plays an asthmatic Methodist minister — for which he acquires an impressively realistic Jim Bakker dialect.

Ayne Steinkuehler, junior in theater, plays Frankie, the blind girl; Francis, the adult; and all of the other various women in the play. The incredible energy and joie de vivre with which Frankie is characterized is easily seen in Ayne's larger-than-life smile. Steinkuehler shows us clearly the youthfulness and the love of life Frankie possesses.

She also shows the pain of Frankie's blindness, which stems from the inconsideration of others. Frankie provides most of the insight of the play, using her blindness to really understand, like Gloucester in King Lear.

The cast is more than equal to the challenge of playing multiple characters in the production. Perhaps the difficulty in playing more than one part was overcome by the definitive accents and mannerisms given to each character.

Don't miss your last opportunity to see storytelling recreated in "The Voice of the Prairie." Your television won't miss you, and your imagination will thank you heartily.

Exhibits promote outdoor activities

UPC sponsors Awareness Day

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

Outdoor Awareness Day, sponsored by the Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee, will take place from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in the Union Plaza area north of the K-State Union.

The purpose of Outdoor Awareness Day is to make students aware of outdoor activities and opportunities available on campus and in the community, said Jennifer Tuvell, Outdoor Recreation Committee chairwoman and junior in civil engineering.

"I think that there are a lot of outdoor activities that people aren't aware of," Tuvell said.

According to Tuvell, there are many outdoor activities that people can get involved in without prior experience.

Various businesses and organizations will be displaying information and equipment relating to the great outdoors. There will also be nature exhibits and information on the preservation of nature.

Campus organizations that are participating include the Outdoor Recreation Committee, the UPC Travel Committee, Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment and K-State Recreation Services.

Activities on land and at sea will be represented — the K-State Police will feature a bike safety display and the K-State Sailing Club exhibit will have a 16-foot boat.

Other businesses participating include Aggie Bike Station, The Pathfinder, Wildlife and Parks Association, Kansas Canoeing Association and Sunset Zoological Park.

Erma Riley, owner of The Pathfinder, said her camping supply store is celebrating their 15th anniversary this month. The booth will include several different kinds of brochures describing examples of things to do in the great outdoors.

"We like to support the activities that Outdoor Awareness exemplifies," Riley said.

Qutdoor Awareness Day promotes stress-reducing, healthy lifestyles, and The Pathfinder likes to support people who are doing those things, Riley said.

Riley said Outdoor Awareness Day helps people think about things they may not normally be aware of and try something they've never tried before.

The Outdoor Recreation Committee wil also have information on UPC trips and activities scheduled for the fall semester.

Pianist will capture summer's heat

By Stacy Lentz
Collegian Reviewer

Manhattan's hot spell will get even hotter Thursday when solo pianist George Winston performs his "Summer Show" at 7:30 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

In concert, Winston alternates between two shows, which he calls the "Summer Show" and the "Winter Show." Each show is centered around the melodic seasonal songs from his records and unrecorded seasonal pieces.

The music Winston is currently working on is about three-fifths hot music — including rhythm and blues, blues, rock'n'roll standards and two-fifths melodic music. The melodic music comprises most of his recorded output. Winston records albums with specific themes in a style that could be described as rural folk piano.

Winston has released three solo piano albums since 1980: "Autumn," in 1980, "Winter Into Spring" and "December," both of which were recorded in 1982. More recently he has played on the soundtracks for "The Velveteen Rabbit" and the "Peanuts" television special "This is America, Charlie Brown — The Birth of the Constitution." He is also doing the solo guitar soundtrack for the upcoming animated feature "Sadako and The Thousand Paper Cranes."

Though currently concentrating on his live performances, Winston is pursuing other projects. Other solo piano albums are in the planning stage, with the included themes of the spring/summer season, the enchanted forest, sock hop, and an album of Vince Guaraldi compositions. He is also recording some of the musicians who have inspired him for many years on his own Dancing Cat Records label.

Winston, who grew up listening to Sam Cooke, Ray Charles and many other R&B artists, started playing the organ and the electric piano in 1967.

Winston switched to the piano in 1971 after hearing records of the

Lecturers: Water crisis continues to mount

CONVOCATION
PRE-LECTURE FORUM
World Water Crisis: Fact or Fiction?

By Paul Noel
Staff Reporter

The world-wide water problem is becoming an ecological disaster, said Duane Nellis, head of the geography department, and limits to the overuse of water are starting to come to light.

Nellis was one of the four speakers at a pre-convocation lecture Tuesday. The topic was the world water crisis.

"Exhausted rivers, falling water tables and shrinking lakes testify the extensive human abuse of the world's water resources," Nellis said.

A number of the world's scientists consider the available amount of fresh water, not the oil issue, as one of the most serious problems in many countries — including in the United States, he said.

"In the summer of 1988 alone, about 43 percent of the continental United States experienced severe drought comparable to those created during the Dust Bowl era in the 1930s," Nellis said. "The grain harvest in 1988 dropped by 31 percent and crop losses amounted to about $15 billion. It was one of the most costly natural disasters in U.S. history."

Nellis said China faces the worst crisis with one-third of its water wells dry in the northern region, and another third of its ground water is half the normal level. Geographers predict that Beijing's demand for water will increase 50 percent by the year 2000.

James Koelliker, professor of civil engineering, said about 99 percent of Kansas' water comes from precipitation, the other 1 percent comes from stream flow such as Tuttle Creek, which flows from Nebraska.

"The water supply in Kansas is not changing, there are variations from year to year, and we must make a more efficient use of that finite amount," Koelliker said.

John Keller, professor of regional and community planning, said Kansas is now ready to implement legislation to transport mass quantities of water for beneficial use to locations in a 10-mile radius from the initial site of the water supply.

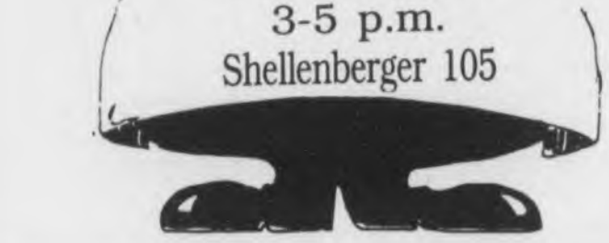
"There are three key factors in water transportation," Keller said, "beneficial use, a documented need and harm mitigation."

The burden to show the three factors is upon the applicant and increases with the magnitude of the request, he said.

A highly discussed system of water transport is that of a pipeline from Milford Lake to Wichita. Keller said it must be proven that there would be no harm to Milford's ecological system before it could be built.

Paul Schwab, associate professor of agronomy, said the most important aspect is not whether there are chemicals in the water, but the health risk of those chemicals. Now the Environmental Protection Agency has lowered its standard from 150-parts-to three-parts-per billion, much of the water supply is now no longer considered safe.

There are two means of water contamination, he said, which are due to point and non-point sources. Point source is direct means of contamination, usually caused by the discharge of chemicals directly into streams.



Non-point source is from diffused sources that are hard to identify. Herbicides are the main cause of non-point sources, he said.

"Many chemicals have the potential to be banned even though they will not harm the water," Schwab said. "Farmers are using chemicals in an intelligent manner, but chemicals still have a tendency to get into the water supply."

The Ballad of Saddam Hussein (Sung to the theme of The Beverly Hillbillies)

"Come and listen to my story/ 'bout Saddam Hussein/ A petty despot/ really made himself a pain ... It seems one day/ he was huntin' for some crude/ So he annexed Kuwait / which is really rather rude ... Anchluss that is/ Illegal/ NOT PRUDENT! Well, the first thing you know/ George Bush is on the air/ Says, 'Saddam, you nut /get your soldiers outta there' ... He said, 'Better haul it/or you'll find yourself dead/ And they'll pick up your coffin/ and drop ya on yer head!' Khomeini-style, that is/ Bomb ya back to Babylon ... "

— Jerry Brown and Mike Ritter
Scottsdale (Ariz.) Daily Progress

I found this little song in the Sept. 2 Manhattan Mercury. It was fixed in a small corner of the editorial page under the heading "The Light Side." I will leave my judgments for later and allow you to come to terms with your first reactions to such light humor

I had the opportunity to spend Aug. 23 and 24 within the United Nations Building, attending a colloquium celebrating the life and philosophy of Albert Schweitzer. Right above our conference room, the Security Council was meeting, and with their presence above and the mounting tension in the Middle East, the Iraq crisis became the dominate topic of discourse.

President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica began the colloquium with a call for "individuals to push and prod their government into peace." He was speaking in terms of the Iraq crisis; he was speaking to the Bush administration and the American citizens.

In order for the individuals of this country to work for peace, to be aware of the need for redirecting their government, they must know the facts, the truth. They must develop a critical lens. Such a lens would provide accurate viewing of the decisions, actions and rhetoric of our country's leaders.

The song quoted above does not provide us an accurate viewing of Hussein, of the Middle East, or of American foreign policy, but is in fact an example of the distortions we receive through mass media. The United States policy concerning Iraq crisis needs to be analyzed through a critical lens.

The Bush administration is handling this crisis as if our military intervention will resurrect justice, when really the Bush regime is hoping to resurrect economic dominance in the Middle East.

This crisis provides Bush with fitting example of the need to maintain military strength and resources. Without the Cold War and the demonization of the Soviet Union, the administration's habits compel them to create another enemy, another demonic state and ruler, and another rationalization for military expenditure.

Massive military expenditure is back in style. The Bush administration is spending $15 million a day to support troops in Saudia Arabia. The peace dividend is doomed. The Middle East crisis has allowed the Bush administration to redirect priorities away from health care, education, the homeless, alternative energy resources, and the whittling away of the national debt. These issues will affect the lives of Americans much more severely than an increase in the price of gas.

These misdirected policies may create a depressed economy — a depressed nation — that will override this temporary American nationalism and dominance.

The Bush administration, aware that the American people respond to threats made to their lifestyle, claimed that Hussein's actions posed a threat to our way of life. American citizens are supposedly fueled by a passionate regard for freedoms, but this only occurs to a certain extent. If Americans are so concerned with the freedom for self-determination, then why did the United States intervene, and why is it that the American people are rallying behind President Bush's intervention? Americans obviously hold their economic freedom for cheap oil as a priority.

American policy shapes the conscience of the American population. The double standard emerges again. A woman filling up her tank next to me mumbled bitterly: "If the price of gas goes up to $2 a gallon, I say we nuke them." Such is an example of short-sighted concerns for our standard of living, for our safety. Ironically, "nuking" a country would reverberate globally.

Each country is not protected by a white-picket fence, isolated and disconnected, but instead, we are a globe of interconnected circles. Either our government is not aware of this or they refuse to educate their citizens to be citizens of the world and of America. It is not as simple as "us against them." The easy answer would not be the devastation of Iraq, because eventually this choice would haunt us.

The picture is complex. There is no hero, for neither Iraq nor the United States are operating from an ethical, compassionate and global perspective. Viewing this crisis from a critical lens, it is imperative to push and prod the government into peace; we must resurrect the consciences of our leaders and of ourselves.

Crisis shows Americans addicted to fossil fuels

The Middle East crisis has one clear-cut fact amongst all the classified strategies and political rhetoric.

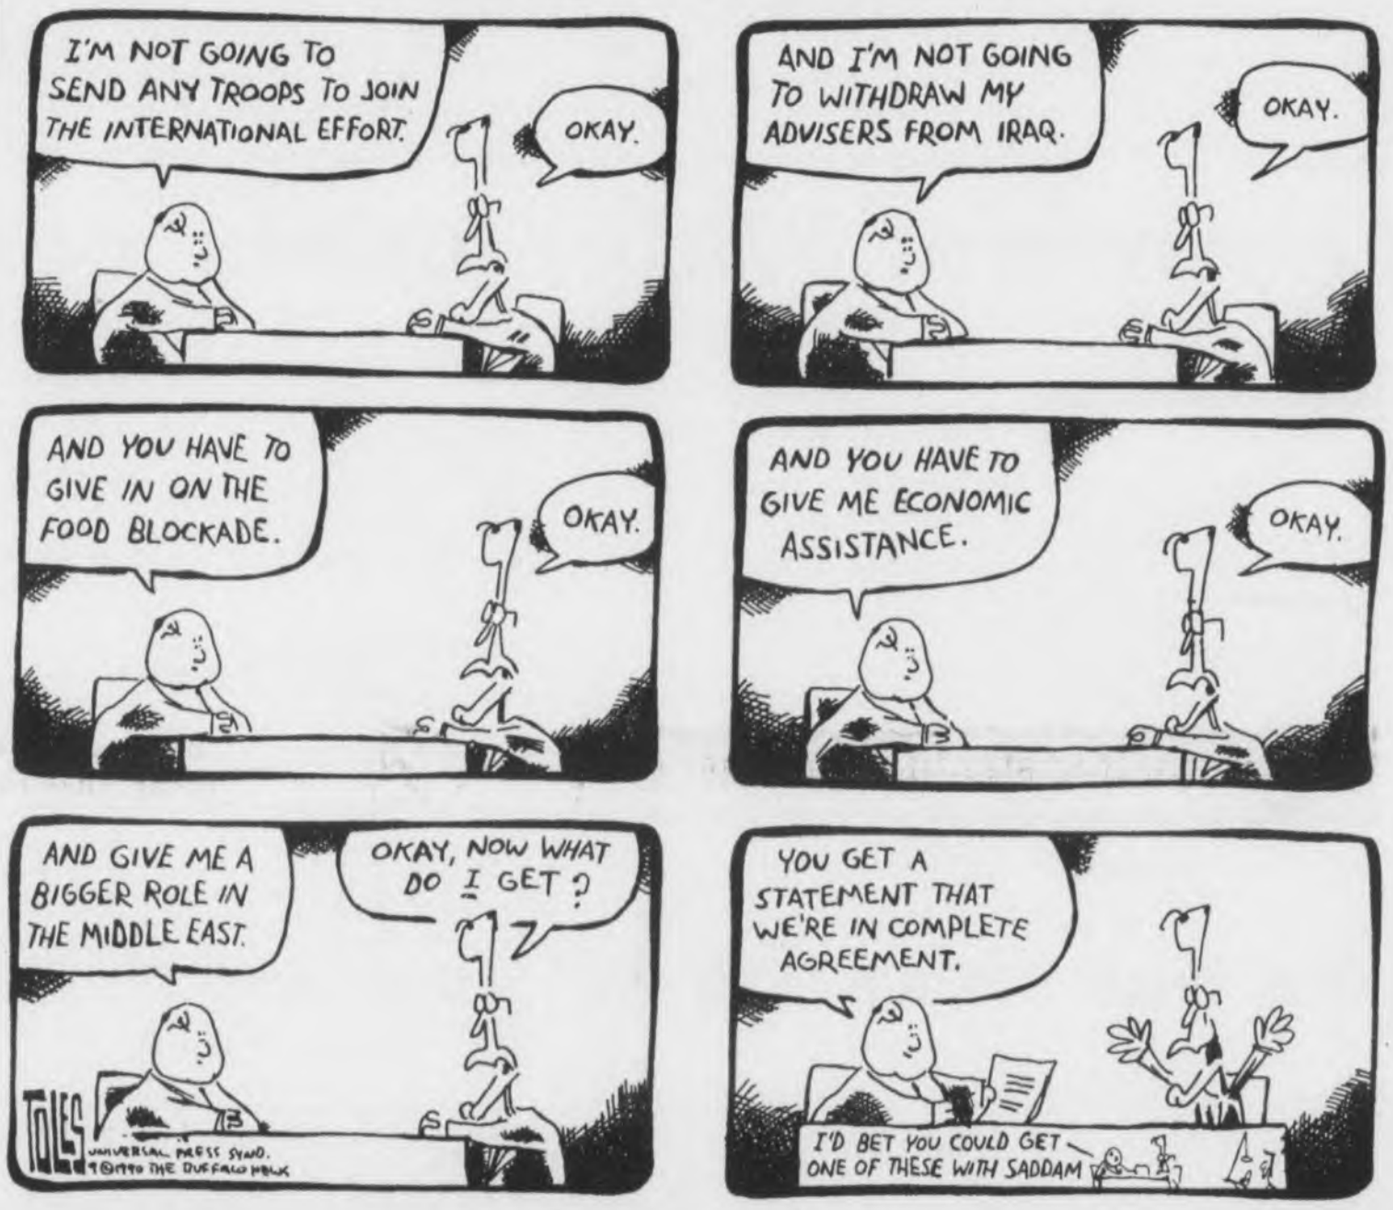
America is hooked.

The United States is once again realizing that its drug-like dependence on the Arabian oil in the Persian Gulf is an American vunerability. And just like any addict being slowly cut off from their supply, we have lashed out blindly in rage.

Former President Jimmy Carter had the country on its way to a wonderful cold-turkey wagon ride in the mid 1970s. During the oil embargo, Carter had American scientists hard at work searching for alternative forms of energy. The scientific community even hinted that headway was being made.

That research and brainstorming ended abruptly as Reagan drubbed Carter in the 1980 presidential election.

With Reagan, the country reverted back to its oil-addiction as quickly as some reformed alcoholics can find a corner tavern.



Perhaps the mounds of money being pumped into the Persian Gulf to fund our military defense efforts ought to remain at home in American laboratories backing the search for new energy sources.

South Africa already uses a coal converted gasoline as one of its sources of energy. India also has made strides in alternative energy research, by harnessing power from the anaerobic bacterial action of methane gas.

The technology apparently is available, only the funds are lacking. The problem seems to be political-based rather than technology-based.

Hydroelectricity, solar energy, biomass conversion and nuclear energy all remain untapped resources with unmeasured capacity.

Perhaps the secrets at the middle of an atom can rescue America from further crises in the Middle East.

Freedom has limits

Editor,

I could not help but find Pat Klein's letter concerning American freedom a clear indication of the type of freedom really desired.

Yes, a black man prevented from country club membership on the basis of his race is certainly wrong, but beyond this, Klein and I diverge completely. I will discuss three of Klein's "freedom violations" upon which we disagree.

"A black rap group," I assume, refers to 2 Live Crew. Lyrics from the album in question were not merely too sexual, they were immoral. Recommending tearing or damaging a woman's vagina is not artistic expression, it is simply disgusting, vulgar and wrong.

Concerning abortion, I could not help but recognize Klein's attempt to avoid the real issue at stake. If individual rights are really at stake (the right to privacy in this case), then I wonder why I should not be allowed to murder people in the privacy of my own home. After all, it is my home — I own it. If the Constitution guarantees the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness, then who can tell me I'm wrong to murder people in my own home if it makes me happy? Oh yes, Klein, I have forgotten the other person's right to life, also guaranteed by the Constitution. But what of the baby who is killed during an abortion? The fetus is a human being, protected by its own right to life.

Let's be honest. The issue isn't really about coat hangers in back alleys. The issue is really this: Does the right to privacy override the right to life and give a license to kill an unborn child? Like it or not, this is the real choice we must make.

In reference to flag burning, such behavior is not simply burning "a piece of cloth that resembles an American flag." The flag is more than just a piece of cloth. It is a symbol of independence, order, ownership and loyalty. When I burn a piece of cloth, I only start a fire, but when I burn a flag, I express contempt for the country that waves it. Such contempt is nothing less than open rebellion. If this is your desire, then the owner of the flag retains the right to protect the symbol of its sovereignty. If you do not like that, Klein, then perhaps you should find your way to Eastern Europe. You can get a passport at the post office, but I would not play with matches there either. New nationalism seldom shows patience toward disloyal flag burners.

If freedom really means doing anything at all, then you are right, Klein, America isn't free. On the other hand, if freedom means being free to do what is right and being prohibited from and punished for doing what is wrong, then true freedom requires certain boundaries — boundaries between right and wrong. I still believe there are such things as "rights" and "wrongs."

Smokers lose rights

Editor,

This letter is being written in response to a case of blatant discrimination going on in the K-State Union. This is just as discriminatory as the buses in the south during the 1960s, when the blacks were told that they must ride in the back. It brings to reminiscence shades of brown boots and the Gestapo. This is something that I spent 20 years of my life in the Army defending our country against.

No, I am not speaking of whites versus blacks, or men against women, I am referring to the universal discrimination we are protected against by the Constitution of the United States. There are penned the words, "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

I am referring to the removal of the second floor smoking area of the Union. Smokers and non-smokers alike gathered there in discussion and camaraderie, solitary study or lively debate. This area is now being used not for student gathering, but for the retail sales of posters.

Many of the students that use this area do so because there is no reserved area in the main dining room for smoking, a demonstration of still further discriminatory actions. I am, as well as others in this group of ostracized tuition-and-fee-paying students, a disabled veteran. Climbing stairs, for me, is very painful at times. Many other students have other physical disabilities that can cause discomfort when climbing stairs. We are being told we must do this if we are to use the dining facility for coffee, breakfast or lunch. It would be much easier for us to have an area in the dining facility. But I believe that we, collectively, would be satisfied with merely being permitted to have the area we were using previously.

Cat Jam a success

Editor,

On behalf of the entire KSDB-FM staff, we would like to thank everyone who made Cat Jam '90 a success this past Saturday.

We especially want to thank the Aggieville Merchants Association for allowing us to use Triangle Park on such short notice. Thanks also go out to The Spot, Subway, Ballard's and the KSU Department of Intercollegiate Athletics for their generous contributions to this event. Congratulations to the K-State Football team for helping to make Cat Jam '90 truly a "pre-victory" celebration.

We also owe our gratitude to the bands who gave their time to this event and endured a warm, humid afternoon: Roach Factory, Mantis and the Barnburners.

Our biggest thanks go to all the people who stopped by. Keep on supporting live music in Manhattan.

Career Day allows companies to recruit business students

By Amy Hadlock
Staff Reporter

The ninth annual Business Career Day gave students an opportunity to make connections with companies for potential jobs.

Fifty-five businesses, ranging from accounting and pharmaceutical firms to retailing and oil productions, spent the day talking with students and promoting their companies.

"We are pleased with the turnout," said Martina Derra, coordinator of the career day and senior in marketing and German. "The company representatives are also pleased with the turnout of students here."

Derra estimated more than 1,000 students met with the businesses through the course of the day.

Career Day, sponsored by the Marketing Club, enables companies to recruit students and inform them of the job opportunities with their corporations.

"We come because K-State is a strong school and we want to increase our recruiting efforts," said Angie Ahlstedt-Dunbar, from Arthur Andersen Consulting in Kansas City, Mo.

The company representatives are also interested in visiting the campus because many of them are past K-State graduates, Derra said.

"I was a past coordinator of the Business Career Day, so it is interesting for me to come back and see how things are going," said David Erdman, physical distribution manager of Mervyn's at the Plano Distribution Center in Plano, Texas. "I feel the career day was well organized and is running very smoothly. I have talked to many interested people."

Students also saw the benefits of talking with participating companies, said John Hadley, sophomore in accounting.

Students learn to be fit for life

A dozen students attended a fitness clinic Tuesday night as part of Recreational Services' year-long Lifeline Program.

"If you don't have your health, you're in big-time trouble," said David Laurie, the clinic's speaker and associate professor of physical education and leisure studies.

The presentation, at 7 p.m. on the second floor of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, was part of a new program on health topics implemented by Recreational Services this year.

"I thought he was interesting and a lot of people would have benefited from the information," said Amy Pettay, graduate student in hotel and restaurant management. "It gave me extra incentive to stay physically fit."

Laurie stressed the importance of five basic components of fitness that include intellectual, emotional, physical, social and spiritual aspects.

"There is more to fitness than the physical side," Laurie said. "When you're feeling your best, all five (components) are clicking."

Laurie said 45 percent of American adults are obese and the numbers are rising. He cited lack of time and facilities as the two primary reasons people give for not exercising.

"We don't worry about it (fitness) until we lose it," Laurie said.

Real men must take "no" for an answer.

Practice begins for track squads

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Though fall workouts are just getting underway, and the indoor season will not begin for several months, track coach John Capriotti is already brimming with optimism.

Citing added depth and experience, Capriotti thinks both the men's and women's teams are leading competitors for Big Eight titles this season.

Both squads have finished high in the league outdoor championships the past several seasons, and Capriotti thinks this may be the season that his teams step out of the shadow of the champions.

"I don't really see any weaknesses in either squad," Capriotti said. "We have got a lot of quality and a lot of depth at nearly every event. This is a hard working, classy group that I feel real good about."

With the start of the indoor season coming in January, Capriotti has his team focusing on distance conditioning and weight training. Though the workouts don't offer daily competition, Capriotti said the fall training season is crucial for future success.

"You need to get a good background of conditioning," Capriotti said. "When you're in the season, it's difficult to train to compete and worry about staying in condition, too. So now is the time to really get that base."

Capriotti said most of the athletes will not begin focusing on the specific techniques of each event until later in the fall. First, he said, the athletes need to make general improvements in strength and stamina. Though the fall months may seem like sufficient time for preparation, Capriotti said the athletes can afford no lost time.

"Once the fall gets going, we don't have much time to mess around," Capriotti said. "It goes really fast because you need all that time to be ready."

The team takes walk-ons early in the school year and evaluates them in practice for six to eight weeks. This adds to the importance of the fall training season, Capriotti said.

For the women's squad, that has finished second in the Big Eight outdoor championships the past seven years running, Capriotti said the dominant Nebraska team will again be the team to beat. Capriotti expects this to be the best women's team he's coached and thinks the next step of improvement will be to get over the hump and into the top spot in the league.

The squad will be led this season by 10,000-meter national champion Janet Haskin, three-time All-American high jumper Connie Teaberry; Angie Miller, who took sixth in the nation in the shot put and ninth in the discus; and Janet Treiber who won the Big Eight 3,000-meter run two seasons ago, as a freshman.

Capriotti said the experience of the team and added depth in all events is the improvement that could carry the squad to a higher level of success this season.

"We added five quality people to our group of sprinters. That is the most-improved position on the team," Capriotti said. "Middle distance is the one area I'm worried about, and we'll have girls in it who are better suited for other events. We have people to be competitive there, but it's just not their specialty."

Latricia Joyner and Markeya Jones will lead the improved group of sprinters. Capriotti said the additions of hurdlers Debra Malone and Verida Walter make for dramatic improvements in that event.

The men will try to close the gap on Big Eight leading Nebraska and Iowa State, teams Capriotti said were much better than the rest of the league last season.

"The men are very balanced, and I think they can really move up into competition this year," Capriotti said. "The fall will be important to find where everyone will be competing this year, and it will be important for us to stay healthy and get in shape for the season."

The top returner for the men is two-time All-American Clifton Etheridge, who won the Big Eight long jump and triple jump titles. Etheridge finished in 10th place in the long jump at the national meet last spring.

Other important returners are R.D. Cogswell, who took second in the Big Eight in the high jump, and Brad Massey, who placed second in the javelin. David Warders, a versatile runner Capriotti said could compete in a variety of distance events, looks to bounce back from an injury.

The team loses All-American decathlete Steve Fritz, and Capriotti said John Dedrick and Eric Harland could try to fill his shoes this season.

Monday Night Football back with bang

Dan Wicker
SPORTS REPORTER

The long-awaited event that turns ordinary, boring nights into evenings in which raving sports fans are glued to their television sets is finally here.

Yes, ABC's Monday Night Football has arrived to help us put all the studying supposed to be accomplished over the weekend onto the backburner for one more night.

During 21 seasons, Monday Night Football has gradually grown into the strongest sports series on television. Al Michaels, Frank Gifford and Dan Dierdorf will return for their record-tying fourth year as broadcasters on the telecasts.

They are all prime sources to vouch for the popularity of the show, as they have seen their bank accounts grow with the ratings. Michaels now ranks as the highest-paid sports announcer with a $15 million, seven-year contract.

And if the season-opening Monday night game is any clue to what is in store for NFL fans, and the ABC ratings, then leave Monday nights open for the gold mine of pro football.

Just as many of the polls predicted, the viewers were geared to see if the San Francisco 49ers, the most dominating team of the last decade, would continue into the '90s.

After seeing their Super Bowl victory last year over the Denver Broncos, it was hard to believe that they would not return for a "threepeat" in the Super Bowl.

However, the New Orleans Saints had their minds set on giving the fans a nail-biting opener and proving that maybe this would not be the 49ers' year.

The determination and patience of a world champion paid off in the end. New Orleans choked and was not able to run the clock out, giving Joe Montana and his boys one last shot.

Montana, no newcomer to pressure, calmly completed a string of passes. The last one, a 20-yarder to pro-bowler Jerry Rice, who had been quiet in the game, set up a game-winning 38-yard field goal with nine seconds remaining.

The the game ended with Ronnie Lott intercepting a Hail Mary bomb. I suppose it was a storybook ending to show that San Francisco was back gunning down opponents with Montana's reliable arm.

If there is any team that can win the Super Bowl three years in a row, it is San Francisco. Montana proved that he can drive the ball at will when the 49ers are in a pinch and it is just a matter of time before we will start seeing games like last year's Super Bowl trampling of Denver.

The defense proved tough, allowing only one touchdown and two field goals. They also put the halt on New Orleans, creating a fumble and forcing New Orleans to punt with less than two minutes remaining.

Excitement to the end of the game with the defending champions is probably just what ABC wanted in the outcome of their first Monday night telecast.

Well, Kansans, the excitement really rolls our way next Monday, as the Kansas City Chiefs finally return to Monday night after several seasons.

The Chiefs travel to Mile High Stadium to do battle with the Broncos, the defending AFC champions.

This could be the year for the Chiefs to reach the playoffs. The brutality of the Los Angeles Raiders and next Monday night's nemesis — the rocket arm of John Elway — appear to be Kansas City's major obstacles.

Schottenheimer prepares to face Broncos

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Marty Schottenheimer, as much as any coach in the NFL, has reason to know of and curse the talents of the quarterback he confronts in Denver Monday night.

Five times, teams coached by Schottenheimer have dueled teams quarterbacked by John Elway, including twice in AFC Championship games.

The last-minute touchdown march Elway engineered in the 1987 AFC title game to lead the Denver Broncos past Schottenheimer's Cleveland Browns is part of the lore of the league, known simply as The Drive.

It didn't get any better last year when Schottenheimer moved to Kansas City. In two meetings, Elway was 2-0, putting his lifetime record against Schottenheimer at 5-0.

But Schottenheimer is not about to quit trying. The Chiefs are fresh off a season-opening upset of the Minnesota Vikings. But they have not won in Denver since 1982.

As an Elway expert, Schottenheimer sometimes gets irked at all the shallow analyzing people do of the Denver quarterback.

"People talk about John all the time, but the one thing people never talk about, which I think is the essence of his success, is that John Elway is a great competitor," Schottenheimer said Tuesday at his weekly media luncheon. "John Elway competes. People don't talk about that in regard to John Elway. But if somebody said to me what is the one word you would use to describe John Elway, it wouldn't be great arm, or mobility. It would be competitor. That's what he is."

It's this intense desire to compete and win, not so much Elway's obvious physical gifts that most worry Chiefs' coaches.

"To my mind, it is the hallmark of his career that he is such a great competitor," Schottenheimer said. "When you see him taking off running, he's trying to make something happen. He's trying to find a way to get the job done. He is really competing. I've always felt that way about him.

"We played them in Cleveland one year, I think I was an assistant at the time, and we knocked him on the ground 25 to 30 times if we knocked him on the ground once. And he came back and beat us. The guy's a great competitor."

As someone who has yet to reach his first Super Bowl, Schottenheimer has no patience for critics who say Elway, Denver Coach Dan Reeves and the Broncos are failures for losing two Super Bowls.

"I think it's really unfair to the organization, coaches and players," he said.

White gets 2,000th hit

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Frank White became the 12th active player with 2,000 hits Tuesday night when he stroked a two-run double off the centerfield wall in the fourth inning of Kansas City's game against Toronto.

White, a native of Kansas City, has been the Royals' regular second baseman since 1975. He broke in with the Royals, the only club he's ever played for, in 1973 after graduating from the Royals' now-defunct Baseball Academy. His milestone hit came off Frank Wills.

Known primarily for his defense, White and Bill Mazeroski are the only second basemen to win eight gold gloves.

The crowd of about 18,000 gave White, 40, a standing ovation which did not dissipate until he stepped off the second base bag and doffed his cap.

Men's hoop schedule includes 18 TV games

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State will be featured three times nationally on ESPN as part of the 1990-91 men's basketball schedule, which was released Tuesday. Of the 27 games, 18 will be televised.

The schedule features six NCAA Tournament teams from a year ago, including Final Four participant Arkansas.

K-State's ESPN games will be played in Bramlage Coliseum. Those games are Jan. 29 vs. Kansas, Feb. 5 against Oklahoma and a Feb. 19 battle with Oklahoma State.

Aside for the ESPN games, K-State will be televised regionally on eight occasions as part of the Big Eight's Raycom package. In addition, seven other games will air statewide as part of the agreement between the school and Creative Sports Marketing.

Fred White and former Wildcat coach Jack Hartman will be the announcing team for CSM.

Suspect caught after pursuit

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

A 19-minute car chase led to the destruction of a Shawnee county sheriff's car and the arrest of a Kentucky fugitive Monday.

Marx J. Hankinson rolled his vehicle while trying to avoid a sheriff's deputy. He is suspected of crimes in both Topeka and Manhattan.

"From what I understand, the man has used many other names," said Frank Good, a deputy in the fugitive warrants division of the Topeka Sheriff's Department. "He has been in the Manhattan area for awhile practicing his trade of writing bad checks and theft."

Good said the department had received a report that Hankinson wrote a $2,000 bad check at a business in Topeka and was scheduled to come back on Monday to pick up his merchandise.

When he arrived about 3:30 p.m., Scott Baker, a Shawnee County sheriff's deputy, was waiting in the parking lot at 29th Street and South Topeka Avenue. Hankinson saw the patrol car and fled in his 1990 Toyota Four Runner.

Good and his partner, Tim Oblander, were en route to the scene to take over the stake out when Hankinson fled.

Six patrol cars pursued Hankinson for 19 minutes, reaching speeds of up to 85 mph within the city limits during the chase.

"He was driving like there were no roads," Good said. "He knew where he wanted to go and took the most direct route to get there, whether there was a road or not, and we followed.

"I have 100 percent confidence in my driver, so I wasn't scared about that," Good said. "What was scary was thinking about the people that could've been hurt during the chase."

Hankinson hit a culvert at high speed on I-470 heading west at the Gage exit and rolled the vehicle he was driving, Good said.

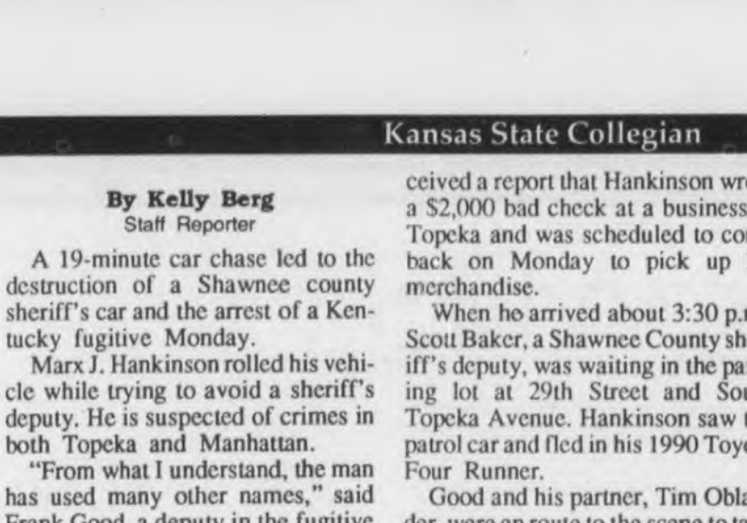
"We hit the same culvert and buckled the frame of our car, but no one got hurt," Good said.

Good said he jumped on top of the suspect's vehicle and opened the car door while Oblander, Baker and Charles Holthaus took Hankinson out of vehicle.

"He immediately started fighting," Good said. "So I tried to put flex-cuffs around his legs to keep him from kicking us, but he broke through them."

Good said Hankinson is about 6 feet 3 inches tall and about 230 pounds.

"He was a big guy and we had to use a stun gun to slow him down enough to get his hands cuffed behind his back," Good said.



A stun gun is a small weapon about 2 inches wide and 6 inches long that will emit 50,000 volts of electricity to subdue a violent suspect.

"The electricity works on the central nervous system and immobilizes, or at least slows down, a person who's violently resisting us," Good said. He said it is standard for them to carry a stun gun, and it doesn't cause any side effects.

He said they booked Hankinson in the Shawnee County Department of Corrections and sent a teletype to confirm reports of outstanding warrants in Kentucky.

The Topeka Sheriff's Department charged Hankinson with felony obstruction and fugitive from justice.

The president devoted a considerable portion of his speech to prodding Congress to finish work on a budget agreement. At the same time, the speech did not contain the sharp attack on Democrats, as had previous pronouncements.

"Together we must act this very month — before the next fiscal year begins Oct. 1 — to get America's fiscal house in order," Bush said.

Budget negotiators from the White House and Congress appeared to be making some progress toward an agreement to pare next year's federal deficit by $50 billion, including higher premiums for better-off Medicare recipients.

Participants in the talks said Tuesday that the two sides had agreed to increase taxes and fees by $25 billion next year and $130 billion over five years.

"Most Americans are sick and tired of endless battles in the Congress and between the branches over budget matters," Bush said. "It is high time we pulled together — and get the job done right. It is up to us to straighten this out."

Bush told Congress there were high related costs of the showdown and declared, "conservation efforts are essential to keep our energy needs as low as possible."

He also hinted that the United States could dip into its Strategic Petroleum Reserve if conditions warrant. The reserve is the nation's 590 million-barrel stockpile of oil.

And Bush called on Congress to pass legislation yet this month to spur domestic energy production and foster conservation.

In particular, Bush cited tax incentives for domestic oil and gas exploration, fuel-switching and acceleration of oil drilling in Alaska without damage to the wildlife.

Bush said that if the United States had not reacted swiftly to Iraq's invasion, it would have been "a signal to actual and potential despots around the world. ... America must stand up to aggression, and we will," he said.

"And one thing more — in pursuit of these goals, America will not be intimidated," Bush said. "Vital issues of principle are at stake. Saddam Hussein is literally trying to wipe a country off the face of the Earth. We do not exaggerate.

"Nor do we exaggerate when we say, Saddam Hussein will fail."

legendary stride pianist, Thomas Waller. Winston then started working on his own brand of pop instrumental music, both composing and arranging other artist's pieces. He released his first album "Ballads and Blues" in 1972. The album contained some stride pieces as well as some blues piano and melodic pieces.

Tickets for the performance of Winston's "Summer Show" are available at the McCain Auditorium box office and at the Bramlage Coliseum box office. Ticket prices are $14, $12 and $10 for students. Student worried about father in Kuwait

8 weeks pass with little information supplied

CRISIS IN THE MIDDLE EAST

By Danette King
Collegian Reporter

The situation in the Persian Gulf hits close to home for one K-State student.

For Monica Kelly, senior in marketing and management, it has been eight weeks since she last talked with her father, Stephen Kelly, whose whereabouts in Abu Halifa, Kuwait, are unknown.

"The last time I talked to my dad was the Tuesday (July 31) before the invasion," Kelly said. "We usually talk once or twice a week."

Kelly said she and her father had discussed the situation between Kuwait and Iraq.

"I asked Dad what he thought was going to happen, and he thought it would be resolved peacefully during the talks Kuwait and Iraq were having Wednesday (Aug. 1)," Kelly said.

Iraq invaded Kuwait on Thursday.

Kelly said she didn't know about about the invasion when it happened.

"I heard about it on the radio the next morning," she said. "My sister and I started trying to call Dad, but we couldn't get through because all the lines were tied up."

After making several calls to the Washington, D.C. hotline set up to answer questions about Americans' whereabouts, Kelly learned that her father was unaccounted for.

Although this bothered Kelly, she said she reasoned it was because her father was in the process of moving.

Stephen Kelly, an engineer involved in city planning, had taken a new job with Pan-Arab Consulting Engineers, and was moving to a different apartment. He was scheduled to leave for Cyprus on vacation Thursday, but the invasion stopped everything.

Kelly said she and her sister kept calling Washington, D.C., for any news. After receiving no new answers to their questions, they decided to call Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kansas. Kelly said she believes that Kassebaum was helpful in getting some information.

Finally, six days after the invasion, the Kelly's received word.

"The State Department called on Aug. 8 and said Dad was safe," Kelly said. "I was really relieved to hear any information."

Then, on Aug. 24, a telegram arrived confirming Stephen Kelly's safety.

"There was no address on it (the telegram) except a number at the bottom that was Dad's phone number in Kuwait, so I assume he's still in his apartment," Kelly said.

Kelly, who lived in Abu Halifa, Kuwait, from 1984-87, said she never felt like her life was in jeopardy. She recalls hearing an explosion over the gulf, which was later thought to have been the explosion of two Kuwaiti fighter planes.

Kelly has no bad feelings towards the Arabs and feels that the experiences she gained while in Kuwait helped her to grow up.

John Reed, junior in park and recreation management, was also in Kuwait in 1984-1987.

"The whole time that we were living in Kuwait, I heard rumors that this (Iraqi invasion) would happen," Reed said. "It was just a matter of time."

Kelly said questions from people about her dad are sometimes difficult because she wants people to realize the Persian Gulf crisis is not an easy situation.

"I think people need to step back and take a look at the situation," Kelly said. "It's a delicate matter. It can't be solved by blowing up Kuwait. Such actions would only cause retaliation on the Americans there. Every American in Kuwait is in jeopardy and that includes my dad."

Although Kelly said she feels her father is safe for now, she still would like to know more.

"I feel just as clueless as anyone else. I don't think we get enough news, and I don't know if it's accurate. I keep telling myself this is all going to be over, and he'll be back," she said.

Finney proposes tax-relief agenda

Burden could be shifted to farms

CAMPAIGN 1990
Gubernatorial Race
The Issue: Taxes

By Alan Wilds
Staff Reporter

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Joan Finney may not win popularity with Kansas farmers if they are included in her proposed tax-relief program.

Finney said, during Saturday's debate at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson, that she plans to raise an additional $800 million over the next four years to relieve the property-tax burden on small businesses and homeowners.

The $800 million will be generated from a 1 percent sales tax added to as many as 52 of the 56 groups currently exempt from sales tax.

The four groups which Finney wants to keep exempt include pharmaceuticals and food stamps.

The 52 groups on the examining table include some farming goods such as equipment, feed, fertilizer and seed.

Toby Bruna, manager of Bruna Implement Company in Clay Center, said such a tax would slow down the entire farming industry.

"In the long run, it will affect everybody," he said. "With a 1 percent sales tax, you're talking about some folks paying as much as $10,000 in taxes every year."

Bruna said he is not surprised this tax plan is being proposed, but he said he would like to see it put to a referendum.

"With reappraisal, the tax has to come from somewhere," he said.

Steve Peterson, grain merchandiser at the Manhattan Farmer's Co-op, said farmers have enough taxes presently and would not accept an additional 1 percent sales tax.

"It would raise a real uproar," Peterson said. "Farmers and taxes don't go well together."

Peterson said some farmers are already struggling with property taxes and a new tax on fertilizer of about $1.70 per ton that was enacted as part of the Environmental Protection Act.

"We already catch heck for that one all the time," he said.

Rod Holdredge, general manager of the Farmer's Union in St. Marys, said a 1 percent sales tax would not be as bad as 4 or 5 percent. He said, however, that any tax would not be popular.

Holdredge said farmers are exempt on many inputs and some equipment and would prefer to stay that way.

"If some people knew what this proposed tax is intended for, they may change their minds," he said. "However, most people look to their back pockets first."

Bruna said his company receives business from Nebraska farmers who must pay about 4 percent in taxes on farm machinery.

"For people in Nebraska, it is worth driving the extra miles," he said. "On a $100,000 piece of equipment, a farmer can save a couple of thousand dollars because of the sales tax there."

Following Gov. Mike Hayden's criticism of the tax plan at the debate, Finney's campaign manager, Jack Parry, accused Hayden of seizing the opportunity to make a campaign issue out of it.

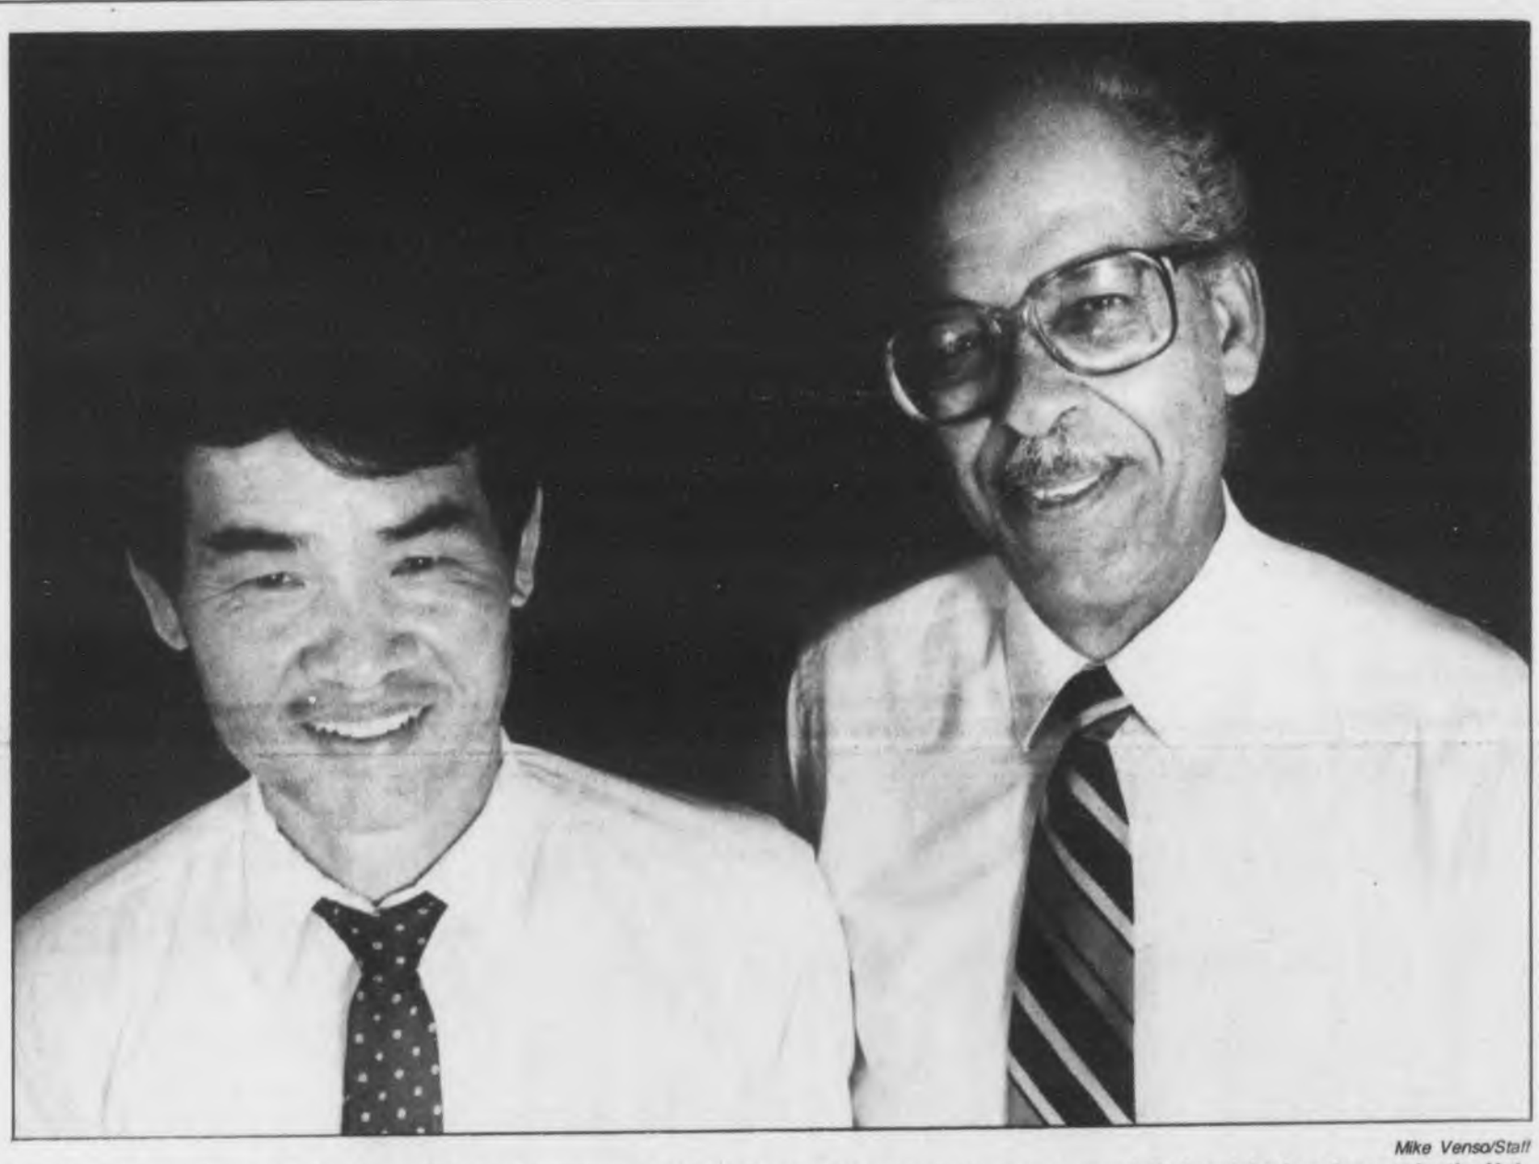
Parry said Finney's tax-relief program is intended to bring fairness to Kansas, and no tax would ever be imposed if it were met with much disapproval.

In the tax program's final analysis, Parry said only a few of the groups may be selected from the 52 to be considered.



"Everybody pays their fair share to strengthen the tax base," Parry said. "With this plan, we will see a decrease in property tax to where people are no longer losing their homes over it."

Hayden's campaign believes Finney is trying to avoid a debate by saying she intends only to examine the 52 tax-exempt groups.

Frank Ybarra, Hayden's press secretary, said that based on Finney's statements at the debate, she definitely wants to add 52 new taxes, which would be the largest tax increase in Kansas history.

"We will not allow her to backtrack on this issue," Ybarra said. "Any statement contrary to what she said at the debate are flies in the face of the facts."

Ybarra said such a tax increase would affect all sectors of the community and add cost to not only to agricultural goods, but also textbook sales and rentals, entertainment tickets, utility bills, charity auctions and international telephone calls.

Political scientist, physicist named distinguished professors

Two internationally respected University researchers, political scientist Michael Suleiman and physicist Chii-Dong Lin, were appointed as University Distinguished Professors.

Suleiman has been doing research on the Middle East and Arab people.

He said he has done research in Lebanon about its political parties and research in other Arab countries about attitudes and orientations.

"I asked them what they think of the rest of the world and what they think about their own concept of nationality," Suleiman said.

He said because changes take place rapidly, he wanted to interview young people.

"I needed to look at the attitudes of young people before they become adults," he said. "So, I started research on the political socialization of these young people."

Suleiman used questionnaires to study 4,800 people, and is still in the process of analyzing them.

Suleiman has been working on the research for 10 years.

He has also written a number of books and journals. His latest book, scheduled for 1991, is a comprehensive bibliography of Arab-Americans.

"I've been working on it for almost 10 years, and I believe that it will be a tool that will enhance the study of Arabs in the United States," he said.

Suleiman said this is the first time such a comprehensive work has been done.

"This book will cover the Arab community in the United States from the very beginning the community started — the 19th to early 20th centuries — and it will be as accurate as possible," he said.

"In my case, I did not find the material I needed easily," he said. "I looked everywhere from the Library of Congress and Harvard Library to a small public library in California."

Suleiman came to K-State in 1965 and has been teaching, doing research and giving lectures ever since.

"I have lectured in some 20 countries — from France and Italy to Korea and Japan to Venezuela and Mexico," he said.

He was also an adviser on United States-Arab relations to the Carter administration at one time.

Another distinguished professor, Chii Dong Lin, said this award is something that shows that the university faculty appreciates what they do.

"When they give such an award to faculty who are well-known in their fields, faculty who have done excellent on their research, they know that the community recognizes their work," Lin said. "It is a way to let the community know about your excellence."

Lin also said the recognition is a way to keep quality faculty at the University.

"I have seen good faculty members who left the University because nobody recognized their work."

Lin is a theoretical physicist, and his research is in atomic physics on doubly-excited electron states.

He said his research has been supported by grants totaling $1.4 million.

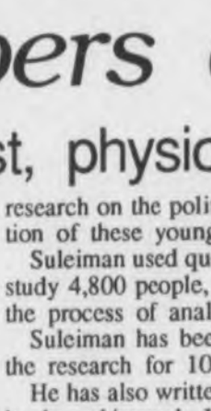
"My research is supported by the U.S. Department of Energy, the National Science Foundation and by the NATO for cooperative research with scientists in France, Germany, China, Japan and Argentina.

Lin has been at K-State since 1976. He said he enjoys teaching and research at the same time.

Speech to list Senate agenda

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Student Body President Todd Johnson and Student Senate Chairman Chris Kern will set Senate priorities for the semester in a State of the University address at noon Thursday in the Union Courtyard.



"Last spring in my State of the University address, I set the tone for the whole year," Johnson said. "This time, I want to talk about where we have been and where we're going."

Johson said he will concentrate on issues especially concerning students.

He plans to review steps taken to improve Farrell Library and discuss changes that may result from a study on the facility.

Improvements in campus safety and lighting will also be addressed.

Johnson will discuss an expansion proposal for Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, citing an architectural study done to investigate possible changes.

Johnson

Johnson will discuss the implications of University reorganization and the effect it may have on students, but the topic will not be the focus of his address.

"Reorganization will be just part of my speech," Johnson said. "There are other issues that affect students besides reorganization."

Johnson will give his views on the engineering fee to be proposed to the Board of Regents in November or December.

"This is definitely a time of change," Johnson said. "Things at K-State are good, but they could be better."

Kern said he will set the tone for fall elections and encourage students to get involved in student government.

He said he will discuss progress on a bill allowing students to consume alcohol in the football stadium parking lot before home games.

Kern will announce plans for a designated driving program arranged by Student Senate in conjunction with Aggieville merchants.

Kern will also discuss Educational Opportunity Fund allocations.

"As compared to this time last year, I think things are going a lot better," he said.

The library situation has improved by 200 percent, Kern said. Over the summer, campus safety improved with the installation of more lighting.

Kern and Johnson will answer questions after the address.

Chaos raging in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Chaotic violence raged Wednesday through black townships, where armed gangs set fire to homes and chased people through the streets. Police said at least 50 people were killed.

It was some of the greatest unrest in a month of black faction fighting in townships near Johannesburg. More than 700 people have died.

People piled possessions in wheelbarrows and supermarket carts to flee clashes between groups armed with machetes, axes, spears and clubs in the black townships.

"We have to leave. We are helpless without guns," said one man who refused to give his name.

Ambushes in Soweto killed a white policeman and three blacks, while street fighting killed 46 blacks in four other townships, police said.

Germany unity treaty signed

MOSCOW (AP) — The victors of World War II signed one of the most important documents of the postwar era on Wednesday, giving international sanction to both German unity and a major reshaping of the East-West balance of power.

Secretary of State James Baker III proclaimed the signing a rendezvous with history.

"This represents the end of a 45-year journey," Baker said after he and the foreign ministers of the Soviet Union, Britain, France and the two Germanys signed a treaty settling the global aspects of German unification.

The sweeping document, called the Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany, climaxes seven months of tough bargaining between the six nations.

Under the document, the Soviet Union loses East Germany as its most valued military ally. The six nations agreed all of Germany can belong to NATO.

Senate to evaluate Souter

WASHINGTON (AP) — After weeks of researching opinions of David Souter, the Senate confronts the Supreme Court nominee himself Thursday to flesh out a portrait that so far is little more than an outline.

The confirmation process facing Souter fits the legal definition of discovery: "the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden." What has been hidden is not the facts about Souter's life but his judicial philosophy.

On the eve of the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings, a host of special interest groups called news conferences to lay out what they know about Souter the judge. The nominee, meanwhile, had lunch at the White House with President Bush and declined to take any questions.

NASA gets high-speed contact

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — NASA restored high-speed communications with Magellan for the first time in four weeks Wednesday, then released more of the spacecraft's pictures of jagged lava flows and giant craters on Venus.

The irregularly-shaped craters, one measuring 5 miles wide, are called calderas. Each one probably formed when lava flowed out from underneath the planet's volcanoes, causing the entire top of a volcano to collapse, said Steve Saunders, Magellan project scientist.

Bush tapes message to Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush videotaped a message Wednesday telling the Iraqi people he has no quarrel with them and they should blame any hardship from the Mideast crisis on their own government.

On the eight-minute tape, which the White House hopes will be broadcast unedited in Iraq, Bush says the U.S. military is in the Persian Gulf only to defend Saudi Arabia from Iraqi aggression.

"We want a peaceful resolution. We want peaceful coexistence with the people of Iraq," Bush says on the tape, according to spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

The White House held off releasing a transcript, but Fitzwater gave an overview of Bush's comments.

The president's address was intended to create internal problems for Saddam Hussein by emphasizing Iraq's isolation in the world community as a result of the invasion of Kuwait.

KU disrupted by bomb threats

LAWRENCE (AP) — Several classes were disrupted at the University of Kansas again Tuesday after campus police received three bomb threats.

Campus police said no bombs were found. They said they thought a prankster was responsible for the threats at three campus buildings, two of which were closed Monday after they were permeated by a pungent onion odor.

Although the buildings were not evacuated Tuesday, some teachers canceled classes after police notified university officials of the threats at the Robert Dole Human Development Center and at Malott and Haworth halls.

Abortion fight may be local

TOPEKA (AP) — An anti-abortion activist said Wednesday that she expects efforts will be made to pass ordinances in Wichita and other cities to limit abortions.

The abortion battle would shift from the Statehouse to city council chambers because Attorney General Bob Stephan issued a legal opinion that said cities can pass parental notification ordinances and ban third-trimester abortions.

"An ideal ordinance is a third-trimester ordinance in Wichita," Cynthia Patton, spokeswoman for Kansans for Life, said. Wichita has a clinic that performs late-term abortions, which is one of the few in the state that does, she said.

Stephan predicted the abortion fight would shift from the state to the local level.

"I think you're going to find a battleground in literally every city in this state," Stephan said at a news conference.

Fort Riley units deployed

FORT RILEY (AP) — Two additional units were deployed Wednesday from Fort Riley to assist in the Persian Gulf, officials said.

"Both units left Fort Riley this morning for Fort Knox, Ky., where they will subsequently be airlifted to the Middle East," said Capt. Bill McCormick, Fort Riley public affairs officer.

The units were the 57th Transportation Detachment from the South Dakota National Guard and the 593rd Transportation Detachment, which was assigned to Fort Riley, but is not a part of the 1st Infantry Division, McCormick said.

The detachments may include up to 20 men, he said.

Other units at Fort Riley remain on alert and "have been alerted to prepare for deployment," McCormick said.

Brockman House

A home atmosphere for visiting speakers, scholars

By Eric Robison
Collegian Reporter

Moscow mathematicians, celebrities, politicians and many others have passed through Helen Brockman's home, but many K-State students aren't aware of the work she does for the University.

Brockman is the hostess of the Brockman House at 1100 N. Manhattan Ave. It is available to lodge scholars and speakers visiting K-State without cost from two or three days to three weeks.

Brockman, a graduate of the University of Iowa, came to Kansas in 1968 after spending most of her life in New York City. After moving to Manhattan, she taught fashion design at K-State for six years and was forced to retire because she was 70 years old. Her students, however, raised enough money to pay for her salary for the next year.

The idea for the house originated with Brockman, and then she received approval from the KSU Foundation to go ahead with it.

"We had a cocktail party and invited all of the deans to view the house, and almost all of them showed up, and the ones that didn't were out of town," Brockman said. "The party was a success, and I was able to start letting guests stay in the house.

"I had the idea for a long time," she said. "People feel different when they live in a house. They're more at home and it makes them feel comfortable, which will make their stay more memorable than if they had just stayed in a noisy motel room."

The house has downstairs and upstairs apartments, both fully furnished and decorated. The upstairs apartment contains a living room, dining area, study area, bedroom, kitchen and a patio. The basement apartment is available when needed. Appliances, and a washer and dryer are also available.

"I always have things for guests in the refrigerator," Brockman said. "People get to stay here free, but they give me a lot of interesting gifts. I get paintings and stained glass pictures. Gordon Jump gave me cut glass."

Brockman expects accidents to happen, but said guests are always careful.

"People seem to be more careful here because it is more like home rather than the hustle of a hotel." Brockman said. "The only

EDITORIAL

Tabloid proves a rose is a rose is a ruse

"Horse sense is a good judgement which keeps horses from betting on people." W. C. Fields (1880-1946), U.S. comedian.

Nearly anyone who has read a newspaper or watched the evening news this past year knows of the self-inflicted gambling and tax problems of baseball's bumptious braggadocio — the great Pete Rose.

I say "great" because a few of his peers, who I presume are in a position to know, describe him as such. I personally would not know one great baseball player from another.

I do know I saw Rose selling autographed baseballs on one of the Christian TV channels one time, or was it one of the "shop and buy" channels? I can't remember. They are so easily confused. Always peddling something for nothing, or is it nothing for something? See what I mean? Confusing. "Bumfuzzling," as my wonderful grandpa used to say.

A recent incident in the news involving Rose caught my eye and "bumfuzzled" me once again.

As I said, most people know that Rose is vacationing — I mean, serving time — for about five months in the minimum-security wing of a prison in Marion, Ill., for fudging a little on his taxes. OK, I'll say it. He cheated.

He cheated a lot.

It seems one of the specious, bird-witted, supermarket tabloids ran a "hot story" in its Sept. 11 issue. Maybe you saw it. The cover read: "Pete Rose In Prison — Exclusive First Photos and Interview."

My opinion of the news tabloids is that they are the literary equivalent of eating lunch at your nearest Mini-Mart "vend-a-bait" dispenser. For a paltry 85 cents, however, you could receive two color photos and a story — "Pete Rose Behind Bars, Getting Along Like 'A Regular Guy.'"

I must say I have been waiting with my baseball glove and bated, tobacco-laden breath quite a while for the first Pete-Rose-behind-bars interview.

And of course, your typical tabloid sluggard will ask, "Hmm, I wonder if this is true?"

One question I have is, "Who really gives a flying quid of Redman?"

Brad Seabourn

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Better yet, why would a cheap rag pay as much as $100,000 to a couple of bar owners for some pictures and a story when all they need do is cut-and-paste and fictionalize as they normally do to produce a 30-page "issue of toilet tissue?"

Unless of course, the photos are real, and the story is true.

"Wait a minute," you say. "What was that about $100,000 and two bar owners?"

OK, so you didn't read the rag — I mean mag. Here's the story.

According to (insert the name of any sleaze-bag mag you desire — in the ultimate scheme of things, it really makes no difference), Doug Mays, a 39-year-old musician and photographer, and his wife, 32-year-old Sammie Mays, a reporter for the Mississippi Press in Pascagoula, Miss., own the Key West Bar & Grill in Moss Point, Miss.

Between filling empty beer mugs, flipping burgers, emptying spittoons and generally having a grand time throwing puking drunks out the door, they supposedly went to Marion, Ill., and convinced prison officials they had a date to do a free concert at the prison.

Doug stuffed his camera into a speaker and then snuck camera and band equipment inside, while Sammie kept one of the guards "occupied." Once inside, they paid an inmate $50 to take them to Rose.

The Mayses claim they spent 15 minutes interviewing Rose, shot some pictures and then played rock music for about 90 minutes for some of the inmates before leaving.

What a plan. Almost as good as Rose's tax-evasion scheme.

But the nagging question remains: "Did they really talk to Rose?"

Robert Carr, the prison's chief psychologist, said it's all a big lie. "They make claims that they talked to the warden. The warden wasn't there that week. He was a thousand miles away. Mr. Rose was not subjected to an interview and there may have been a picture taken, but it wouldn't have been with his approval. Mr. Rose has repeatedly said that he didn't want to be interviewed."

As Shakespeare once said, "The truth will come to light," and in the words of Rose, as recorded by the Mayses, we have an answer to this perplexing and highly significant question.

According to Doug Mays, "Rose said, 'How did you get a camera in here? Are y'all with the musicians from Mississippi? What a great ruse.' He said, 'Take my picture. I am giving you a ticket to ride. You're going to be rich on this picture.'"

Now really, does that sound like something Rose would say?

Sure it does.

To which one can only reply, "Don't bet on it, Pete."

EDITORIALS

No real choice between candidates for governor

Around this time of year, newspapers rally around favorite gubernatorial candidates on the editorial pages and try to show why their pick is the better choice.

It's not going to happen here.

We're no better than any other paper. It's not that we're being hoity-toity about it. We just can't think of a reason to support either of them. Try it yourself:

Hayden's last four years have been ...

Finney is ...

See? No words come forth. And taking a look at the issues makes it even more obvious and confounding.

There's the big tax problem. Both candidates have their answer. Increase tax on farm machinery, Finney said. Increase the good old sin taxes, Hayden said.

What happened to the help for the small businesspersons whose taxes increased, in some places, tenfold? What happened to the homeowner whose house in Flush was appraised at $100,000 according to Wichita standards?

There's the Fort Riley expansion issue. Both candidates agreed on that issue, surprisingly. Nothing should be said, they said, until we know more, i.e., "We don't know what to think, so we won't offend anyone by taking a stand."

There were no words for the farmers opposed. There were no words for the businessfolk in favor. There were no initiatives by governors ready to lead.

There's the great "litmus test" issue of the abortion. Here, the candidates are doing the latest election craze: flip-flopping around traditional party lines. Finney, a Democrat, would not initiate any legislation restricting abortions, but she would most definitely encourage and sign it. Hayden, a Republican, would leave it up to the moral conscience of each person involved.

Here the people of Kansas have a choice. But should we allow abortion to dominate how our lives are affected? Should that issue be the mainframe of how our state economy is run and the standard of living in our state gets better or worse? Are the actions of the few who may be in the unfortunate situation to consider abortion dictate the lives of the many?

Where are our leaders?

Though they may have some differences, Finney and Hayden are essentially two sides of the same coin. Neither are leaders, and neither can give Kansas what it needs.

We need someone who's ready to do something, ready to lead. We don't need another decade of silence in the Statehouse.

LETTERS

Censorship lures

Editor,

I would suggest that before Lewis E. Winkler with the Campus Crusade for Christ attempts to condemn anyone, he should take a closer look at what he is condemning. If the Constitution of the United States protects the rights of hate groups, then why not some band that probably wouldn't have been so famous if certain people had not started crying censorship? Winkler, as soon as you try to prevent someone from hearing or seeing something, the drive to see just what you're screaming about takes over.

I'm also happy to see that you have made up you're mind about abortion. For being part of a group that flaunts your Christianity, you are quick to condemn. What would you tell the 12-year-old who gets pregnant from a rape? That it was a gift from God? Oh, sure Susie, God meant for this to happen so that you could test your faith in Him. Sorry Susie, but the baby is protected by the right to life.

I can see that you're proud of your religion by the way you put it after your name. If your narrow-mindedness is part of it, then I'm glad that I never joined your group. You see, sometimes the boundaries between right and wrong aren't so clear. I don't believe that any religion gives you the right to judge anyone else.

Rights not defined

Editor,

I nearly spat out my Grape Nuts while reading Lewis Winkler's letter in Wednesday's Collegian. Winkler states, "Freedom means being free to do what is right and being prohibited and punished for doing what is wrong." An admirable idea I must admit. Unfortunately, Americans aren't quite in agreement on what constitutes right and wrong. And, while I'm not sure Winkler is convinced that he knows the difference, I'm not sure that I do.

Since I'm not certain that I'm always right I wouldn't feel comfortable telling others the difference between good and evil.

Now, I'm not saying that there shouldn't be laws. But, as a nation dedicated to freedom, we should attempt to make laws that increase our rights, not limit them. I don't mean all legislation should read, "Henceforth, all citizens shall be endowed with the right to (insert right)." Instead, we should balance the desires of the individual with the good of the community. In my Utopia we would have only one law. It would read, "Citizens shall have the right to do anything so long as their actions do not limit the freedoms of others."

Of course, my feeling that the community benefits from personal liberty doesn't quite jibe with Winkler's belief that a good community is one that follows the same moral directives he does. Just remember, Winkler, the same amendment that gives 2 Live Crew the freedom to be vulgar and permits flag burning also protects your right to participate in the Campus Crusade for Christ.

Smoke at home

Editor,

This letter is in response to the complaint by J. Stanley Stadig on the issue of smoking in the K-State Union. Wake up. Where have you been for the past five years? Smoking is a nasty addiction that kills thousands of people every year. I should know because it took my father's life two years ago. I'm no outspoken, damn-them-all-to-hell protestor, but I voice my opinion when I deem it necessary.

You call yourself a veteran fighting for your right to smoke where you wish, including in the Union. Your rights are those ideas which general society has accepted. The trend is toward a smoke-free society. It's a pleasure to be able to walk around the Union without having to breathe other people's smoke. It's much the same as farting. When I have to, I go outside. So, if you must continue your addiction, do it at home. I, as an American, have the right to clean air.

Union inconsiderate

Editor,

I am a non-smoker, yet I find the Union's attitude toward smokers appalling. They are confined to the small area near (not in, God forbid) the main cafeteria overlooking the central court. This is OK. It doesn't get overcrowded too often.

But imagine the frustration of someone, wanting only to eat lunch and smoke a cigarette, when they find this area taken over by some special event, such as a poster sale. Where can this person go? They have no place to sit. Is it unreasonable to suggest that these special events be conducted elsewhere? There are plenty of nearby areas that could be used. Using the cafeteria's only smoking section is an extremely inconsiderate gesture which should be dealt with immediately.

Poor example set

Editor,

So Craig Renfro, assistant director of intercollegiate athletics, and Steve Bietau, tennis coach, were "talked into" having a beer while on duty as judges of the tailgate parties. This says a lot for our professional staff at K-State. How can we set an example for our young people to say "no" to drugs and alcohol when our educators can not handle it? I say we do not need alcohol at football games (or any other campus activity) whether it is "discreet" or not.

When those people drive home on the highways and are either scraped off the asphalt or detained for driving under the influence, by the Kansas Highway Patrol, it is not going to matter how "discreet" their drinking was. Let's do more to help clean drugs and alcohol from our University to help our young people stay alive and healthy.

Pictures need more color, less nostalgia

By Heather Anderson
Collegian Reviewer

Although the current display of Lincoln Highway photos in the Union Gallery might stir nostalgia in some people, I only felt nostalgia for the photos of the same genre shown during the credits of "Rainman."

It seems everyone is jumping on the black-and-white photo nostalgia bandwagon, and photographer Drake Hokanson, a lecturer at the University of Iowa School of Journalism, is no exception.

Granted, the Lincoln Highway no longer exists in its entirety, and original pictures taken from the highway would have been in black and white. The cross-country highway, however, was originally built for its panoramic view — and you better believe the motorists of the 1920s would have used color film, had it been available.

It just seems so much is lost in the photos of lush Pennsylvania meadows, the desert and rock formations of Utah and Nevada and the mountains of Northern California. What colors are the flowers surrounding the sign? Is the river blue or brown? Are the fields in Nebraska as green as those in Pennsylvania, or are they more like the ones we all know better?

Get the picture?

Having studied some art myself, I do understand the need for a theme and consistency. But to the average Joe off the street, something is missing.

The Lincoln Highway was built in 1913. From what I understand, the major automakers supported it because they thought they could sell more cars if people had a panoramic road to travel on.

The whole idea behind the pictures is people don't want to travel slow, winding roads anymore. Instead, they want to get to their destination as soon as possible, either by flying or taking the interstates. A picture of the Lincoln Highway, overgrown and empty next to a jam-packed I-80 in Wyoming, really hit home on this point.

Subjects in the pictures include old people on a front porch, a town square in New Oxford, Pa., brick portions of the highway in Nebraska. a sign in a small town pointing to the Junior-Senior-Elementary School, an abandoned drive-in theater and barn-side advertising in Indiana. It all looks like another John Cougar Mellencamp video.

What makes these subjects different than what I've already seen in Kansas? If there wasn't a caption under each picture to tell where it was taken, you'd swear half of them were taken in the Flint Hills and surrounding areas.

I think color would have made the difference.

What I found the most interesting wasn't the pictures themselves, but commentary by those who traveled the road in the good old days.

Also, a photo of old gas pumps deserves a closer look. Among the overgrown weeds and black-and-white nostalgia, the pumps list gas at $1.16 a gallon.

If you're into the black-and-white thing, or if you were around to vacation on the Lincoln Highway, it's a lovely, warm trip through yesterday.

Record-setting quarterback still has passion for game

K-State Sports
Hall of Fame
Lynn Dickey

Editor's Note: This profile is the first article in an eight-part series on the 1990 inductees into the newly formed K-State Sports Hall of Fame. The series will run each Tuesday and Thursday before the induction ceremony, to be held Oct. 5.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

It is conceivable that almost every child has once dreamed of a career in pro sports and chosen an idol.

Many college students probably idolized one of the first eight people who will be inducted into the newly established K-State Sports Hall of Fame.

Anyone who knows K-State football knows that one name overshadows all the rest. Former K-State and pro quarterback Lynn Dickey will be among the first inductees.

During his three-year tenure at K-State, he brought the 'Cats out of the conference cellar to a second-place finish in 1970. Since that season, the team has not finished higher than fourth.

No. 11, the jersey worn by Dickey and fellow quarterback Steve Grogan, is now retired to commemorate their accomplishments.

Dickey's records include the four best passing days and two best passing seasons in K-State history, along with the top three total-offense games and the top two total-offense seasons.

Dickey holds several career records, including the career-passing and total-offense marks.

"It is a great honor, especially to go in the first class," Dickey said. "If you figure all of the people to go through K-State as athletes, it is quite an honor."

Dickey resides in Kansas City and has been retired from football for five years. He continues working as a pregame host for the Chiefs and operates Lynn Dickey's sports cafe in Westport, Mo.

Freshman earns job

Kicker Wright adjusts to life in new spotlight

By Todd Fertig
Sports Reporter

Fans who enjoyed the Wildcat victory over Western Illinois Saturday watched several players who were playing in their first college football game. Coach Bill Snyder had several newcomers seeing action, but possibly none as significant as one player who only played a handful of downs.

Freshman placekicker Tate Wright played only a few plays but felt the heat of the spotlight on every one.

Wright won the starting kicker position in practice this fall and handled the pressure of his first game, assuming some of the kickoff duties and connecting on three extra-points. Although his debut was successful, Wright admitted he felt some anxiety about his responsibilities.

"There was the pressure of coming right from high school and people not being real confident about how you'll accept going from 3,000 people at a game to 25,000 at your first college game," Wright said. "But the guys were real confident and uplifting towards me, always saying, 'You can do it.'"

By envisioning himself making successful kicks in different game situations, Wright alleviates some of his job's pressure. But while Wright made sure he kept focused on the task at hand Saturday, he did allow himself to take a look around and let the fact that he was actually playing his first college football game sink in.

Adding to the thrill, and the anxiety, of the first game was the competition for the placekicking duties. Wright was told just days before the opener that he would be on the first string.

"I knew there was a good chance that I'd be kicking, but still I was excited about it," said Wright, admitting that the competition for the job had been partly mental. "I noticed that I was doing fine, and then when the time started getting close, I started not doing as well as I could do. Once we found out who would be kicking, I jumped right back in."

Wright has someone he turns to when the stress hits, someone who can understand the mental aspect of kicking. His brother Todd is a sophomore placekicker at Arkansas and earned All-Southwest Conference honors last season.

From his brother, Wright receives support and advice to help him cope with the pressures.

"We talked off and on quite a bit before the game, just talking about the metal aspects, how to handle things," Wright said.

While growing up in Dallas, the two brothers spent their time kicking soccer balls instead of footballs because their father was a soccer coach. That all changed after Wright moved to Stillwater, Okla. as a teenager.

"One day we were watching TV," Wright said, "and after watching a football game we just decided 'Let's go up to the field and see what happens,' because everything was there, the background and all. And it just pretty much started from there."

At Stillwater High School, Wright played wide receiver and defensive back, never focusing his attention entirely on kicking. His senior year, Wright was an all-state defensive back and placekicker and kicked a 50-yard field goal in the state semifinals, his last high school game.

Accustomed to being on the field much of the game while in high school, Wright has found waiting in the wings uncomfortable so far.

"It's something that I've got to adjust to, getting used to waiting for my time to come," Wright said. "It helps the focus part of it — you are always working at kicking and that is what's always on your mind. But it will take the first couple of games to get in the groove, used to waiting for my turn."

K-State was one of several colleges he had to chose from, and Wright saw it as a chance to be part of a program on the rise.

"The opportunities were right, and I knew from what I'd seen from Coach Snyder that it was a chance to be part of something on its way," Wright said. "I saw that all it was going to be was an improvement."

Wright said kickers take some kidding from their teammates for the nature of their position.

"All of us get heckled just because you're a kicker and you're not out there banging around like everyone else," Wright said. "But it's all good-natured, and for the most part, we're treated like anyone else because we're here for the same reason everyone else is."

Wright looks forward to his chance to prove himself, but knows that's just one more part of the waiting game of placekicking. In the meantime, he is enjoying being just another freshman on a team coming off a season-opening victory.

Wathan receives new contract

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — John Wathan, whose team was a preseason favorite in the American League West, but lost its ninth straight game Tuesday night, was rehired Wednesday as manager of the Kansas City Royals.

"I feel like I've been accepted back into the family for another year," said Wathan, 40, who has been with the Royals' organization since he was 21.

General Manager John Schuerholz said during a news conference that Wathan had signed a one-year contract through 1991.

"With what's happened this year, I don't think I deserve a multi-year contract," Wathan said with a smile.

The nine-game losing skid is two short of the franchise record. It plunged the Royals to 66-76, sixth place in a division which they expected to win after huge investments in free-agent pitchers Mark Davis and Storm Davis inflated their payroll to the highest in the major leagues.

But Mark Davis, the 1989 National League Cy Young winner, has been ineffective from the beginning. Storm Davis, who pitched in relief Tuesday night, is 7-10 with a 4.74 ERA. Mark Davis lost his job as bullpen stopper at midseason and is now 1-7 with a 5.96 ERA and only five saves.

In addition, crippling injuries to such important players as pitchers Mark Gubicza and Bret Saberhagen and off-years by others helped doom the season and lead to speculation that Wathan was through.

"We know circumstances around this year have been rather bizarre," Schuerholz said. "We do not believe those circumstances reflect on John's ability to manage the Kansas City Royals. This is the same man who managed 92 wins last year."

Schuerholz said Wathan's coaching staff would be evaluated at the end of the season.

"It's been a frustrating year for all of us," Wathan said. "I feel particularly bad for Mr. (Ewing) Kauffman after the commitment that was made to improve our club."

Coyle continues comeback

Fall from atop bunk bed temporary setback for golfer

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

Theresa Coyle will never forget the day during her freshman season that turned her college golf career upside down.

"It was March 2, and I remember it all too well," said Coyle, now a junior for the Wildcats. "From the beginning of November until that day, I spent an average of two hours a day at Brandeberry (Sports Complex) hitting balls. Coach (Russ) Bunker had practically reconstructed my golf swing, and I was hitting the ball better than I ever had before."

Then disaster struck.

"That night, I was studying for a test and fell out of my bunk bed. I sprained my wrist, and we were supposed to leave the next week for a spring break tournament in Florida."

Instead, Coyle spent the following week recuperating at her home in Omaha. The hard work appeared to be in vain.

"It was such a downer," Coyle said. "I took the doctor's test results to Coach Bunker that night. He just stared at them and couldn't say anything. I couldn't either."

Coyle made a comeback attempt later that year, but the wrist was too weak. Her sophomore season produced more negative results, and Coyle figured her golf scholarship was in jeopardy.

"I remember stepping up to the first tee on my final 18 holes at the Big Eight Tournament last year thinking, 'This is it,'" Coyle said. "We played 27 that day, and my first nine were awful. It very easily could have been the end of the line."

But Coyle responded with a season-best 81 on the Alvamar Golf Club course in Lawrence and an ensuing discussion in the clubhouse with Bunker assured her there would be a 1990 season.

"He told me that because of my effort, and because of the hard work, he couldn't take it away," Coyle said. "Even though the scores weren't all that great, and I had really struggled, the hard work was what kept me around."

The comeback showed signs of completion last weekend at the Cyclone Classic in Ames, Iowa. Coyle, playing in the No. 4 position on the team, posted a career-best 12th place finish with a 36-hole total of 165. Her score, combined with a fifth-place finish from junior Adena Hagedorn, helped K-State place fifth in the 10-team event.

"I was really pleased with Theresa's play," Bunker said.

"It definitely went a lot better than I had expected," Coyle said. "I managed to stay focused pretty well throughout the tournament. It was just a matter of getting out there and keeping it rolling."

Coyle's only problems came on the greens, where she three-putted seven times during the tournament.

"That's always been my biggest weakness," Coyle said. "A couple of my three-putts came on 50-footers, and some of the others were just a result of adrenaline flowing. Otherwise, I felt like my irons were solid, and I knew what I could do with my woods."

Bunker said that Coyle is playing a supporting role to Hagedorn, Chris Adams and Valerie Hahn, but is pushing them for a higher spot on the team.

"She knows what her role on this team is, and I think she's comfortable with it," Bunker said. "I believe she'll be the missing link to our success."

Lewis back with Chiefs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Albert Lewis, the three-time All-Pro cornerback for the Kansas City Chiefs, ended his 51-day holdout Tuesday and worked out with the team Wednesday.

Lewis, along with All-Pro cornerback Kevin Ross, did not report to training camp and missed the entire preseason schedule. Ross signed one week before the Chiefs' opening game Sunday against the Minnesota Vikings and played every defensive snap.

"It is our opinion (Albert Lewis) has never left us," said Carl Peterson, the president and general manager of the Chiefs at a press conference Tuesday. "He's been a very valuable part and member of this football team for many years and we are very pleased that he is rejoining us at this time."

Maryland coach gets probation

SILVER SPRING, Md. (AP) — Maryland basketball coach Gary Williams has been given one year's unsupervised probation after pleading guilty to driving under the influence of alcohol.

Williams, 45, was arrested May 13 on the inner loop of the Capital Beltway after returning from a late dinner. Tested following his arrest, Williams had a blood alcohol level of .11 He also was charged with driving in more than one lane.

A Montgomery County District judge fined Williams $250 at Tuesday's sentencing. Williams was given probation before judgement which means his record will be wiped clean after he completes an alcohol education program.

'Team' key word in vocabulary of 'Cat spiker

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

K-State volleyball player Julie James has been making a name for herself early in the season by taking advantage of the team's new offensive system.

Last year, the sophomore gained a lot of experience while filling in for injured Lynda Harshbarger. She registered 82 kills in the last 10 matches and has taken up where she left off.

"I don't think that I'm making an impact. I think our team as a whole is making an impact," James said. "The system is working out really well, and it just opens up a lot (of opportunities) for individual players.

"Right now, we've only had a few of games, and they happen to be good ones. Who knows how it'll turn out in three more games?"

Through the first five matches, James has risen within the Big Eight Conference to lead in service aces.

The outside hitter's .369 percentage in hitting efficiency ranks second in the conference, and her average of 3.71 kills per game is good for third in the Big Eight.

"I think Julie's doing a nice job," Coach Scott Nelson said. "She's obviously well-focused. Serving is probably the most individual skill. I wasn't aware she is leading the league, so she has a pretty good focus on that aspect of her game as well."

If the first weekend of competition is an indication of the rest of the season, James should have no trouble keeping her place among other Big Eight players.

The Houston native tied the four-game kill record — 25 — in the second match of the season against Drake. The original mark was set in 1987 by former K-State star Shawnee Call.

"I don't know if it was the best I've played," James said. "It was an on game, but it was (that way) for all of us. The reason why I think I got so many kills is because the team worked so well together. We were all on, and the excitement and enthusiasm just got us up."

James, a four-year starter at Bellaire Episcopal High, gained all-league and all-Texas Association of Private Schools honors.

"I played for a private school, and they recruited from outside," James said. "So we had a really good volleyball team, and everybody on the team was recruited for Division I schools. It wasn't like I was the high school star.

"A lot of (the K-State players) come from small towns and they're the high school star, but I'm use to being part of a team, and everybody's equal. That's what I feel this team is, and I feel really comfortable (with it)."

James said that the 1990 team is fairly close and that a feeling of caring is one of the things that drew her to K-State in the first place.

"This year we're so close. We may be younger, but we are a lot closer, I think," James said. "It feels more comfortable. I had a few (colleges) recruit me. I only went on two visits because I narrowed it down before my visits," she said. "K-State was one of them, and Texas Tech was the other.

"When I came up here on a recruiting trip, I loved the girls. The girls were really great," James said. "When I talked to Scott, he is really knowledgeable about the sport of volleyball, and I thought I could gain a lot from his knowledge, which has happened, I think."

Volleyball hasn't always come easy for James, though, but with hard work and help from friends, she says, the sport caught on.

"When I was in junior high, I didn't make the team," James said. "The summer before ninth grade, I practiced and practiced, and I finally made the varsity team. That's when I really started enjoying (volleyball) and really thought it was for me.

"My sophomore year, I started in Junior Olympic play, and I had a really good coach. It was a really good experience, so that's when I decided (volleyball is) what I wanted to do," she said.

With the season underway and James riding the first crest of offensive success, she keeps the rest of the season in focus.

"I really haven't set a lot of personal goals," James said. "I don't think that would be fair to ask that of myself, with the older players and the competition in the Big Eight.

"I'm afraid that I might be disappointed, because once I set a goal, I like to reach it, and if I set a goal saying, 'I want to be (all-Big Eight),' I might get disappointed if I didn't reach it by this year.

"I just want the team to do well," she said. "I want us to be able to go to the final four, not worry about winning or losing."

Jerusalem B virus attacks computer system

Students advised to make backup discs

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

Computers in the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering have been infected by a virus.

Phillip Buckland Jr., engineer in electrical and computer-engineering computer services, said Dwight Gordon, assistant professor electrical and computer engineering, was notified about the virus first.

"He told me that the virus was there for two to 10 days," Buckland said.

Gordon said one of the students noticed a problem over the weekend with one of the software packages.

"After the student ran it for a number of times, the computer finally gave him an error which was not in the memory of the program," Gordon said.

He said the virus is known as Jerusalem B.

"Typically, a virus is named with a geographic name after the place it was first discovered," Gordon said.

He said that a student over the summer using a computer somewhere in the department possibly ran a program that had this virus on it and then transferred it from his disk.

"What this specific virus does is that it makes your files to blow up, so that they get larger and larger until they run out either of disk space or memory," Gordon said.

He said now they have cleaned it off the systems and brought in back-up software.

He said this was the first time a virus infected the department's computer system.

Gordon, a new faculty member, was surprised the department has never had a virus, he said.

"It usually becomes a normal," he said. "I came here from Lehigh University, which got hit a month after I left there. It took out all of the public-access Zenith machines within a period of two weeks," he said.

K-STATE UNION GALLERY
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY
Organized and Sponsored by the Department of Art, U.P.C. and the Mid-America Arts Alliance
September 10-21

An exhibition of 80 photographs Lincoln Highway; Main Street Across America. This exhibition of black and white prints depicts old gas stations, cafes, roadside views and bridges along this 3300-mile road, between New York City and San Francisco.

The photographs are accompanied by quotes from motorists who traveled the first transcontinental highway years ago, as well as excerpts from colorful signs, which dotted the road. Established in 1913, The Lincoln Highway ran through Philadelphia, Canton, Ohio and Fort Wayne, Ind. Bypassing Chicago, the road then continued west through Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming.

Artist displays paintings of scenic Kansas beauty

By Rebecca Sack
Collegian Reviewer

Judy Love illuminates the beauty of northeast Kansas with her show "of the prairie," on display until Oct. 5 at the Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz.

Love's works are enriched by an obvious pride in the landscapes she sees every day. Her knowledge of the land gives the paintings an essential edge — transforming them from mere wheat fields and clouds to a familiar and home-like reminder: beauty isn't far away in the Colorado Rockies or the Ozarks of Missouri. It is all around us, just a few feet beyond the highway pavement.

Love's pastel technique creates landscapes which look much more like paintings than drawings. Many of her works are abstractions of landscapes in which only the light of the sun or the color of the grass is in focus. Love shows us more of the feeling of the scene than the actual image.

Love uses color to her advantage, even when portraying such drab scenes as a burned field. Her blues are electrifying and nearly three-dimensional in many of the works. "Later that night" pictures real shadows in front of a vivid periwinkle sky.

Full clouds are enlivened with the blue underneath them, a reflection of the dark green "Riverbottom in the Spring." We see this same effect in "Reflections," with black and deep blue mysticizing the late dusk.

Love manages to maintain a softness and an appealing warmth in nearly all of her works, even with strong contrasts and the play of light and shadow. Differing perceptions draw the viewer into the painting as a tiny speck within a gigantic world — or rest the onlooker's elbows on a fantastical window sill overlooking her Kansas splendor.

Each of the paintings deserves at least two looks — one from a distance, and one close enough to set off the buzzers in a larger museum. At either perspective, they have different effects.

The most exciting effect Love achieves is with the work titled, "Summer in Kansas." The painting actually convinces the viewer that it is possible to see this scene, near Zeandale at a motionless 55 mph, while standing still in a gallery. The landscape is whizzing by within its frame, captured by the artist yet still free to be more than a highway scene — to be an expression of feeling.

The best of the best was a four-part painting of a sunset scene. This work covers the entire wall and is as overwhelming as it is beautiful. Judy Love may be receiving job offers from the Kansas Department of Tourism for this one, titled "Ah! Kansas." And if you ignore the fact that this is a tourism slogan, these two words can sum up this show.

Love expresses for us the intimacy and emotion we share with our own locality.

City gives campus fire coverage

Rescue services provided by Manhattan since 1983 contract

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Fire Department has provided fire protection and rescue services for campus facilities since 1983 when it signed an agreement with the City of Manhattan.

Prior to this agreement, K-State employed a part-time fire chief and had a staff of volunteer firefighters with student help at night. The University also had a fire truck which was a model from the 1930's, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

The Manhattan Fire Department is now responsible for fighting fires on campus.

"Most of the fires are in dumpsters where someone throws a lighted cigarette," Lambert said.

But not all fires are in dumpsters. Last week, a call came in about a car on fire on campus.

"I'd say we report to calls on campus about 90 to 100 times a year on the average, but it fluctuates from year to year," Manhattan fire chief Bill Smith said.

"We have a lot of false alarms," Lambert said.

These false alarms are due to insects getting in the alarms or sometimes a light will burn out and give off smoke, he said.

"The lights burning out has never caused a fire yet, but that's not to say it couldn't," Lambert said.

The fire department, however, is not responsible for fire safety. The state fire marshal's office takes care of the fire-safety inspections at the University because it is on state property, Smith said.

Building codes have changed since many of the buildings on K-State property were built, making these buildings below standard for fire safety, Lambert said.

"We've been putting alarms in four or five buildings each year for the past several years. We have also installed exit signs and emergency lighting in some buildings," Lambert said.

The University pays one yearly fee regardless of the number of times the fire department is called to campus. Increases in the fee are based on salary increases for the firefighters, Smith said.

Mall supports University football by playing host to town festivities

Dancing, music planned activities

By Tammy Rose
Collegian Reporter

Purple Power Play on Poyntz will help support K-State football today at 6:30 p.m.

The event at the Manhattan Town Center and the 300 block of Poyntz Avenue is part of an effort by the mall and other sponsors to show support for the University and the football team.

Kathleen Adams, advertising/marketing director for the mall, said the mall "is part of the community, and the University is very important to us, and we just wanted to show our support."

Other sponsors include Manhattan Main Street, KQLA FM, Portraits by LBJ and K-State Travel.

The evening begins with a barbecue at 6:30 p.m., sponsored by Manhattan Main Street. Willie the Wildcat will pose for free pictures taken by Portraits by LBJ. The Manhattan Pops Choir will perform on stage from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

The K-State football team, coaches and cheerleaders will lead a pep rally at 7:45 p.m.

An area band, the Moving Van Goghs, will top off the evening with a street dance from 8 to 10:30 p.m. Two breaks will be taken during the dance to give away prizes.

The first prize is a trip to the Northern Illinois football game on Saturday, Sept. 22. The prize includes airfare, hotel accommodations and game tickets.

Cash, gift certificates and discount coupons totaling $3,000 will also be given away at the Town Center Plaza. The gift certificates and coupons will feature downtown and mall merchants.

The Manhattan Town Center approached the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics about the event, Adams said.

"The University gets the additional exposure, and it's great to have everyone from the community out here showing their support," she said.

Steve Miller, K-State athletic director, said he is pleased that the community is doing activities for the athletic department.

"Their support is needed and appreciated in our efforts to turn the football program around. We are very excited about their efforts in our behalf," Miller said.

He said he would like to continue activities like this as a tradition at the University.

Hubbard Foundation funds math program

By The Collegian Staff

The Hubbard Foundation of Smith Center is funding a $150,000 math program through the College of Education.

"The basic interest of this program is to start a interschool competition in mathematics," said Michael Holen, associate dean of education.

Holen said the program will center on mathematical processes and not problems.

"A student has to understand mathematics versus how to work mathematics," Holen said.

The College of Education approached the Hubbard Foundation a year ago with the concept, Holen said. The Hubbards are native Kansans and have donated nearly $900,000 to five Kansas colleges and junior colleges since 1989.

Holen said the program is funded over three years and plans to develop the program so it will be self-supporting. The College of Education hopes to eventually include 15 schools throughout the state in the program, he said.

John Dalida, assistant professor of secondary mathematics education, said the competition is designed not only for the most gifted student, but

K-State attracts national scholars

By Kimis Timotheadis
Staff Reporter

A record number of National Merit Scholars enrolled in K-State's freshman class this semester.

President Jon Wefald said all of the scholars are from Kansas.

"They come from the rural areas and the urban areas of the state," Wefald said.

He said that this is a part of the commitment he made to quality education in 1986 and that K-State has turned from being a "brain-drain" into a "brain-gain."

K-State is among the top 1 percent of all public and private universities in producing Rhodes Scholars.

"We attract good students, but we also produce good students," Wefald said.

Wefald said people nationally, not just regionally, know about K-State.

"Students choose K-State because we work hard, and we have an excellent program of enrollment management," Wefald said.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional and dean of student life, said this year K-State had an all-time record number of National Merit Scholars.

"This year, there were 158 National Merit semifinalists from the state of Kansas," Bosco said. "Ninety percent, approximately, of the semifinalists each year go on to become finalists. We are really pleased that 31 of the finalists from the state of Kansas enrolled at K-State."

Bosco said typically the majority of National Merit Scholars are in arts and science and engineering, but basically they represent all colleges.

He said in addition to these scholars, seven semifinalists from Kansas and two National Merit Hispanic award winners enrolled in the fall 1990 freshman class.

This is the second consecutive year two National Merit Hispanic award winners enrolled at K-State, Bosco said.

All these categories of students receive presidential scholarships, he said.

Prior to fall 1986, KSU was attracting about a dozen National Merit Scholars, but since 1986 K-State has been averaging about 27, Bosco said.

"When President Wefald began initiating the enrollment management program, it was based upon attracting quality students from the state of Kansas," Bosco said. "He made this to secure scholarship dollars from the KSU Fundation to specifically target National Merit Scholars.

"It was a direct response to the Legislature's concern about National Merit Scholars leaving the state to go to school," he said.

He said the uniqueness of this program is that it is just for Kansas.

"There are more students who graduate from Kansas high schools and who directly come to K-State than any other school in Kansas," Bosco said.

UPC increases student awareness of outdoors

By Jenifer Scheibler
Collegian Reporter

Students walking through the Union Plaza area north of the K-State Union Wednesday were confronted with a sailboat sitting on the grass, live animals and tents scattered across the lawn.

It was part of Outdoor Awareness Day sponsored by the Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee. From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., K-State students could see the options available for outdoor recreation and become more aware of the outdoors.

Stan Winter, program advisor, said having Outdoor Awareness Day outside the Union exposed many people to the organizations.

"On a Wednesday when school is in session, there are so many people who walk by that area," Winter said. "It is heavily trafficked, especially between the hours of 10 and 3."

> "Our goal is for people to get involved in something new that maybe they haven't done before.
> —Tim Rice
> UPC Outdoor Recreation Committee member

George Rieck, senior in agronomy, and Tim Rice, senior in mechanical engineering, two members of the UPC Outdoor Recreation Committee, were promoting Outdoor Recreation's trips.

"Our goal is for people to get involved in something new that maybe they haven't done before," Rice said. "You don't have to be experienced at the activity to go on the trip."

Rieck said that the trips for this semester have been successful in the past.

"The trips are cost-efficient and often fill up fast," Rieck said.

In another tent, Project Release Wildlife Rehabilitation Center and Sunset Zoological Park displayed small live animals.

"The animals bring lots of people over to our table," said Kelli Johnsen, junior in preveterinary medicine.

To promote bicycle safety, the K-State Police sponsored a bike inspection and registration.

James Woodruff, campus patrol officer, said he encourages bike owners to register their bikes with the campus police in case of theft.

"We can match stolen bikes with serial numbers that have been registered with the department," Woodruff said. "We share our bike information with the Riley County Police so there is more of a chance of finding a stolen bike."

Mike Welchhans/Staff

Roger Wallace, a representative from the Sunset Zoo, and Beverly Loseke, junior in physics and a zoo employee, display animals from the zoo at Wednesday's UPC Outdoor Awareness Day at Union Plaza. Wallace is holding Sally, an owl hawk, and Loseke is wrapped up by Maxine, a boa constrictor.

problem we had was the first person to stay here in October of 1985 had no hot water or television and the air conditioner was shot. So it didn't turn out the best."

Brockman said that the sponsoring college appoints a host for each of their guests but that she enjoys taking care of them.

"Every one has a keeper that takes care of them and is responsible for them, but I also entertain them and cook for them." Brockman said. "I like to spend as much time with the guests as I possibly can."

Brockman said the guests seem to appreciate her efforts to make them feel at home. A mathematician from Moscow who had visited Yale and Harvard told Brockman that her house was the nicest that he had stayed in, she said.

"We are very appreciative having a service this close to campus." said Provost James Coffman. "It really helps departments that are on a thin budget, and it is a very nice place to stay. It would be very hard to duplicate."

Dickey

"The restaurant is doing real well. I enjoy meeting people, and I am still amazed at the number of people that want to meet me," Dickey said. "(Signing autographs) is certainly never a bother to me, and it is not a big ego thing to me."

Dickey played his 15-year stint in the NFL with the Green Bay Packers and the Houston Oilers. He said that after 15 years, he was ready to retire from the sport that he loves so much.

"Physically, I just could not handle doing it anymore. I always said when I retired that I wanted to walk away from it for good," he said. "I thought it was almost like stealing, how many people are able to do something that they love and get paid well for doing it."

Heading onto the field on Sunday afternoons in front of 60,000 screaming fans is like a pipe dream that could hardly be put in perspective, said Dickey.

Dickey, however, has one memory that sticks out as the definition of football.

Dickey said it was before a playoff game against St. Louis in January 1983. The game was in Green Bay and the temperature was about 17 degrees.

"We went out to warm up in our T-shirts, and I was psyched for the game. It doesn't get more exciting than that," he said. "When you think of football, a situation like this always comes to mind."

Along with the excitement associated with pro sports, Dickey said some of his most fond memories were from his days at K-State, when K-State was able to beat Oklahoma and Nebraska.

"In 1970, we played OU at Norman and beat them 19-14 in the last minute. We had beat them so bad the year before in Manhattan, but it was more fun to beat them at their place," Dickey said. "My sophomore year, we beat Nebraska in Lincoln 17-0, and that was also exciting."

also for all ability levels.

He said he hopes to change the view of mathematics. Instead of looking at problems, the students will look at solutions.

Dalida said the problems will simulate the real world by starting with specific resources to reach a goal.

The program is divided into team and individual competitions. Dalida said that five students form one team and that students must be sponsored by a school.

The first competition, The Hubbard Gaming and Math Project, is tentatively set for Oct. 20. It will focus on equations and is targeted for middle school students.

Dalida said he eventually hopes to include fifth through twelfth graders.

"If the firefighters' wages are increased by 5 percent, then the price of the contract increases by 5 percent. I believe that amount is about $90,000 a year now," Smith said.

In the agreement between the City of Manhattan and K-State, the city is allowed to lease University real estate at the corner of Denison and Kimball Avenues where the fire station is, Smith said. The agreement also gives the fire chief the authority to evacuate buildings if it is felt to be necessary for public safety.

Reserves deployed

By The Associated Press

GREAT BEND — Instead of discussing the Persian Gulf crisis with his sixth-grade social studies students Friday, Dave McLeland will be at Fort Riley preparing for possible deployment to the Middle East region.

The 41-year-old schoolteacher and Army reservist reported for active duty Wednesday.

Monday, he read over a Weekly Reader magazine that discussed Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and the United States' response. He planned to use it in class Friday. Late Monday night he got his activation call from the Army.

Members of McLeland's cross-country team at Hoisington Middle School said they thought he acted strange at Tuesday afternoon's practice. He talked to them about goals and how to achieve them.

After practice, he said goodbye.

"I bawled. I really cried," said senior Jennifer Clark. "You hear of people being called up, but you didn't think it could ever happen, at least not to our coach."

McLeland spent Wednesday as Staff Sgt. McLeland preparing the 13th Quartermaster Detachment for movement from Great Bend to Fort Riley. He will travel north Friday with an advance party. The rest of the men will convoy to the Army installation near Junction City Sunday.

A reservist for 21 years, 16 in Great Bend, McLeland knew it was possible he might be activated. He expects to be gone 90 to 180 days. Three 89th U.S. Army Reserve units have been placed on alert in Kansas and Nebraska, but the Great Bend detachment is the first to be fully mobilized.

McLeland said he and the other men in the detachment are handling the move to active status well.

"I think everybody's a little apprehensive," he said. "But in their minds they know they have the training, and if the Department of the Army says it needs us, then we want to go and do the best job we're capable of doing."

Alcohol resolution fails in Senate by 2 votes

By Gregory A. Branson
Government/City Editor

A resolution recommending alcohol be allowed in the parking lot at KSU Stadium failed Thursday night in Student Senate.

After 45 minutes of debate, Senate voted 22-24 against the resolution with one abstention.

When the resolution was introduced last week, it included a set of guidelines that were intended to promote responsible drinking. This section was dropped from the resolution.

Joel Gruenke, graduate senator, said the original purpose of the resolution was to stop the unfair policy of alumni being allowed to drink in the west side of the stadium parking lot and in the Legends Room in Bramlage Coliseum.

"If you want equality in the Legends Room, then let's move legislation that says students should be allowed in there, too," Gruenke said. "Or better yet, let's move legislation that students and alumni should be treated equally in terms of alcohol and beer."

Derek Nelson, senate intern, said if the legislation passed, then there would be an unfair policy towards the alumni.

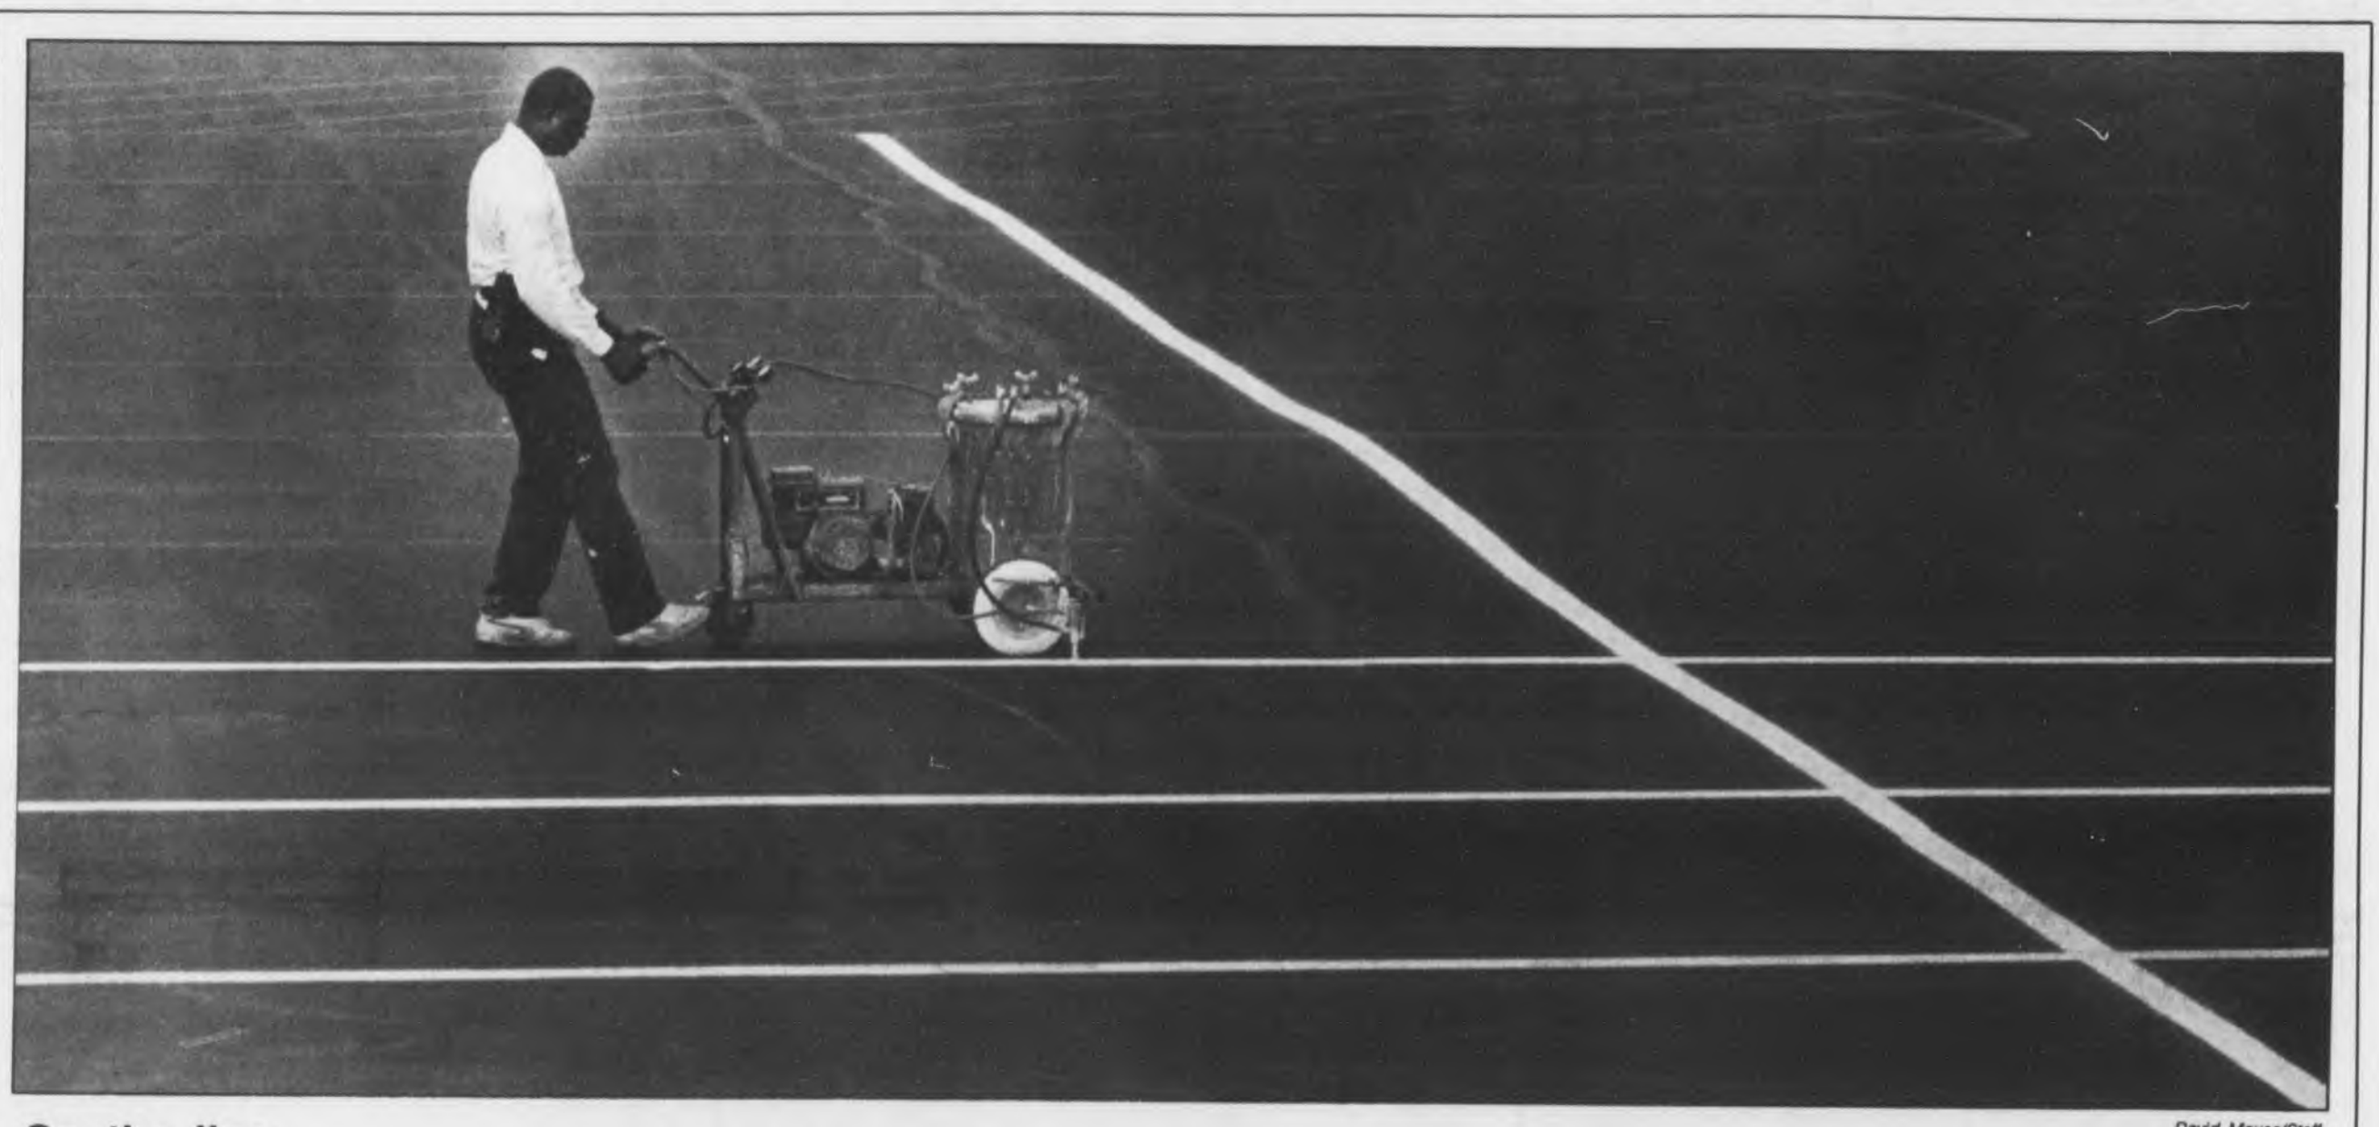
The resolution, he said, favors creating an area for the students to drink but makes no provisions for a place for alumni to drink.

Becky Brown, business senator, said she thinks the current policy is already unfair and the resolution would even the gap.

"Alumni don't have a parking lot," she said, "but they do have a lovely grassy catered area where they can throw parties."

Dwayne Lively, graduate senator, said the problem was enforcement. He said a resolution directed toward the police who patrol the parking lots during the game asking them to enforce the current policy of having no alcohol in the parking lot could be more effective.

As an alternative, he said, perhaps Senate should just legalize alcohol in the whole parking lot.



Lively and Julie Dibble, arts and sciences senator, both said they thought it would be a bad policy to be promoting the "I'm Driving" program while at the same time promoting drinking in a parking lot.

"It's almost hypocritical," Dibble said.

Phil Anderson, faculty representive, said he hadn't made up his mind on the issue. He pointed out that a law was not being enforced and President Jon Wefald was not taking action.

"What the president is doing is the smartest thing possible and ignoring it," Anderson said.

He suggested Senate could use the resolution as a bargaining chip to ask the president to even up the enforcement of the current policy. Anderson said a policy should be enacted that would ease off student enforcement unless a group gets out of hand.

Proposed engineering fee may go to Student Senate

By Stacey Harbison
Collegian Reporter

After two years of discussions and disagreements, a proposed engineering fee is now in the Kansas Board of Regents' hands for a final decision.

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said he believes that an engineering fee is the only realistic way to solve the college's financial problems while maintaining its academic reputation.

"It has just taken time to educate the regents and the students and everyone to our need," Rathbone said. "We had to make a case, and it takes time to do that."

If a fee is passed and enacted, students will face paying the fee on one of two options.

The fee will either be a set amount for the semester, or the fee could be a set amount for each engineering credit hour taken by a student. If set on a semester basis, the fee would only affect engineering students. But if set by the credit hour, the fee would cost any student enrolled in an engineering class.

"Almost all of our courses are taken by just engineering students, so there wouldn't be much variation (in the amount of money collected)," Rathbone said.

He said the fee would go to pay for the technical equipment in the College of Engineering, which is computer-oriented. Obtaining and maintaining the equipment is expensive, Rathbone said, because equipment becomes outdated quickly.

One reason the college is seeking the fee is that the department may be in danger of losing accreditation, Rathbone said. He said he is concerned that it may take 10 to 20 years to recover if accreditation is lost.

Rathbone also said he felt a strong commitment to providing a quality

Johnson: Students must demand voice in changes

By Jan Puls
Staff Reporter

Student Body President Todd Johnson listed continued support for a library addition as a top priority for students during a State of the University address Thursday.

"We must demand action, or we'll get absolutely no action," Johnson said. "People have realized that the library needs more money, and the library needs an addition.

"The people who can make these things happen have realized students and many others are willing to do what it takes to bring these goals to reality," he said.

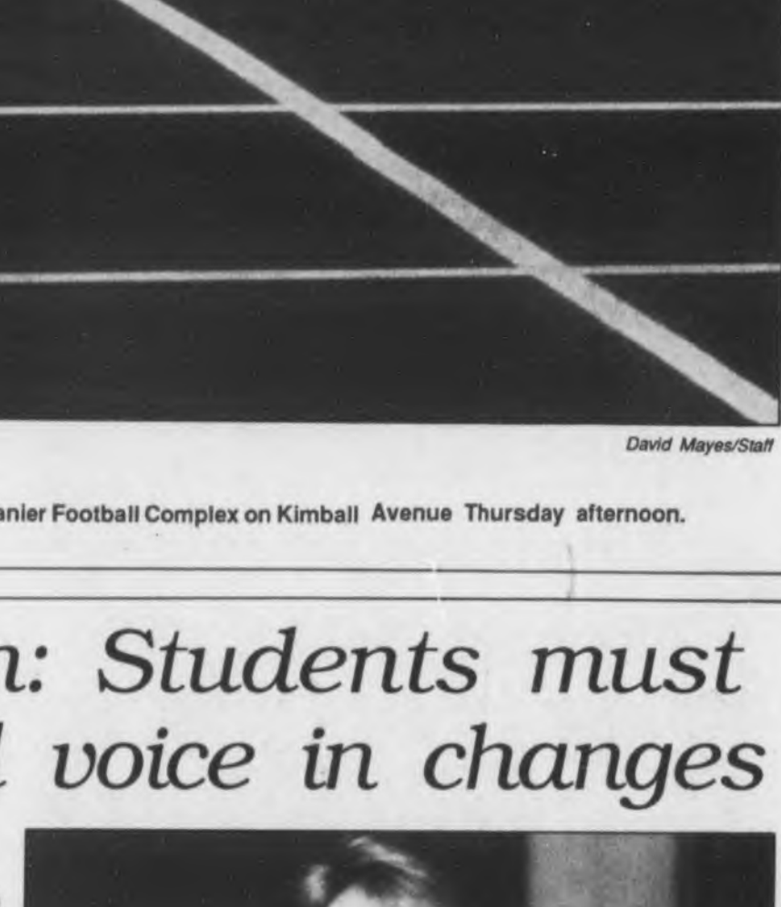
This spring the library was placed on the University's five-year capital improvement plan. A consultant approved by Board of Regents has met with students to plan a library addition, Johnson said.

"For the first time, a library addition is in sight," he said. "The consultant is the librarian from the Massachusetts Institute Technology and has planned over 200 libraries. He knows what he's talking about, and he knows K-State needs an addition."

Johnson spoke against the proposed engineering fee scheduled to come up for approval by the regents in November or December.

"My objection to this fee stems partly from observing what happened at Colorado State University last year," Johnson said.

CSU implemented a $100 per semester engineering fee last fall. This semester restricted fees were added to five of their eight colleges.



"The only reason the engineering fee is not currently accompanied by other fees is that the others aren't as politically popular right now," he said. "The engineering fee is seen as a way to set a precedent. That's the way it has worked on other campuses."

Johnson said the student body presidents of all the regents' schools are unanimously against restricted academic fees.

The University began this year with about $5 million less than anticipated, Johnson said. The deficit was caused by state cuts in the enrollment adjustment, Margin of Excellence and across-the-board budget reductions. The existing budget will not fund programs developed through strategic planning.

"We are embarking on the tedious and challenging process of deciding which programs to discontinue and/or consolidate," Johnson said. "Student input in this process is critical. It will be

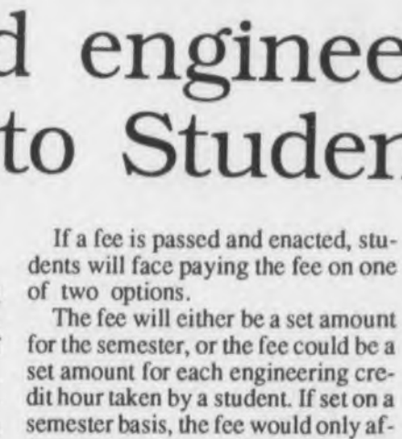
Possession penalty increases

City raises fines to comply with law

By Kelly Berg
Staff Reporter

Fines for a minor possessing alcohol in Manhattan rose from $25 to $100 Tuesday.



"The state fine has always been $100," said Teresa Christians, city prosecutor. "It's the county or city fine that has changed."

The 1990 Legislature amended the Kansas statute so the minimum city or county fine cannot be less than the minimum state fine, said Bernie Norwood, legal assistant for Alcoholic Beverage Control.

To pass an ordinance in Manhattan, Christians said, the ordinance first has to be written, then read at two separate city commission meetings. Finally, it must be published in the city paper to make it official.

The ordinance was published in Tuesday's Manhattan Mercury.

Norwood said minor in possession is a class C misdemeanor and has a minimum fine of $100, but there's a cap of $500 for individuals less than 18 years old.

Source: Manhattan Municipal Court Records

An alcoholic liquor is a beverage with a greater alcohol content than 3.2-percent cereal malt beverages.

Christians said people 18-to-21 years old who are caught possessing an alcoholic liquor are not only fined $100, but could be ordered to get an alcohol evaluation from a local mental health center, which could cost an additional $100.

"We don't usually make them go to Alcohol and Drug Information School unless we think they have a real alcohol problem, or if they are repeat offenders," said Gabrielle Thompson, assistant county attorney.

If the minor does not get an evaluation, he could be in violation of a court order and found to be in contempt of court and prosecuted, Christians said.

Most minors charged with possession are prosecuted, Thompson said.

"We don't usually do diversions on minors in possession," she said.

A diversion is an agreement between the city or county attorney and the defendant postponing prosecution for a set period of time. In most cases, the charges are dropped at the end of the period if the defendant has not had any other trouble with the law and the original charge will not be put on the defendant's record.

Christians said it wasn't her policy

Swiss army practices studied

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — The Defense Ministry on Thursday launched an inquiry into practices at an army training center after it was revealed that recruits had been forced to eat explosives.

The ministry confirmed newspaper reports that up to 20 young soldiers were taken to hospital earlier this week after swallowing 30 grams of explosives in what was described as a regular initiation ceremony.

One person killed himself and six others attempted suicide during the summer at the same recruit training center in Colombier in western Switzerland.

A ministry spokesman said the army lieutenant at the center of the explosives incident had been suspended.

One of the victims, who was not named, told Swiss radio the "explosives baptism," was a routine part of army life.

The commander of the barracks, Colonel Jean-Pierre Voirol, described the incident as an innocent, allbeit stupid, joke.

Japan pledges increased aid

TOKYO (AP) — Japan will provide an additional $3 billion in aid to international peacekeeping forces in the Persian Gulf and nations suffering from the U.N.-sponsored embargo against Iraq, the government announced Friday.

The Cabinet decision brings Japan's total aid in the gulf crisis to more than $4 billion. Members of the U.S. Congress had complained Japan was not doing more in the crisis, and had not contributed enough in light of its high dependence on Middle East oil.

Misoji Sakamoto, the chief government spokesman, said Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu had telephoned President Bush to notify him of the increase in contribution.

"President Bush expressed deep appreciation and told Kaifu that he will tell his people that Japan is playing an active role in the international effort in the gulf," Sakamoto told reporters.

Sakamoto said Japan would provide $1 billion to the U.S.-led forces deployed in the gulf region in the aftermath of Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of oil-rich Kuwait, in addition to $1 billion already pledged. Together, Iraq and Kuwait possess 20 percent of the world's oil reserves.

Another $2 billion would go to Egypt, Jordan and Turkey to help them overcome setbacks from the economic embargo im-

Couple given joint custody

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Tennessee Court of Appeals on Thursday granted joint custody of seven frozen embryos to a divorced couple, overturning a landmark ruling that had granted custody to the ex-wife.

Charles Clifford, attorney for the ex-husband, fell to his knees at the courthouse on seeing the opinion and said, "All right, thank you. Justice is done."

The intermediate-level appeals court ruled in the divorce case of Junior Lewis Davis of Maryville and his former wife, Mary Sue Davis Stowe, now of Titusville, Fla.

"It would be repugnant and offensive to constitutional principals to order Mary Sue to implant these fertilized ova against her will," Judge Herschel P. Franks wrote for the three-member court.

"It would be equally repugnant to order Junior to bear the psychological, if not the legal, consequences of paternity against his will."

The court ruled that both Stowe and Davis should share an interest in the seven fertilized ova.

Souter refuses abortion talk

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee David Souter firmly refused to discuss his views on abortion Thursday as the Senate Judiciary Committee opened confirmation hearings.

Democrats promised to continue to press for his views on that and other controversial issues.

He told the Senate Judiciary Committee it would be inappropriate for him to discuss such a hotly contested constitutional matter as abortion, though he said he accepted the constitutional right of privacy on which the Supreme Court based its abortion-legalizing 1973 decision, Roe v. Wade.

Souter, the New Hampshire judge who is President Bush's first choice for the nation's highest court, spoke in the crowded Senate hearing room of what he called "the greatest responsibility that any judge in our republic can undertake."

Grissom trial may face delay

OLATHE (AP) — Disputes over DNA genetic evidence might force another delay in the trial of a man accused of killing three young suburban women and somehow disposing of their bodies.

Thursday, Johnson County District Judge William Gray continued a hearing on DNA evidence until Sept. 20 to allow Richard Grissom Jr.'s defense attorneys to decide whether they want to have their own DNA tests performed.

"If it is then suggested that there will be a delay of some magnitude, the court will have to make a decision whether to allow that," Gray said.

Prosecutors have built a mostly circumstantial case alleging that Grissom killed the women, whose bodies remain missing. DNA tests of a blood stain found in a car of one of the women are among the few pieces of physical evidence they have to suggest foul play.

Secretary sentenced to life

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A legal secretary was sentenced to life in prison without parole Thursday by the judge who one day earlier had convicted her of killing her boss and lover.

"Good luck to you," Jackson County Judge Forest W. Hanna told Linda Culbertson during the sentencing.

On Wednesday, he found the 34-year-old secretary guilty of first-degree murder and armed criminal action after a three-day non-jury trial.

Hanna ruled that she fired the third and fatal shotgun blast into the head of Kansas City attorney Donald Pierce. The first two shots were fired by an 18-year-old hit man who didn't have nerve to finish the job, the judge said.

Mayors wish to avoid debate

TOPEKA (AP) — City officials said Thursday they do not believe municipal governments should become embroiled in the abortion debate.

However, one Wichita official said he will push for an ordinance restricting abortion if the Legislature does not come up with a state policy next year.

"I don't imagine the city council would want to get into it," said Kansas City Mayor Joe Steineger.

"It would be a major mess. This approach is going to be a long, drawn-out nightmare," said Shawnee Mayor Bob Best.

The two mayors and other city officials agreed the abortion issue should be decided at the state or federal level.

On Wednesday, Attorney General Bob Stephan released a legal opinion that cities could pass ordinances regulating abortion within their limits.

Minority retention to be campus focus

By Carl Richert
Collegian Reporter

This semester marks the first time K-State has moved to stop the leak of minority students from the University.

"K-State's minority student retention is unacceptably low," said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for personal development.

When asked what the University is doing to improve the situation, Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, said, "We must work harder for a supportive atmosphere and take a pro-active stand for there to be a significant change."

Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs, said the environment, academic preparation and financial assistance are the major areas under revision.

Taylor-Archer said her position is the direct result of a recommendation by the Minority Student Retention Task Force. This task force was appointed in 1988 to research and recommend steps that would increase minority student retention.

Lynch and 18 other appointed members met twice a week for seven months last year to provide a beginning step in addressing this issue. They addressed three categories — academic environment, support services, administrative initiatives and structure.

The recommendations being implemented this fall are as follows:

- Each academic department head is to initiate required staff development activities devoted to the dynamics of cross-racial and cross-ethnic teaching and learning.
- Each college must ensure an effective advising program for minority students.
- Student leaders should reflect the University's commitment to diversity by asking Student Senate to require attendance at a multicultural sensitivity workshop prior to allocating the student activity fee. Additionally, leadership development activities should focus on increasing minority student participation.
- Minority faculty, staff and students should be appointed routinely to the McCain Development Board, the Convocation Committee and Union Program Council.
- The Career Planning and Placement Center should request all on-campus recruiters to ask interviewees about their involvement in multicultural affairs during their tenure as K-State students.
- A monthly multicultural newspaper is to be reinstituted.
- Finally, a new office and full-time position of associate provost should be created to head a University Office of Multicultural Affairs.

CONVOCATION

MICHAEL KAVANAUGH
World Water Crisis: Fact or Fiction?

By The Collegian Staff

Michael Kavanaugh opened the 1990-91 University Convocation Lecture Series by warning that the world water crisis exists not only in the Midwest and Southern California, but on a world-wide scale as well.

Kavanaugh, chairman of the Water Science and Technology Board of the National Research Council, announced that after reviewing the status of the world's water resources, the situation is tragic.

Kavanaugh reported that feature articles, such as those appearing in Time magazine, offer little optimism about the future of a resource without which life would not exist.

Terry Johnson, professor of biology, agrees with Kavanaugh's view on the seriousness of the water crisis.

"There is no question that we are faced with a problem," Johnson said.

He said he believes the Division of Biology is not the only area of the University concerned with the water crisis, citing the College of Agriculture and the Department of Horticulture as examples.

Margaret Clarkin/Staff

Michael Kavanaugh, National Research Council Chairman, delivers the first Convocation Lecture of the semester Thursday morning in McCain Auditorium. Kavanaugh spoke about the world's water crisis.

Traditionally, the water crisis has been thought to be a problem only in the arid parts of the western United States. Kavanaugh said although the West has been hardest hit by the water problem, that region is no longer alone.

The water-poor western region most talked about lies in the central valley of California. There, a continuing drought has entered its fifth year. The future of the water situation in California does not look good, Kavanaugh said. In addition to the drought, contamination from pesticides is entering the ground water at increasing levels.

Kavanaugh said contamination is no longer limited to ground water. The world's oceans and lakes have not escaped human influences. Acidification in the Great Lakes and hospital wastes washing onto East Coast shores are two prime examples.

Kavanaugh explained there are two key dimensions of the water crisis, a quantity dimension and a quality dimension.

In discussing the quantity dimension, the most important factor is the amount of water available for human consumption.

"Of all the water, only 2.6 percent is available for human use," Kavanaugh said. "We won't get any more water than is presently in the biosphere."

He also said although the future is difficult to predict, the water supply ratio is an accurate tool to measure future water tables. This ratio is represented by calculating the number of years it will take for the water demand to exceed 50 percent of the dependable supply. In the case of the United States, this will be occur sometime around the turn of the century.

"The crisis is real, but a crisis represents an opportunity," Kavanaugh said.

EDITORIAL

Censored materials attract greater interest

Dwayne Lively

COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

If they gave out an award for silliness, it would have to go to all recent efforts to censor various materials that various people deem offensive.

Censorship has always seemed very self-defeating to me because it requires publicity. All I've ever seen come out of a censorship attempt is increased interest in the object being censored and the increased public exposure of said object.

Case in point: Cincinnati, the gracious home of WKRP and the Phlegm Building, is still embroiled in a law suit over the photographs of the late Robert Mapplethorpe. The 120 photographs, six of which depicted homoerotica and sado-masochism, are still being paraded around Cincinnati even though the exhibit moved to another city more than four months ago. Jurors, who in order to become jurors couldn't have seen the photos when they were first exhibited, are getting a chance to see them now for free. So are many other people in Cincinnati.

This is ironic when you remember that the whole point of the lawsuit was that the photos were too obscene to be displayed in public.

Censorship groups are also intriguing because they organize to fight the losing battle. I always laugh at groups that distribute copies of obscene photos to their members and tell them that people shouldn't be able to look at them. It reminds me of the bar mentality that some guys get when they're with a friend and one sees a beautiful woman walk by: "Whoa, I'm in love, check her out ... Don't look at her! Oh she's gorgeous, don't look at her. Man, you should see this babe, don't look at her!"

Censorship groups are like this. Look at this photo, don't look at it! Look at this; it's obscene, don't look at it! I can imagine this group of middle-aged and older, stodgy people holding a particularly graphic centerfold out at arms' length, scanning it up and down and saying, "I can't believe anyone would ever look at this."

What's most interesting about the censorship groups is that while they have large numbers, many people who actually see the "obscene" exhibits without any prior prejudicing don't complain too often.

Think back to that Andres Serrano photo "Piss Christ," the one of a crucifix suspended in a tank of urine. That photo was displayed for the better part of a year in a number of places before anyone complained about it.

At last, one 43-year-old man was offended enough to write a letter, describing the photo, to the editor of a local paper. The letter was noticed by a follower of the Rev. Donald Wildmon of the American Family Association who gave it to Wildmon who sent copies to a number of his members, told other members about it and sent copies to every member of Congress, never seeing the irony in his being a distributor of "obscene" photos.

In fact, I'd argue that more people probably saw the photo as a result of his distribution of it than probably would have seen it if a big issue wasn't made of it. Who'd actually ever heard of Andres Serrano before a big deal was made out of him?

I would also argue that Wildmon and the AFA and Tipper Gore and her Parents' Music Resource Center are the largest distributors of pornography and obscene lyrics in the country. In fact, they can usually recite obscene lyrics, word for word from memory, or if they can't, they usually bring along a copy. There's something funny about that.

This isn't just a national phenomenon. It also happens in Manhattan. I haven't heard any of 2 Live Crew's so-called obscene songs since the middle of last semester. In fact, the only person I've heard even mention a 2 Live Crew lyric and the mutilation of female genitals has been a senior staff member of a local campus religious organization.

But I don't believe this issue is about religion. I think censorship stems from a different ideology. If the idea were to keep people from seeing certain pictures or listening to certain comedians, the best way would be to let them go by silently without drawing any attention to them. I believe we eventually outgrow obscene material. Who listens to Sam Kinison anymore? Censorists, or people who advocate censorship, say this is beside the point.

If censorists didn't make a big deal out of them, movies like "The Last Temptation of Christ" would never be seen outside of Los Angeles and New York because not many people go see movies that are almost three hours long. Songs by 2 Live Crew would be relegated to one or two performances on weekends in local bars. They would be sung and forgotten until the next time they were played.

My question is: if no one ever sees a movie or hears a song, does it have an impact on society?

Censorist groups would argue that it does. It doesn't matter that no one would see the works, the very fact a person would produce a sacreligious movie or take homoerotic photos or sing obscene songs demonstrates a problem with society, not with the person, because it is society which allows them to produce it. Censorists therefore want people to see the photos because they want people to get mad about them and take control of freedom of speech and expression.

But why is this control necessary? I think it's because the movies, photos and lyrics shatter the careful, sterile world that censorship groups must have to preserve their image of the world. The fact that people would willingly produce something "obscene" is a direct challenge to the censorists' concept of how the world should be and what constitutes normal. It presents a challenge they can't explain or understand and therefore must snuff out before it exposes them as perhaps being abnormal.

Faith, to a censorist, is not enough. It's the image that's important, and the image that must be preserved. Normal people don't produce or listen to obscene lyrics and a person who was really normal would fight against such abnormal things.

This is the world view that allows censorists to repress certain ideas while maintaining they still live in a free, democratic society. Everyone, they argue, is free to express ideas, but some ideas deserve more freedom than others.

Some ideas should never be expressed, and censorists are going to make sure you know which ones they are. Even if they have to send you copies.

Recycling necessary, not just passing fad

Remember Earth Day?

It was a glorious time when everybody planned to pull together to make the world a cleaner place to live. It seems like only yesterday.

Bookstores had shelves full of books on simple ways to save the Earth. Posters were hung around campus telling us if we weren't recycling, we were throwing it all away. Radio and television stations played public service announcements saying think globally — act locally.

The world seemed like a nicer place then. Peace was in the air. We could look to tomorrow and think there might be a place for us in this crazy old world.

There might have been a tomorrow, but that was yesterday.

Today, it seems Earth Day might have been just footprints in the sand, washed away by a media tide of war, famine, pestilence and death. We've been dwelling so much on the apocalypse we've let paradise go to Hell.

And now those aluminum cans sitting outside in the large plastic bags are really kind of smelly and in the way and would really be a pain in the posterior to take down to the local recycling center.

And those six, 500-pound bins of newsprint saved to protect the rain forests aren't worth the $2.21 you'd get paid for them.

And it doesn't matter anymore whether the styrofoam cup you've picked up at the K-State Union has CFCs or not and is so indestructable it will be here in 10 zillion years when the Earth is but a frozen snowball floating in an endless sea of nothingness. After all, the greenhouse effect is only theory.

It's easy to predict the end of the world. It's easy to say the whole world is plunging further into the depths of the pit.

But it's not so easy to say:

"No. Stop. I'm going to do something to halt the headlong plunge into the abyss." It's tougher to turn around in the face of adversity and say, "Pick that beer can up from the sidewalk and take the seventeen extra steps to the recycling bin."

Activism is a funny thing. No matter the intentions, anyone who stands for something eventually will be painted as a fringe lunatic zealot.

But let's not let those who would live the status quo drag us down to wallow in their private cesspool. They are the fringe lunatics. Let's not remain prisoners of inertia.

Article misleading

Editor,

After reading the article "Jerusalem B virus attacks computer system" in the Sept. 13 Collegian, I feel that it is necessary for me to explain some things regarding that article and the virus we experienced. Had I known that approximately one-third of the article would be direct quotes based on a 10 minute interview Tuesday afternoon, I would have either refused the interview or taken more time to make my answers.

Point 1: To ensure integrity of a computer system, backups should be performed on a regular basis. Once this virus has been detected, do not back up your hard disk until the virus has been removed. Backing up virus-infected software is an invitation to disaster in that a restoration of that infected software will restore the virus as well. Once a virus has been detected, a safe method for removal is to reformat the infected disk and restore from an uninfected backup.

Point 2: The virus that affected the EECE systems infected only executable programs. In order to have infected a student's diskette (from one of our systems that was infected), two things must have taken place. First, the student must have run a virus-infected program on a computer. (The infection was such that just booting our infected computers did this.) Second, the student must have run one of his or her programs on that same computer. An alternate approach for spreading the infected software was by copying an infected program from one of our systems to his or her diskette.

Point 3: I have been teaching at K-State since January 1987. I'm not sure that classifies me as a "new faculty member."

Point 4: The statement that I was surprised by the fact that we had not been infected was a misinterpretation of my statement. I said something to the effect that "a colleague of mine, a new faculty member, was surprised that we had not been previously hit."

Heroism blinding

Editor,

Thank you very much for Jana Leep's article, "Misunderstandings perpetuated by media" (Collegian, Sept. 12).

Finally, there is someone who is not blinded by the "heroism" of the United States in the Gulf Crisis. I hope Leep's article has enlightened others as to what the truth is all about.

People are very much manipulated by media these days, especially when it comes to the United States trying to be the self-elected "hero" in the Gulf Crisis. Sometimes without really seeing the truth, people are quick to blame or misjudge Saddam Hussein, to the point of wanting to "nuke" him and his people. They don't realize that they don't understand or don't want to understand the real situation.

I remembered watching TV a few weeks ago. Someone said the United States is quick to be the "policeman" of the world and then leaves its people back home to cope with the financial losses in order to achieve "world peace." Eventually, he said, this (U.S. intervention in the Gulf Crisis) will only add to the already endless piles of unsolved problems of other countries that will be a burden to the American people.

What is it about the United States that it is so quick to get involved in other nation's problems when it already has enough problems at home (the homeless issue, national debt, etc.)?

We do indeed need to analyze critically why the United States intervened so quickly in the Gulf Crisis. I am not saying Hussein's action of invading Kuwait is good nor am I saying it's good for the United States to intervene in the hope for "world peace" when there is another reason for the intervention. That reason is the United States' own self-interest in economic dominance and their addiction to oil.

Let's hope that, should another crisis happen somewhere outside the United States, that America would not intervene so quickly. And if the United States wants to be a hero, it should be a hero to its own people.

Color not required

Editor,

This letter concerns Heather Anderson's review of the Lincoln Highway Exhibit. To have taken "some art" does not make one an art critic. I am sure I have taken the same cut-and-paste class in the 8th grade that she has taken. However, I believe that she missed an important point. Art need only to contain an aesthetic value and not colorization to be considered art.

I am positive that if this photo exhibit would have been taken in color, they would have still looked like the Flint Hills to Anderson. Thank God they were captioned and thank God she can read.

Results of poll oppose fort

By Angie Schrock
Collegian Reporter

Groups opposed to the expansion of Fort Riley released a favorable poll Thursday, but acknowledged the public does not know much about the issue.

The survey showed 39 percent of the people polled opposed the Army acquiring private land to expand the fort, 29 percent were in favor of the Army acquiring the land and 32 percent were undecided, said Keith Ascher, spokesman for Preserve Kansas: Our Land, Our Lives.

"The undecided people just don't know the issues," said Jay Copeland, president of Preserve Rural America. "I think this shows how the majority across Kansas feels."

A booth is set up at the Kansas State Fair where people can sign petitions against the fort expansion, Copeland said.

"I think we got about 1,000 signatures on the petitions in the first three days of the fair," Copeland said.

About 15,000 signatures have been collected since the signing began.

Fort Riley provides more than 10,000 jobs and an annual benefit estimated at $700 million to the state's economy.

"I realize the fort brings a lot of money into the area, but it doesn't make sense to take productive land and drive tanks over it," said Roger Kohls, senior in animal sciences and Industry.

One of the sections of land Fort Riley is looking at for a possible training ground covers the land farmed by Kohls' family.

"Some of the best grassland in America is there, and once it's used as a training ground, it won't ever be the same. You can just look at their land now and see it," Kohls said.

The groups opposed to the fort expansion are planning to take the signed petitions to gubernatorial candidates Joan Finney and Mike Hayden, Copeland said.

"We want to make a statement to the political powers in office that this is what the people of Kansas want," Copeland said.

Copeland said he hopes this will make the politicians believe more research needs to be done since the majority of the people of Kansas are opposed to the expansion.

Local gospel musicians given awards to study with master

By Lajean Rau
Collegian Reporter

Three African-American Manhattan area men were honored when the Kansas State Historical Society and the Kansas Arts Commission recently announced the 1991 awards for their folk arts apprenticeship program.

Paul Jones, Junction City, and Derwin Sneed, Fort Riley, were chosen to study African-American gospel music with James Boyer, professor of curriculum and American ethnic studies. The grant amounted to $1,267.

The program is designed to provide individuals experienced in a folk art the opportunity to study for one year with a master artist.

"The idea is to pass on things that can't be written down in books," said Joy Harnett, program coordinator for the Kansas Historical Society. "That's not how people traditionally learned gospel music. It's through imitation and exposure to a master artist."

The folk arts apprenticeship program began in 1985 and is funded by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Kansas Art Commission. Grants are awarded on a competitive basis and ranged this year from $200 to $2,710.

This is Boyer's third year to be awarded an apprentice. Two years ago he worked with one apprentice. Last year, he shared his craft with 46 children under the age of 12. Boyer said he is looking forward to working with Sneed and Jones.

"These men are both in their 20s and have college experience," Boyer said. "I think they will be able to embrace the music at a higher level than students I have worked with before."

Boyer, who describes himself as a constant clipper, has been following the development and prevalence of gospel music in the media for many years and has newspaper clippings dating back into the 1950s and 1960s.

He plans to compile all of these bits and pieces into a scrapbook documenting the historical development of gospel music to share with his apprentices.

"Today, everyone reports on gospel music — but in the old days that was not the case," Boyer said. "It was rare even in the black press to see anything about gospel performance."

Boyer will also be drawing from old hymn books and historical documents to select and understand the music. Boyer said many of the songs have never been written down, but have been passed from one generation to the next by oral tradition.

"I am very interested in perpetuating oral culture," he said. "There is something exciting about everything from storytelling to musical expression to simple transmission of an idea in something other than the written word."

The apprentices will work extensively with Boyer, developing tapes of their performances, creating scrapbooks and collecting old hymnbooks and copies of gospel songs. They will also teach the music to younger children. Both Jones and Sneed are fathers of young children.

"This is something I have been looking forward to for a long time," Sneed said. "I've always wanted to know about the history of gospel music.

"It's exciting to me to learn things, like how the songs were passed on orally. Many years back, a lot of these people didn't even know how to read and write," he said.

Boyer said he found out about the apprenticeship program from one of his students and was then contacted by the state folklorist.

Boyer has been involved in gospel music all his life and is currently pastor of a local church where gospel music is practiced regularly. He is also a member of the American Ethnic Studies Program at K-State and hosts two local radio programs of gospel music.

'Cats look for second victory

K-State Wildcats vs. New Mexico State Aggies

Game Time: 1:10 p.m.
Place: KSU Stadium (42,000).
Radio: Wildcat Radio Network (WIBW 580 AM, flagship); Mitch Holthus, Stan Weber, Ben Boyle.
Season Records: K-State 1-0; New Mexico State 0-2.
Series Record: First meeting.
Notes: The Aggies hold the nation's longest Division I-A losing streak — 19 games — dating back to a 42-29 win over Kansas on Oct. 1, 1988 ... The Wildcats will be in their traditional purple home jerseys this weekend. New Mexico State sports new uniforms this year. The road uniform jersey is white, the pants are gray and the helmets are crimson with a script "Aggies" on each side ... In all of the 1989 season, K-State had only 13 plays of 25 or more yards. In the season opener, the Wildcats had five, including two of 50-plus yards.

By Dan Wicker
Sports Reporter

Prior to last Saturday, it had been four seasons since K-State opened the football season with a victory.

Now, the Wildcats take aim at making it two in a row to open the year — for the first time since 1982 — in a contest with New Mexico State at 1:10 p.m. Saturday in KSU Stadium.

New Mexico State, like the 'Cats, has had some trouble getting into the win column. Last year they failed to win a single game, and this year they have not seen a change in that streak. The Aggies have lost their first two games to New Mexico and UTEP.

However, K-State Coach Bill Snyder believes that New Mexico State has consistently showed great improvement throughout their first two matchups and expects even a more-improved team come Saturday.

"I expect an improved football team. They are on the same type of course that Kansas State has been on," Snyder said. "I would anticipate that they would continue to improve. I think that they are going in

Women's golf team to play in Minnesota

By Scott Paske
Sports Reporter

A week of practice after a taste of unexpected success has the K-State women's golf team changing its tune, to Coach Russ Bunker's delight.

"The girls are now hoping for a top-three finish this coming weekend," said Bunker, whose Wildcats travel to the University of Minnesota Saturday and Sunday for the 10-team Minnesota Invitational. "As a coach, I see nothing wrong with a team setting its goals that high. I think they are hungrier now."

K-State finished fifth last weekend at the Cyclone Invitational at Ames, Iowa, reaching a preseason goal for the first meet. But sub-par performances from Chris Adams and Valerie Hahn, and a team lapse on the front nine holes of the final round, left the 'Cats short of exceeding the goal.

K-State's team score of 665 was seven shots behind second-place Northern Illinois.

"They were all hitting range balls right after we got back home," Bunker said. "I think they all knew it could have been even better."

Bunker said improvements could be made this weekend with the help of an easier course layout. The 54-hole event, which includes 36 on Saturday, followed by an 18-hole round Sunday, will be played at the University of Minnesota Golf Course in Minneapolis.

"As a whole, I think this course will be a lot more forgiving for a bad shot than what we saw at Iowa State," Bunker said. "It's a little more wide open, and it suits our style of play, which is a little bit more aggressive than what we were allowed last week."

The 'Cats will send five golfers to Minneapolis, led by junior Adena Hagedorn. Hagedorn finished fifth at the Cyclone Classic.

Theresa Coyle will play in the No. 2 spot after a career-best finish at Ames. Hahn and Adams will play No. 3 and No. 4 respectively, while Denise Pottle will occupy the fifth spot. Pottle won an 18-hole playoff with Julie White Monday to qualify.

Peeler declared ineligible

By The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri's backcourt wealth has gone bust.

School officials ruled Wednesday that Anthony Peeler had not met NCAA rules on academic progress and must sit out the first semester. The Tigers had earlier lost the other half of their projected starting guards when Travis Ford transferred to Kentucky.

Peeler probably would miss about 14 games while he works to get his grades up, but he could play for most of the conference season if he regains eligibility in the second semester.

"He's still going to be in school and progressing toward his degree," Coach Norm Stewart said. "If he takes that and makes it work for himself, then it will be to his advantage and it might be to our advantage as a ballclub when the second semester rolls around. That's the situation, and that's what we've got to deal with."

Peeler, who can practice with the team, is not entitled to his scholarship money while he is ineligible and is paying his own tuition.

"That, I think, shows great commitment on his part," Athletic Director Dick Tamburo said. "I'm really pleased that he is enrolled here."

Peeler averaged 16.8 points and 5.4 rebounds for Missouri last year. He set a school record with 179 assists and led the Tigers with 63 steals.

Spikers to compete in weekend tourney

By Russ Ewy
Sports Reporter

The K-State volleyball squad will travel to Columbus, Ohio, this weekend to compete in the Ohio State Tournament.

The 'Cats will take on the University of Toledo in a Friday evening match before facing Butler and Ohio State on Saturday.

"(Our concentration) is the length of time that we're executing our offense or defense, during the course of a game or a match," Coach Scott Nelson said. "We should see longer periods of time where we stay within the system. If we do happen to lose our focus as a team, we need to be able to get it back relatively quickly.

"We are still in the evaluation and learning phase as a team and as a staff, and are trying to increase our intensity and concentration during the course of the match. That's where I'll be looking more than anywhere else."

The spikers will again be competing against nationally recognized opponents. Ohio State won the Big Ten Conference last year and has been ranked in the top ten this season.

"(Ohio State) has gone 18-0 in the last year and a half at home," Nelson said. "They just came off a road trip where they played the No. 1, 2 and 3 ranked teams in the country.

"They lost all those matches in four games, so they were competing. In each of those matches they had opportunities to go up two games to none, or two games to one, so they're obviously a high-quality team, as well as real tough at home."

According to Nelson, the competition for his squad, now 3-2, doesn't stop there.

"Both (Toledo and Butler) will be relatively similar to opponents we've played this year," Nelson said. "They both run similar offenses, and they have scrappy defensive players.

"The University of Toledo goes to a middle player quite a bit to carry a big load of their offense," Nelson said. "So, again, I think if we play to our strengths, we'll have a good chance to put ourselves in positions to win games, and hopefully the match."

K-State is currently ranked third in the Big Eight Conference in service aces, averaging 1.88 per game, as well as in hitting efficiency, with a .211 percentage.

"It's kind of early in the season. I don't know if you can really look at statistics from the conference and see trends yet or not," Nelson said. "If we play some competition that we walk through, or handle pretty easily, obviously our stats go up everywhere. We get into some matches, which we've done, where the competition is very equal, all of our stats will be lowered.

"To be successful within our system we haven't called to be one of the top blocking teams in the conference," Nelson said. "That's not necessarily the strength of this team. So I wouldn't suspect that we are a leader in that category. However, we should be a fairly good first ball offensive team, and we need to improve our defensive capabilities, like our digging.

"That's something we're working hard on, because we need that to be a strength of this also," Nelson said. "We're not as big as any of the teams in the conference, our net play defensively, especially blocking, will probably not be a dominant aspect of our team.
